Jesus Feeds Five Thousand

Prudence suggested retirement. Weariness demanded it. The retreat would also afford the apostles an opportunity to report more minutely to the Master the experiences of their trail-trip two and two through Galilee from which they had just returned. So the boat which had been chartered for Jesus and "waited upon Him" was employed to put the weary toilers beyond the reach of the multitudes that pressed upon them even at meal-times. Head-winds probably drove the little bark near shore, and retarded its progress. Clandestine as the departure had been, it failed of its purpose. An ever-augmenting throng hurried around the head of the lake, and probably apprised some pilgrim caravans to the passover of the coming of the great Nazarene. So, when Jesus' boat ran its keel upon the pebbly shore, there stood five thousand men, not to mention the women and children. So far from being irritated by this foiling of His plans, Jesus' heart was touched to pity at sight of the shepherdless flock, and He began at once to instruct them in many phases of the doctrine of grace. In the absorbing interest of the theme, neither Teacher nor taught observed how the sun was dipping to the western horizon. But the commissary of the apostolic college suddenly awoke to the situation. Five regiments and no stores on hand, or any other country to forage upon. After some questions on Jesus' part, calculated to test his disciples' faith, but to which they respond with phenomenal obtuseness, He prepares to work what, in some respects, was His most remarkable and significant miracle. The material basis of the miracle was paltry in the extreme.

There is a vivid descriptive touch in the Greek which does not appear in our version. Under Jesus' direction the confused throng was resolved into the order of a Frencee parterre. He had them sit platwise, so that they looked, in their high-colored garments, like vertable flower-beds with green turf intervening. After the cheerful grace, which Jesus never omits, He sends him forth to serve. What He breaks off is large far than that which remains. But that which remains is undiminished. And all are fed and filled. As a lesson in frugality, the unused fragments are ordered to be gathered up. Each hesitating apostle holds in his hands the tangible evidence of the reality and magnitude of the miracle wrought.

The Teacher's Lantern

Lovely evidence is here of the implicit confidence which maintained between Jesus and His apostles. They came to Him. They told Him what they had done, what they had taught. They were sure of His sympathy. If they needed correction, they knew it would be done in love. The eldest disciples have no monopoly, however, of Jesus' sympathy. He is touched with a feeling for us too. We can come to him also; to "tell considerateness which Jesus showed for the health and comfort of His toilers, He still feels for those who in this latter day are engaged in His service. Seasons of respite are indispensable for the highest effectiveness. But apostles nor preachers have a monopoly of Jesus' sympathy. It sweeps out to inclose all sorts and conditions of men. Jesus was as compassionate towards the five thousand as towards the twelve. So His Savior-heart goes out toward the great unchurched masses to-day. Five crackers and two dried herring—talk of feeding five thousand with them! But add to the crackers and fish the almightiness of Christ, and the proposition ceases to be ridiculous. The resources of the Church for spiritual sustenance for the thousand millions of earth are palpably inadequate, until the Savior's power and blessing is added to the equation. Then there is enough and to spare. The heavenliness of this miracle is evident in its orderliness. There was no unseemly scramble, inequality, or waste. All was precision, method, order. Grace at meals is one of the sweetest and most impressive services of family religion. We have Jesus' example for it. Paul could observe it in the midst of a shipwreck, there can scarcely be a domestic emergency which would justify its omission. The spiritual significance of this whole scene is finely set forth in Mary A. Lathbury's noble hymn: "Break Thou the bread of life, dear Lord, to me."

* * * * *

In the great throng which followed Jesus along the shore that day, a boy had gumption enough to tuck a lunch in his sash before starting. When he heard that the Master wanted his little store for some purpose, he gladly gave it up. With the boy's gift Jesus worked one of his greatest miracles.

To this day every young person has some gift or talent which, if brought out of hiding and devoted, can be utilized in a practical and helpful way in the spread of the kingdom of goodness and mercy.

Child-Study and Sunday-School Method

The determined effort now making to put the Sunday-school in more perfect accord with the Science of Teaching bids fair to usher in as new and advanced an epoch as the initiation of the "uniform lessons" in 1872. The theory of education which now maintains, resultant from child study, is that the mind is a thing of life, growth, and unity, and that the function of the curriculum is, primarily, to provide nutrition, and secondarily, to provide formal discipline, and this in connection with and not apart from the process of nutrition. There is also recognition of the stages of growth, and the essentially different methods of treatment for the successive stages. The new educational method proposes to have the children of their own motion exercise their own powers. Not drive a certain number of truths into a child's mind, but to have the child go out with an absorbent mind to take up of his own accord and assimilate what is put in his way. The revolution which the adoption of such a proposition would make in current Sunday-school methods is evident. The wholesomeness of it is not less so. In the light of "child study" the average Sunday-school is not a school at all. There are no scholars; no teachers, in the right sense of the world. Current methods do not find the children where they are, but where it is suppose they ought to be. The lesson scheme is not so much an adaption of truth to the stages of growth as an effort to make the circuit of the Bible in seven years. There is not wanting a significant sign of an impending change. Hartford Theological Seminary is the first institution in the world to provide courses of instruction in the psychology of education, as applied to normal classes, Bible classes, and the administration of Sunday-schools. In what is here said, no disparagement of the work of Sunday-school teachers is intended. Praise of this great volume of voluntary, unremunerated toil is idle. A great, patriotic, and religous service is being rendered. But none are more sensitive to the straitened condition of the Sunday-school of today the teachers themselves. Relief is at hand. It will come through the adoption of the new method.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Once more we are greeted by the songs of the spring birds.

O. F. McKee, of Confluence, Pa., was a business caller here last week.

Attorney Speelman, residing at Mill Run, was here on business recently.

R. T. Mountain, of Confluence, Pa., spent several days here last week buying and shipping wheat.

J. W. McCulloh was on a business trip to Cumberland and other cities last week.

Mrs. Ida Frazee is visiting friends at Somerfield.

Miss Agnes and Ida Mason returned from Pittsburg where they have been laying in their millinery goods.

J. W. Haney is one among the many who expects to attend the St. Louis Exposition.

Salathiel Savage is confined to his rooms at this writing.

Rev. Stroup, pastor of the Lutheran church, closed his meeting here on Sunday night with eighteen accessions to the church.

A number of our people attended the quarterly meeting held at Selbysport by the presiding elder, Rev. R. B. Ward, Saturday and Sunday last. Dr. Ward always comes laden with good things for his hearers.

The band mill is again in operation.

J. G. Kolb is preparing to build in the spring.

Every effort has been put forth by by those who favor, as well as by those who oppose, the incorporation of our town. The matter is now in the hands of our representatives and it is hoped that, whatever may be done by them will be for the best interests of the town.

MR. WARFIELD WILL NOT SIGN POE AMENDMENT.

No Doubt that this is Governor's Present Intention—Party Managers are Angry.

That it is Governor Warfield's present intention to veto the Poe disfranchising amendment is certain. That the Democratic party managers are very angry with the Governor is also certain.

Attorney General Bryan has given Governor Warfield a strong opinion to the effect that he undoubtedly has the power to veto the bill for a constitutional amendment, just as any other bill. This opinion is based upon the provisions of the Constitution, which in one section, states that amendments to the Constitution must be in the form of a bill passed by a three-fifths vote in the Legislature, and in another section prescribes that all bills must be signed by the Governor.

The enrolled copy of the bill is not yet before the Governor, and he states that it would be improper for him to say what he intends to do with it until it is presented to him. Then, he says, he will act quickly. It is well understood, though, that he intends to say that he would sign the Bryan bill if passed up to him.

The Democratic leaders say there will be no compromise on the Bryan bill or any other plan. The Poe bill is one they want, and they will have it or none. On this point they are most emphatic. They also assert that they have taken expert legal counsel and are advised that the Governor has no power to veto it. They say that, while it has been customary for Governors to sign Constitutional amendments and his name would look well on it, his signature is not necessary and that the amendment will certainly be submitted to the voters the fall of 1905, regardless of anything he may do.

The foes of the Poe Constitutional amendment and the proposed new election law, which is necessary to give it life, are gathering strength each day. The amendment and the partisan election bill are inseparably linked. Without the 'window' the advocates of the Poe disfranchise scheme have no hope of victory at the polls.

Governor Warfield is an advocate of the amendment to the Constitution drawn by the Attorney General Bryan. The partisan judge system, which, it was announced last Friday, would be included in a bill yet to be introduced, would give the advocates of the Poe amendment an opportunity to force it on the State regardless of their wishes. Governor Warfield has already been approached for the purpose of ascertaining his attitude on such a bill before it is introduced. The result of these talks has been very encouraging to those who are anxious above everything else to see the purity of the ballot preserved. Not only does the Governor according to common rumor, refuse to encourage the plan, but the general tenor of his remarks leads the advocates of a partisan election law to believe that he would veto such a bill without a moment's hesitation.

It is true the Democrats have the necessary two-thirds majority in both legislatives bodies to pass the law over the Governor's veto. It is not thought that the Democratic legislators will do this, however. In fact, there is a strong and independent element in the House, which is getting together in order to defeat such a bill, and the probability is that the Governor will never be called upon to exercise his veto in connection with the election bill.

Public sentiment is gradually becoming aroused against any backward step in preserving the purity of the election law. The idicated attitude of Governor Warfield and the opposition in the House has already created the impression that the partisan law will never be introduced. However this may be, encouragement from fair-minded people will aid materially in helping the independent legislator to withstand the pressure that will be brought to change their attitude. These lawmakers wish to feel that the people are behind them in the fight they propose to make in opposition to the bill, in case it is introduced.

This Constitutional amendment bill has had the effect of pushing Mr. Bryan's plan to the front as the most just and practical one for carrying out the promise of the Democratic platform. Governor Warfield is opposed to the Poe amendment, and Attorney-General Bryan is fighting it openly. Under such conditions even the advocates of the condemned measure can see no hope for it at the polls. Many Legislaturemen, who were willing to drift along with the tide after the Poe amendment had been adopted in a caucus shoved upon them without warning, now say they always preferred Mr. Bryan's plan.

This constitutional amendment will enlist, they say, the full party strength while the other will be fought as bitterly within the Democratic party as among the Republicans.

The Closing Weeks of Session at Hand and Little Accomplished.

SENATOR U. G. PALMER'S VIEWS

On the Mortgage Tax Measure—Bill Authorizing Issuance of Bonds with Which to Erect New County Buildings—Other Measures.

[From our Special Correspondent.]

STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS,
March 22nd, 1904.

Not a great deal of importance was done at the session last night. Quite a good deal of business, it is true being transacted, but nothing after all of much general interest. Today in the House the House bill came up and in the Senate debates, scraps and wrangles were frequent. In fact at 2 o'clock the reports of standing committees were still being thrashed over, with much stormy weather yet in sight, whereat the Senate wisely adjourned or rather took a recess until this evening.

The members of the Senate began within five minutes of the roll call to find fault with the state printer, a general inclination to be critical because of alleged slowness being manifest. Then unfavorable reports caused a fuss in every incident and a fight on the part of the senator whose pet bill had been nailed down, and in most instances motions put and carried to delay consideration of the measures for this, that and the other reason.

After much time had been consumed in this manner a long debate was provoked by the report (favorably, of course) by the committee on Chesapeake Bay and Tributaries, of what has been facetiously dubbed the Applegarth "Brickbat Bill," which, in spite of the fun which it has caused, is a very practical scheme, and in a little different form from the bill considered today, a most valuable bill.

As it appeared today, however, the bill, intended to secure for the oyster beds the debris of the Baltimore fire, contained in a clause to appropriate $25,000 from the Baltimore fire sufferers relief fund, which caused its killing, in rather a peculiar way. The reason why the $25,000 appropriation clause was inserted was never made clear, since the fact that it was not needed was very soon brought out by its creators themselves, but there it was, reported favorably without the Committee on Finance ever having seen it. In fact it had slipped through to its third reading when caught. It was reconsidered and gotten back before the House, when Mr. Applegarth made a vigorous speech in its favor and urging haste, but after some discussion recommitted to the Finance Committee. In less than a minute, and without mentioning the bill's title, except by number, Mr. Robinson moved that the vote by which bill number 194 had been recommitted, be reconsidered. This was done, few understanding that this was the same bill, and Applegarth, in blissful unconsciousness of it, until the submitting of an amendment to strike out all after the words "A Bill." And that amendment was adopted, too, in spite of Mr. Applegarth, and very much to his disgust.

In the House the Haman bill, unfavorably reported, came up about the time the Senate adjourned, and after much quarreling over it, was gotten before the House by being substituted in its original form for the unfavorable report. A fight was going on over this at three o'clock at which time an Eastern Shore delegate with twenty pages of manuscript was just beginning to read a speech, and when a motion to take a recess was at once and unceremoniously adopted, leaving the twenty page speaker on his feet with a bewildered look on his face.

At the brief session of the Senate on Friday morning the bill to amend the law enabling the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether or not liquor shall be sold in the county, passed that body and now goes to the House, where Messrs. Howard and Harvey will look out for its future career.

At the same session the bill to amend the charter of Deer Park, Garrett county, and authorize the imposition of a license tax on any and all kinds of business within the limits of the town, and the measure to regulate terms of court in Allegany county and provide for employment of a court stenographer, likewise passed.

Other measures, those having already passed the House, at the same session of the Senate went through, as follows:

To incorporate the town of Friendsville.

To prevent the removal of indigent insane persons from any State to Garrett county.

Gov. Warfield on Friday morning signed the "Two Weeks' Pay-Day" bill introduced by Mr. Norris, of Baltimore city. It provides that all corporations and persons employing labor shall pay wages at least every two weeks under a penalty of $100 for each offense. The purpose of the bill is to relieve employes of large corporations from the necessity of dealing with the company stores.

The bill was opposed by the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association and others.

The bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in districts 6, 10 and 12, of Garrett county, has been signed by the Governor.

At Monday night's session of the Senate two bills of interest to Garrett county were passed as follows:

To amend the law relating to the delivery of road supervisors' commissions in Garrett county.

To authorize the voters of Garrett county to pass upon a $125,000 bond issue for the erection of a courthouse and jail.

Before the session Monday night the republicans held a caucus to outline their plan of a campaign on political and other legislation.

The pending partisan election bills were discussed and it was the concensus of opinion that they can be defeated by the aid of the democrats. The oyster bills were also discussed, but the party could not unite on this subject. It was decided to support the educational bill now in the House.

The Governor, despite his declaration to veto, has signed all "Jim Crow" bills thus far passed, and it is the general impression that the same bluster on the partisan election bills will turn out the same way and that if passed he will sign.

When the state educational bill came up in the House last Wednesday, Mr. Howard introduced and succeeded in having adopted an amendment providing that the term in Garrett county shall be seven and one-half months and the minimum pay $200.

The position of Senator Palmer on the mortgage tax repeal bill which he voted against when it first came up and passed the Senate, but which he voted for when later introduced in different form, seems to have caused some dissatisfaction at home, on account of the Senator's not being clearly understood. Mr. Palmer is one of the most faithful and well-liked members of the Senate and no one here questions him on anything. Letters have been received here, however, which led him to believe that he was in error in supposing that sentiment in Garrett was in favor of the repeal of the law, and he now states that he will do everything in his power to have the bill so amended as to meet with the approval of his constituents.

Mr. Palmer made the following statement of his views on the subject this morning.

"In the matter of the repeal of the mortgage tax I voted against it when the general bill came up. I felt that the interest rate in Garrett county is 6 per cent. whether there is a tax on mortgages or not, and as long as the tax would not effect the rate the borrower would have to pay, we might as well get all the support for our government out of the rich man that this tax would afford.

"After it was defeated I am told that one of the Judges of the Court of Appeals had informed a leading attorney in Western Maryland that by loaning his money on 'trust deeds' he would escape the mortgage tax entirely, and that the largest lenders are all beginning to do this and do not pay a cent of tax. I heard the leader of the democratic party in the senate say that he was loaning $300,000 for his clients and that they would not pay another cent of mortgage tax; that he would take the case to the Court of Appeals if the authorities attempted its collection, and that he had every assurance of winning.

"If my constituents can devise some means by which we can make our wealthiest citizens pay this tax as well as those who have only a few hundred dollars to loan, I shall gladly give it my support.

"I am opposed to the principle of making laws that allow the rich and those versed in the intricacies of the law to escape the burden of taxation entirely and put all on the man of only limited means, and hence I favored the exemption of Garrett county from the provisions of the mortgage tax when the Moore bill came up.

"I have consented to let it stand, though, and have so notified the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. Owing to the fact that its repeal will raise the tax rate, I hope and trust our County Commissioners will devise some way of reaching the man who now escapes the tax under the guise of a 'trust deed.'"

MARCH TERM CIRCUIT COURT IN SESSION.

Mr. John E. Gnagey, of Accident, Is Foreman of the Grand Jury.

JUDGE R. R. HENDERSON'S CHARGE

To that Body was Delivered in a Forceful Manner—The Court Paid Especial Attention to the Condition of the Public Buildings.

The March term of the Circuit Court for Garrett county commenced on Monday morning with Associate Judge Robert R. Henderson, of Cumberland, on the bench. Mr. John E. Gnagey, of Accident, was appointed foreman of the grand jury and the grand inquest was then charged by Judge Henderson, and entered upon its duties.

Gentlemen of the Grand Jury:—You have been selected by the Court, in accordance with law, from amongst the citizens of your county to serve upon the grand inquest of the State for the body of Garrett county. The large body from which your selection as grand jurors has been determined by lot, were selected with special reference to intelligence, sobriety and integrity. The duties you have to perform and the privileges you enjoy are sanctioned by long usage amongst Anglo-Saxon races, and securely enshrined in the respect of a law-abiding people. It is, therefore, an honor to be a grand juror of a county like this, for you are a very important branch of the machinery by which the administration of law is enforced. But the honor, as all honors do, involves high and serious duties and it is to these especially that the Court desires to direct your attention. An experience of several years at the bar has convinced me that courts can add little to the exact, comprehensive and solemn terms of your oath in an attempt to emphasize your duties. If you have taken that high obligation in the spirit and with the full mental comprehension and acquiescence in which it is intended to be taken, no words of mine can add to it. If you have failed to grasp its meaning a mistake has been made in your selection: but I have no fear that such is the case. You will approach the performance of your duties, therefore, with that entire absence of fear or expectation of favor and with that unprejudiced poise of mind which your oaths prescribe, and conduct your investigations with the inviolable secrecy which is one of the most important of your promises.

Upon you rests the decision of the question as to whether any of your fellow-citizens or others are to be brought to the bar of this Court to face criminal charges. This is not an agreeable duty, but it is a very necessary one. You hear but one side of the case, that of the presecutor. It may well be that there may be some explanation of incriminating facts, or that the suspected person has a good defence. Do not concern yourself with it. It is no part of your duty to anticipate the defence. If you are satisfied that the evidence before you justifies an indictment, then find one. The test of the sufficiency of evidence to justify an indictment is that if you yourselves, sitting as a petit jury, and hearing no other evidence than that pronouced before you as a grand jury would convict, then find the indictment, but if you would acquit then it will be a useless expense upon the county and a great hardship and injustice to the accused to proceed further. This simple rule will relieve you of all difficulty and even if persons afterward proved to be innocent are indicted the fault will not lie with you.

If any of you violates the obligation of secrecy this will constitute an offense which will be punishable as a contempt of court and will subject you likewise to indictment. It is not for you to judge whether your proceedings or any of them may be divulged without danger. Your oath is to keep them all secret, and if any leakage of information from your body comes to the attention of the court, summary action will follow. Your obligation to secrecy is not discharged when you are discharged as grand jurors but continues forever. If any one approaches you to discover any of your secrets this, too, is an offense, and should be brought by you at once to the attention of the court.

When you go to your room you would better organize by choosing one or two clerks, to keep a docket of the matters brought before you and a brief transcript of the evidence, which documents are, of course, to be kept entirely secret. You can find no presentment or indictment without the concurrence of at least twelve of your number. The presentments and indictments are voted on separately, and even the State's Attorney must not be present when your votes are taken.

You should take up first the cases of those persons who have kindly consented to remain in jail, if there are any such, and after these are disposed of, then the cases of those who are recognized to appear at the present term, and then all other cases.

Before you adjourn you must examine the county buildings, including the court house and jail, and report upon their condition. I am reliably informed that prisoners have lately escaped from the jail, as has frequently been the case before, and that this is due to the condition of the building. You will determine by your investigation who is responsible for this jail delivery, and if it is due to the condition which the county commissioners, in spite of repeated warnings from the court and grand juries, have allowed the jail to remain in, then you can locate the responsibility upon such of them as are to blame and indict them for a failure to discharge their duty in that regard. The law imposes upon them the duty of keeping the county property in proper condition to subserve the purposes for which it was intended, and they are endowed with ample power to raise the necessary money by taxation. If they refuse or neglect to discharge this duty they should be dealt with precisely like any other public officers guilty of dereliction of duty.

You will be expected to attend court promptly at the hours set for its sessions and to remain in session during the usual and customary hours of sitting. The heavy expense necessarily attendent upon a term of court makes it of great importance for you to waste no time. If witnesses do not attend when duly summoned, you have the power of the court behind you to compel their attendance and to punish them for disobedience of the summons.

You should examine whether the local liquor law for your county has been complied with and present and indict those who may have violated its provisions.

Certain other laws are required to be brought to your attention in an especial manner. The court will simply now enumerate them, but the State's Attorney will present them to you in their order: They are Article 27, section 3 of the Code of Public General Laws, relating to abortion. Article 27, section 47 of the same law, regarding defalcations by public officers charged with the custody of public moneys. Chapter 124, of the Acts of 1902, upon the subject of mining in Allegany and Garrett counties, under which you should summon before you the Mine Inspector to inquire as to the observance of the mining laws by those engaged in mining.

In all matters you will be assisted, as far as you may desire it, by the State's Attorney, and you may call upon the court also for its aid in proper matters.

You have an experienced foreman and the character of the men composing your body leads to the belief that you will execute your duties with fidelity, promptness and efficiency.

The several dockets were then called over and entries made. There are forty cases on the original docket.

It Was Beautiful!

The Spring Opening and Fashion Exhibit at Stewart's was the talk of the town. Everyone was enthused by the beauty of the gowns, the originality of the hats, the richness of the dress goods, and the new showings of laces, of gloves, of neckwear, and kindred lines. When you go to Baltimore this week, be sure to see the many, many beautiful things at BALTIMORE'S LEADING STORE.

A Preacher Pounded.

On Wednesday, March 16th, the good people of Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn came to the M. E. parsonage, bringing a fine lot of such things as were needed to replenish the larder of the pastor and family, amounting in value to about twenty dollars in all. We have a splendid, faithful and loyal people to serve, and their many tokens of kindness endear them more and more to us. May heaven's richest blessings rest upon them, and may they be rewarded a hundred fold in this life and in the world to come life everlasting, is the prayer of pastor and family.

A MEMORY.

Like a strain of old-time music
Comes a memory to me,
From the days of boyhood joyance,
Full of dreamy ecstacy;
And I wander far back yonder
Underneath the happy skies
That were bluest on the Friday
When my mother made the pies.

Every day was sunlit silver,
Every night was gold with stars
That should light my ships of promise,
Yet to come across the bars;
But the sunshine and the starshine
Were as nothing in my eyes
In comparison with Friday
When my mother made the pies.

There are days, these days, when music
Lends its rhythm to my thought,
For there's melody in working
Out the plans that must be wrought;
And I labor with my neighbor
To secure the golden prize,
But there's no day like that Friday
When my mother made the pies.

Jackson's Moral Scruples.

By Marguerite Stabler.

IT was Holy Week in Taos, where the religion of civilization is engrafted on the practice of barbarism—rank, riotous barbarism. The pueblo is Indian, but within sight is the Mexican hamlet of Los Ranchos de Taos, where the low Truchas Mountains bend in and shut away all outside influences so completely it might be still under the old Mexican dominion. The Indians, who have become somewhat Mexicanized, have, without losing any of their own tribal traits, acquired the religion and some of the superstitions of the Mexican race; the result being an unwholesome complexity. But some of the Indian women, who by a happy chance combine the best features of both races, are almost beautiful in their rigid symmetry of outline, and it was one of these straight-limbed, dark-eyed, brown-skinned beauties who saved Jackson's life.

When Jackson's party had prospected the lower ridge and turned toward the river, Jackson, with his usual pig-headed obstinacy, had elected to retrace his course on a lower level. So, without much regret on either side, they had made a division of the "grub" and parted at the foot of the mountain. And it was in blasting a prospect in this mountain that Jackson had met with his accident. The Indians who had passed him had no respect for a man with his leg blown half away, so, after lying several days with scant food and no shelter, he decided his only course was to make an exit from so inhospitable a world. Accordingly, while his strength still served to accomplish it, he reached for his knife and ran his fingers caressingly along its edge. But even as he did so, trying to imagine what it might be like to step out unbidden into the dark, a fleet-footed young thing, with startled, fawn-like eyes, stopped in her flight and looked wonderingly at the man on the ground. The man watched her, too, as she stood looking at him, and stayed his hand. His mind was somewhat clouded by the fever and pain, but a feeling came over him that if those black eyes would come back and look at him again in that way he might not be in so great a hurry to make his exit. After thinking it over he decided to wait and see if they would come back. It was a thousand pities, he had felt at the time, that a man of his prowess should be forced to sneak out of the world in this ignoble fashion.

Then after many hours of weary waiting, when the shadows began to lengthen and the air to grow cool and the pain in his foot to grow less, the bushes parted, and sure enough the same black eyes bent down and peered at him till the darkness fell between them and cut her off.

That was the beginning. The end was foreordained. With a woman's quick eye she saw what was needed, and the next night Jackson had double rations and a braided mat to sleep under. The knife was put back in his pocket, and the next time it was taken out it was used by a pair of strong brown hands to strip off the bark of a tender sapling and to dig up healing roots and herbs. And when his leg was well enough to admit of his being moved, it was Nita who found a shelter for him, and Nita, black-eyed, strong-limbed Nita, who bore him on her own strong shoulders and laid him on a couch of soft branches. And again it was Nita who brought water and provisions to keep up his strength, and charms and potions to keep the fever out of his leg.

Where Nita came from or to whom she belonged Jackson never troubled himself to ask. He accepted her devotion as a natural compensation for the weeks of disability he was forced to endure because of his misfortune.

After several weeks of careful nursing and plenty of nourishing food, Jackson began to feel his strength returning, and with it a wild desire to be up and away. This enforced inaction had whetted his determination to strike the vein they were prospecting for, and to his delight, the leg he had thought injured beyond hope, proved, when the rude splints were taken off, to be as straight and useful as ever. As soon as he began to feel able to push on again and connect himself with the world beyond the mountains, Nita's care was no longer necessary to him. Then he resurrected from some hitherto unsuspected source in his nature a moral compunction that had not disturbed him in the least when he lay sick and helpless in Nita's hands.

One evening, as he sat watching her deft brown fingers weaving reds and browns into a mat, he tried to speak to her as if he had not planned out the whole dialogue days before.

"Bonita," he said, pointing to the mat.

"Mucha," she answered, in an ecstacy of happiness at his approbation. She raised her great black eyes that had grown deep and earnest since he had known her, and her clear, straight outlines stood out against the sunset sky like a young Greek goddess done in bronze.

Jackson suddenly found himself at a loss for further words and realized he had set himself a difficult task. It would probably be better to "slope" some night and let her find it out for herself; but this new-born sense of moral responsibility would not let him rest at that, so with a highly virtuous air he continued in his broken Spanish: "This is not right, Nita. Malo, malo, Nita mia."

The brown fingers stopped their braiding, and the eyes widened in apprehension. How could she have displeased him?

"This is not good, I tell you," he went on. "This is a sin. You better to home, Nita. You not mi mujer, this is not bueno," he explained, with a comprehensive wave of his hand that included the little shack she had made so habitable for him and the happy life it had sheltered. "I have to go back over the mountain where I came from; so you be a good girl, Nita, and go home."

The mat dropped to the ground, and the brown figure cowered in the dust as the import of his words slowly dawned upon her mind. As for the sin, that didn't matter so long as she had him.

"Me voy contigo," she pleaded. Whenever he was ready to go across the mountain she was ready, too.

Jackson set his teeth. This thing had to be settled, and she might as well be made to understand to-night. The primitive nature, he told himself, did not feel poignantly, and as soon as he was gone she would forget.

"I can't take you with me over the mountain; it would be a sin, I tell you," he repeatedly gruffly.

This, then, was the reason—it would be a sin. Her mind grappled with the argument. He could not take her with him because she was not his wife. But he had never asked her to be his wife, and she could not have let him die alone with no one to take care of him. Jackson felt his spine stiffening with conscious virtue as he proceeded. "Now you go home, Nita, and be good, and don't make a fuss about it, and by and by you will forget all about me."

Go home and be good! She could not go home. But if she had been good, she reasoned, if she had not taken care of him and worked for him, if she had left him alone to die of his wound, then she would have been good.

During the next few days Jackson was bored to death by Nita's weeping and moaning. Like all men, the thing in the world he most dreaded and quailed before was a woman's tears, even though he had been the cause of them. He had hoped her Navajo stolidity would spare a "scene," but instead she gave herself up to her wailing as assiduously as if it had been a death dance; until at last, yielding to the farce and eloquence of his persuasions, she had slipped away as unceremoniously as she had appeared.

And now it was Holy Week in Taos, and Jackson's thoughts were for the time diverted from his own problem in moral ethics by the doings of the Order of Penitentes.

In the little shack, with his limb comfortably bound, Jackson had known little of the life of the natives, and, with his customary indifference to everything outside his own orbit, had never cared enough to ask what the Penitentes were; but there was not one detail of the life he had lived since his lot had been cast among them that his dusky neighbors did not know. And now that he no longer had Nita for a go-between, it did not take him long to find he was held in anything but a friendly light by the natives.

When, after the first day of Nita's absence, Jackson fully realized she was gone, and that he was alone with no one to look after his wants, he began to wonder what had ever possessed him to disturb matters as they stood. The next day he found his foot, without the cooling herbs and careful dressing, was not as well as he had supposed it to be; the necessity of foraging for himself also was not so agreeable as having his wants anticipated. By the third day he discovered his present condition was unendurable, and began to long for Nita to come back, and, recalling her devotion during all the weeks that had passed, had no doubt that she would come.

But while Jackson sat alone in his doorway straining his ears for every rustling twig or hastening footstep, the little group of Penitentes in the Morada welcomed silently the new candidate who came slowly toward them, not dreaming this was to be the cause of the rigors of the order being thereafter forbidden to women. During the days of rigid fasting and scourging that followed there was scarcely a sound uttered, and the little band kept close in the Morada until Holy Thursday, the day for the final purification, came.

In their black-face masks and white sacrificial garments, the Penitentes, all weakened by loss of sleep and long fasting, prepared for their pilgrimage to the cross on the hillside. Their last rite in the Morada had been to lacerate their backs with sharp pieces of metal, which started the blood to flowing freely. As the penitential file began to move, it was preceded by a tall man carrying a huge woodan crucifix, a trio of tom-tom players and a boy winding a sort of rude flute. In the hands of each Penitente was placed, as he emerged from the Morada, a long scourge of braided yucca fibre ending in a thick fringe, which, at the first sound of the flute and tom-toms, he began to wield with all his strength as the penitential file wended its painful way toward the Hill of Calvary.

Under the torture of their quivering flesh the Penitentes reeled and staggered, but kept a rythmic time with the dismal music, and the bleak night wind that whistled across the barren hills, and cut into the aching gashes of the naked backs, bore the mockery of the tom-toms over the mesa to the little shack under the hill.

Onward toward the cross the file continued, weary and faint from loss of blood, but still plying the scourge which was now clotted with blood that made the fringe into knotty ropes.

A few of the women began to falter. Penance and fasting had so weakened their bodies, their spirit, too, began to fail. One who had started among the first, and whose energy in the Morada had been noted by all others, was soon seen to flag under the stress of the heavy climb. Little by little she began to lose ground. Those who had been far behind her at the outset now passed her and left her toiling along. Finally she was the last one in the procession, her footprints marked in blood, but she kept on desperately, knowing that every bleeding step was bringing her nearer the cross and the expiation of her sin. Once, as the air grew black about her, she stumbled and fell, and in accordance with the rules of the order could not be succored, but seeing with half-blinded eyes the cross that was not yet reached, she rallied her failing powers, and with a dogged desperation started on again. The cross must be gained, for therein lay her only hope of expiation.

Round and round the hill in ever varying circles the penitential file wound. The last fainting Penitente marked the distance, as nearly as her failing senses could discern, to two more turns when the goal would be reached. She was now several paces behind her neighbor, staggerig and muttering to herself and unable longer to ply her scourge. Dark wavering shapes arose out of the chaos around her, their hideous height towering between her and the cross. When she threw out her arms in a wild appeal toward the holy summit of the hill, the shapes faltered and fled back into the darkness, but when she looked again the cross, too, wavered and disappeared in lurid blotches of red.

One more round was thus slowly and painfully made, and now only the last and smallest circle of all remained. If she could summon strength enough to crawl the rest of the way she might still reach the cross. Her darkening mind circled about the one thought, keeping time with the tom-toms, "If I can only reach the cross—if I can only—only——"

But the rigors of her fasting, the scourgings, the remorse that had been preying on her spirit, overmatched her powers, Madre di Dois!—she was sinking. Almost within reach of the cross, just in sight of her expiation, and left gying on the outskirts of the last circle, her sufferings all in vain and her cause lost!

With a moan she dropped, almost at the foot of the cross, but with her sin still upon her. She threw out her arms in a last appeal and fell across the long, black shadow that stretched its inexorable arms above her while the procession wound on without her.

Jackson, having given up all hope of Nita's return, had, by some ironical chance of fate, chosen that same night to set out for the mountain. As he slipped out of the shack he turned for a half amused, half regretful, glance behind him at the braided mat left unfinished on the floor, the rude crucifix on the wall, and the poor contrivances toward little creature-comforts devised by Nita's deft hands; then slung his knap-sack and started off.

Guided by the sounds that came in fitful gusts across the mesa, Jackson turned to the direction of the Hill of Calvary. The tragedy was over. All but one had reached the cross and received absolution for their sins.

On the outskirts of the crowd a little group bent above the form of the fallen Penitente. With reverent fingers some one removed the mask from her face, and the flickering light of the torches revealed the agonized, distorted features of Nita, fleet-footed, strong-limbed black-eyed Nita, no longer beautiful, but torn and bleeding, in the hope of expiating her sin in order that she might be worthy to follow the Gringo over the mountain; her features emaciated almost past recognition, and her countenance not stamped with the seal of peace death often leaves.

With a quick glance Jackson saw that Nita was dead. With another glance into the faces before him he saw that the sooner he was on the other side of the mountain the better it would be for him. The long months of banishment he had undergone had been irksome to him, and he was heartily glad to be able to get away. He might still be in time, he hoped, to meet his party somewhere near the line.

Exulting in the strength that came from Nita's long and careful nursing, he threw back his shoulders, filled his lungs with long, deep draughts of the cool night air, studied the heavens a moment, then took his bearings, and struck forth.

The last infant notes of the tom-toms, playing now a triumphant strain, reached him as he descended the farther slope of the hill. With the sounds came also the picture of Nita as he had first seen her, and Nita now lying dead and friendless under the black shadow of the cross. A momont he stood irresolute. Then with a shrug he shook off whatever thought may have prompted the action, as he muttered to himself: "What did the little fool want to make such a fuss about it for!"—San Francisco Argonaut.

A DRUNKARD'S VISION.

Haunting Memories of Better Days Turn His Dying Moments Into Ones of Intense Agony.

A bundle of filthy rags, face swollen and disfigured by vice, eyes bleared and sunken—and this one of God's creatures!

He lies still and quiet, dead to all around him, deaf to the noise and bustle of this New Year's eve, this season of joyousness and of mirth. There are no children in his mockery of a home, no wife to tell the prattling little ones of what New Year's should mean to them, no pleasure for him save in the bottle which has helped him to forget the past. Rousing himself, he places the bottle to his lips; he takes one more drink and then sinks back again, but this time not to forgetfulness.

"My God! why can I not forget?" is his dispairing cry. "One more drink. I must forget!"

Once more he sleeps, and ere long there falls upon his ear a pattering of tiny feet. In the dim light stands a beautiful, fair-haired boy with a bright, merry face. As the man looks, he says: "Who are you, and why do you come when I would forget?"

Then the boy answers in his sweet, childish tones: "Do you not know me? I am the spirit of your childhood days. I am of the time when we played our games of marbles and ball. Our days were spent in frolic and in glee, and at night, do you not remember the sweet-faced woman who took us in her arms and sang such soft, sweet lullabies that we can seem to hear them yet? And on New Year's eve do you not remember as she tucked us into bed she told us of little New Year and when she had heard our evening prayer, she added this petition: 'O, God, keep my boy pure and upright?' Has her boy kept himself pure and upright?"

"I AM THE SPIRIT OF YOUR SCHOOL DAYS."

The voice ceases and the spirit of his childhood vanishes from his sight.

The drunkard raises himself to a sitting posture, and searches again for his boon companion, the bottle. As he does so he hears a boyish whistle, and near him, where the little child had stood, is a boy of perhaps 14 years of age. Like the little child, the boy wears a familiar look, and to him the drunkard puts the same question which he had addressed to the younger child. Then the boy makes answer:

"I am the spirit of your schooldays. Do you not remember we were preparing to leave home for the first time? We are going away to school. You know mother said she wished to keep us at home awhile longer, but we said we did not wish to stay all our days in the dull old place. Do you remember on our last night at home when she came and knelt at our bedside and prayed: 'O, God, keep my boy pure and upright!' Has her boy kept himself pure and upright? Did he not learn to smoke, to bet, to drink while at school? Did he keep himself pure and upright as his mother prayed he might be kept?"

Once more the drunkard reaches for his bottle, but between him and it stands the form of a young and beautiful girl, and by her side is a stalwart youth—a handsome face his seems at first glance, but closer inspection shows lines of dissipation that mar its perfect beauty.

As the drunkard gazes upon these two, the young man speaks:

"I am the spirit of your youth, and this is Mary, sweet Mary, whom you have just won for your wife. Oh! we were proud of Mary, you and I. Do you remember that night when she promised she would give herself to us to keep forevermore? What a gift!—The love of a pure, good woman! We drank again and again, we were so happy."

The two spirits passed on, and with a moan the drunkard mutters: "Can I never forget? Oh, for a drink to drive away these memories!"

The fire dies down and blazes up again, and in its brilliant glow he sees a beautiful room. Great palms and costly flowers are everywhere. Under a canopy of roses stands a young and beautiful woman (the Mary of his youth) and himself. He can hear the bridegroom promise to love and cherish his beautiful bride. Would nothing take these pictures from before his eyes? Where is his bottle? Hark! They are drinking the health of the young couple, and Mary's soft hand touches his as she whispers gently: "I would rather you would not take any more wine, dear."

He hears the bridegroom say: "You did not know me, did you, man? I am the spirit of your young manhood, and you and I are happy to-night with the happiness of a lifetime."

"Happy!" echoes the drunkard. "Oh, for one drink to drive away these visions of my youth!"

A tiny hand touches his, a baby's hand, and as the little fingers grasp his, a baby's voice cooes sweetly in his ear: "Papa, O papa!"

"Who calls me papa? Take her away. I cannot listen to that voice. I cannot look upon that face."

Before the drunkard stands a woman holding in her arms a little child. The woman is worn and weary; the child is moaning a weak, pitiful wail. Its tiny hands are thin and emaciated, and its lips are blue with the cold. The door opens and a man staggers in. The child stretches out its little hands and cried: "Papa, O, papa!" The man, with an oath, plunges forward, and with one blow strikes down the mother and child.

The drunkard starts to his feet. "Who are you, man?"

The man answers: "I am the spirit of yourself, and these are your wife and child. To-day is election day—a glorious day, with free liquor for all who will partake."

The woman lies still and quiet. The little one moans and cries, but the mother will never again in this world hush its cries. It ceases moaning, and all is still, for the souls of mother and child have gone to their Maker.

The New Year's bells ring their melody of hope and cheer, but to the drunkard they seem to echo the words of the mother's prayer of long ago: "Oh, God, keep my boy pure and upright!"

They found him dead, tightly clutching in his hands the picture of a sweet-faced woman in her bridal robes, and wound about the picture was a curl of soft baby hair. They could not loose his fingers from the picture. Thus he lies, unknown and unmourned, but shall one say that he can at last forget?—Mrs. J. T. Crowley, in Union Signal.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

There are 254,498 liquor dealers in the United States.

Reports show that Chicago drank 75,359 fewer gallons of whisky in 1903 than in 1902 and smoked 11,263,009 fewer boxes of cigarettes.

The highest amount charged yearly for a liquor license is $3,500, in Louisiana. The lowest is five dollars, charged in the same state. The license fee varies between these two extremes according to the amount of business done. Illinois is under local option, with a minimum fee of $500.

A certain number of inebriates manifest from the beginning of their treatment pronounced delusions of persecution, believing that the institution and its managers are directly responsible for the continuation of their dangerous condition. Sometimes this is concealed, at others it is outspoken and bold. Frequently these delusions change with the surroundings from one thing to another, but continuously dwelling on the fact that each effort or means to help them is persecution, which they must oppose in every possible way or fail to recover.

Beer Kills Quicker.

Dr. S. H. Burgen, a practitioner of 35 years, in refutation of the generally accepted theory that beer is the least harmful of all intoxicating drinks, says: "I think beer kills quicker than any other liquor. My attention was first called to its insidious effects when I began examining for life insurance. I passed as unusually good risks five Germans—young business men—who seemed in the best health, and to have superb constitutions. In a few years I was amazed to see the whole five drop off, one after another, with what ought to have been mild and easily curable diseases. On comparing my experience with that of other physicians I found they were all having similar luck with confirmed beer drinkers, and my practice since has heaped confirmation upon confirmation. The beer drinker is much worse off than the whisky drinker, who seems to have more elasticity and reserve power. He will even have delirium tremens; but after the fit is gone you will sometimes find good material to work upon. Good management may bring him around all right. But when a beer drinker gets into trouble it seems almost as if you have to recreate the man before you can do anything for him."

Women in Politics

By HON. CHAS. ALLING,

Alderman of Chicago.

UNIVERSAL suffrage is right in theory, but suffrage for women property holders is practical and should be granted. That is no more than right and justice and has worked to advantage in other states. Men cannot say that they have made so great a success of municipal and state governments that the women are not needed. The intense ignorance regarding our local affairs can be eradicated by the women. The study of civics in this community is needed. Its duty should commence in the kindergarten, instead of in the eighth grade, when many of the future voters have deserted the schoolhouses for shops and stores.

We have spent millions of dollars for school buildings and millions more for maintenance in order to get good citizenship, yet we do not commence to teach citizenship directly in the school until a large per cent of the pupils have decided to go to work. Most men have some information regarding the progress of the Japanese army in Corea and the probabilities of several international conflicts, but few know anything of what is happening around the corner from his home. He is too busy to ascertain. Every breakfast table in the large cities should be made a school of civics. Then we would have better government in every respect.

Since the women have club meetings I know of nothing more beneficial than discussions of municipal affairs. Women could learn a great deal about officials and methods used by officials, which they could teach their husbands and children. What I have suggested for the women they can do. The universal suffrage of Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and Idaho has demonstrated that women are of benefit in governmental affairs. The humane measures passed by the last Colorado legislature are sufficient to prove my statement.

Cowards Are Not Wanted

By HON. ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE

Governor of Wisconsin.

I say that the state wants good citizens, but it wants men with something more than passive goodness. It wants manly men, who will stand up in every community and contend for the right. It wants brave men, who will take the field and marshal the forces of public opinion for the public good. Private interest is selfish enough to resent encroachment upon its own prerogatives. But the state must look to the citizen to protect its honor, preserve its integrity, and perpetuate its life.

The state has no use for cowards. The most despicable of all characters is that which surrenders honest belief to compromise with wrong, because it is powerful. The man who is not loyal to his own convictions cannot be loyal to his country. He who would betray the public interest in time of peace would betray the flag in time of war for a sufficient reason. The violation of a public trust is treason to the individual, to the state, and to God.

If bad results can be secured by the united action of bad men, good results can be achieved by the united action of good men, if pursued with the same tenacity of purpose, the same faith in ultimate success. To question this is to question the final outcome of the struggle between good and evil, which has been going on since the world began. It is to doubt the Divine origin, the final salvation of the race.

Prepare for Peace

By RABBI JOSEPH SILVERMAN,

Of Emanuel Temple, New York.

OUR motto, ought to be, not "In time of peace prepare for war," but "In time of peace prepare for peace by peaceful means." It is a great achievement to turn an enemy into a friend by truth, by sweet reasonableness. Israel has been a weak people in comparison with the great nations of the world, but they have held their own, not by force of arms, but by the means of peace. The Bible is replete with injunctions to seek peace; your Bible, my Bible, the world's Bible, and it contains no more beautiful passage than this: "How beautiful when brethren dwell together in harmony." We to-day are in the line of national progress. We are in a state of evolution, and from now on we shall advance by spiritual progress. Men cannot get along by brute force alone and forever.

As long as the nations of the world have armies and navies no arbitration will stand. There must be universal disarmament if we would achieve universal peace. We are making history to-day, and we should have a care to make it aright. There should be disarmament by all powers of the earth, only a sufficient force of soldiers being maintained to assure the internat peace of the countries. By advocating the laying down of the arms of the world we may be to-day laying the corner stone of the great universal republic of the future.

Labor Legislation Needed

By REV. THOMAS E. SHERMAN, S. J.

Son of Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman.

WE MUST reorganize labor throughout the country, or we will have another conflict greater than any the American people has had to contend with. New leaders should be chosen; men who will ameliorate rather than inflame the passions of those who compose the labor organizatins. The civil war resulted because our forefathers were afraid to legislate against slavery. Trouble will come again unless legislation is enacted.

The threats of unionism in Chicago and elsewhere throughout the country to-day are a greater menace to liberty and the foundations of the government than the southern confederacy ever was. There is grave danger around us to-day.

Have we not witnessed in Chicago during the last three months scenes of lawlessness and disorder indicative of peril to our institutions in the future, if not checked? When my duty as a clergyman is interfered with in giving a decent Christian burial to the dead, then, may I ask, is there any government in the city of Chicago? When men have no respect for the dead, surely they have none for the living.

WAR SPIRIT IN JAPAN.

Even the Coolies That Drag Jinrikishas About Are Eager to Display Their Valor.

The jinrikisha coolie, with his little lacquered carriage, does not view the clanging electric railway cars with equanimity. Flesh and blood and muscle cannot compete with the subtle current and the three sen (one and one-half cents) fares, and it is evident that thousands of jinrikishas must go from Tokio streets and hardships fall to the coolies this winter, writes Eliza R. S. Seidmore, in the Chicago Tribune. One such human pony told me:

"Jinrikisha soon be finish," and when asked what he would do, answered:

"Oh, Russia make bobbery, make bobbery, then come war, and plenty jinrikisha go Manchuria. I go Manchuria."

"And kill all the Russians?"

"Sayo de gozarimasu" (that is so, certainly) and he bowed seriously.

With this relief in view, the jinrikisha coolies are contentedly waiting. Any day they may step from the shafts at an hour's notice, and with their blankets and lanterns go to the railway station to be hurried down to waiting transports at Ujina. A coolie corps goes with each regiment, to do the packing and hauling and heavy work that lessens the fighting soldier's power to march and shoot.

On the march to Peking the American soldier, loaded like a pack horse, broke down or threw away his load, as at Santiago, while the nimble Japanese scampered here and there a-soldiering, and came up at the end of each march as fresh and smiling as their tireless leader, Gen. Fukushima. The Japanese coolie did the coolie work, and the jinrikisha transport corps was a mobile, flying force compared to the American four-mule army wagon trains or the British India tonga cart service. The human pony could look after himself, and when there was a stream to ford or a mud slough to argue with two coolies could take the jinrikisha on their shoulders and with catlike tread pass over and leave the irate teamsters hours behind.

The jinrikisha coolie is certainly "the man in the street," and one hears the words: "Roo-sha," "Choreu" (Corea) and "Manchuria" often as he passes a stand of waiting vehicles. They read all the sensational extras, and firmly believe the present depression in their labor market to be the forerunner of a boom, when war-time prices will rule, and they will be assisting in the great revenge.

DIVORCES IN NEW ENGLAND.

One to Every Six Marriages in Maine in 1902—The Number Is Growing.

The National League for the Protection of the Family has been delving into statistics to ascertain the proportion of marriages and divorces in the several states, reports the New York Sun.

According to the latest statistics obtainable there was one divorce to about every six marriages in Maine, one divorce to every 8.3 marriages in New Hampshire, one to every 10 in Vermont, one to every 16 in Massachusetts, one to every 8.4 in Rhode Island, one to every 8.8 in Ohio, one to every 7.6 in Indiana and one to every 11 in Michigan.

Dr. Samuel Dike, the league's secretary, says:

"An interesting arrangement has been entered into by a large proportion of the clergy of Rhode Island, which shows that something can be done toward harmonious action, even where there is a wide divergence of opinion. It is mainly in the line of suggestions which the secretary of the league has been making for several years, and only needed efficient and wise leadership, such as has been shown in Rhode Island, to make it practical.

"Under the lead of Bishop Doane, of Albany, an effort is being made to get the various denominations of Christians of the country as a whole to make some agreements in regard to the action of their ministers in marrying improper persons. This is much slower work than the formation of local plans like that of Rhode Island.

"Some of the denominations have no national bodies empowered to act for all their churches in such a matter. Some of those who have such power meet only once in three or four years, and the diversity of opinion is very great."

One in Three Perishes.

The Gazette Medicale de Paris states that in a theater panic and fire about one out of every three spectators perishes. This was the proportion at the Brooklyn theater fire in 1876, with 400 victims, at Nice, in 1880, with 65 victims; at Smolensk, in 1883, with 380; at the Opera Comique, at Paris, in 1887, with 131; the Exeter theater, n England, with 127 victims, in 1887; at the Oporto theater, in 1888, with 80; and at the Iroquois theater, in Chicago, where 573 perished.

No Use on Him.

A teacher in the public schools not over 100 miles from Wakefield, had occasion to take charge of a pupil from another school, and the pupil was somewhat behind in his studies.

Of the boy's former teacher, she inquired: "Has he taken French?"

"Well," was the reply, "he has been exposed to it for the past two years, but to my knowledge it has never taken."—Wakefield (Mass.) Citizen.

His Letters.

"So you are going to send his letters back, are you?" asked the blond.

"Yes," replied the brunette, with tears in her eyes. "But not until I have copied them all. They will make a splendid book, and I have a lovely title for them already—'The Letters of a Lazy Lover.'"—Cincinnati Times-Star.

LEECHES ARE STILL USED.

Foreigners in Chicago Cling to the Belief That Bleeding Is Good for Many Ills.

The use of leeches, according to a retail druggist in an Italian quarter of the city, is increasing. This, says the Chicago Tribune, is likely to be news to many physicians and certainly to the laity, who have thought that bleeding was a dead medical theory.

The druggist who made the statement had just sold something in a small box to a group of Italians whom he charged 25 cents. Afterwards he explained that it was a leech, and then he added that sales were increasing in drug stores which find their patrons among the foreigners of the large cities.

They are raised mostly in Sweden, where they are cultivated in leech lakes. They are sold at four cents each at wholesale, but the retail druggist adds heavily to the price. "We have to do it," said the druggist. "They die if they get too warm or too cold, and you are out what you paid for them.

"The sale of them is constantly increasing. It is due to the fact that the foreign population of the country is growing all the time. In this country the natives do not look upon bleeding as a cure for all manner of things, but in many foreign countries that is the first thing they think of when anything is the matter with a person. If a doctor isn't around to tap the sufferer, off they go for one of these little bloodsuckers. It's the same way when these folks come to this country. They think of "bleeding" whenever anything happens in the way of an accident, and if one of them gets bruised the first thing he wants is a leech. When one of them gets into a squabble and comes out of it with a black eye, nothing but a leech will do him.

"The demand for these ugly little things is confined almost entirely to the foreign born element in the city, and in a store situated as this one is we must keep a good supply of leeches always on hand. In the stores situated in the fashionable districts I doubt if you will be able to buy a leech. They, however, may keep them in some of these places just to have them in case they are wanted, but it is safe to say they don't sell a dozen in a year. Do we? Yes, indeed. A dozen a day is more like our record. One day last week I sold 33."

PUMPS MILLIONS OF GALLONS.

Mining Company on Lake Superior Has Suction Pump of Immense Capacity.

The largest suction pump in the world is one located at the mines of the Calumet & Hecla Copper Mining company, on Lake Superior. Without being crowded to the limit of its capacity this pump can deliver 2,500,000 gallons of water every hour in the 24. Moreover, it will do the work without making as much noise as is made by the operation of the old-style sewing machine. Outside the doors of the great building which houses it no sound is heard from within, and, standing beside the monster upon the brink of the pit connected with the lake from which the water is taken, almost the only sound is the noise of the suction, as with every stroke more than 1,000 gallons are lifted.

It is a triple expansion pumping engine, with a capacity of 60,000,000 gallons, standing nearly 50 feet in height, and requiring 1,500 horse power for its operation. It has been proved by actual test that the nominal capacity can be easily maintained for an indefinite time without injury or strain, and that pushed to its full capacity, the pump could handle approximately 75,000,000 gallons in 24 consecutive hours.

The duty of the pump is to furnish water for the great stamp mills of the Calumet & Hecla company, which has 22 steam pumps in continuous operation, daily pulverizing 5,000 tons of conglomerate rock into sand so fine that it can be carried way by a stream of swiftly running water.

The pump is housed in a special building near the shore of Torch lake and below the mills, and it forces a steady stream of water to the upper portions of the mill, where innumerable small jets of water play upon the great slime tables and jigs. Here the specific gravity of the fine particles of copper contained in the rock separate the mineral from the worthless sand, and the size and the force of the streams of water are so nicely regulated as to wash away the sand and yet carry with it the minimum of copper.

German Factory Wages.

In a German factory, which employs 2,107 men, making agricultural implements and traction engines, 25 per cent. get 71 to 95 cents a day, 59 per cent. get 95 cents to $1.31, and 16 per cent. get above $1.31. This does not include boys or apprentices, and is for a nine-and-a-half-hour day.

Fine Farming Country.

The Chinese Eastern railway, the southeastern terminus of the great Siberian railway, in its course through Manchuria to its end, at Port Arthur, passes through 1,000 miles of as continuously rich agricultural country as can be found anywhere in the world. Every acre is cultivated.

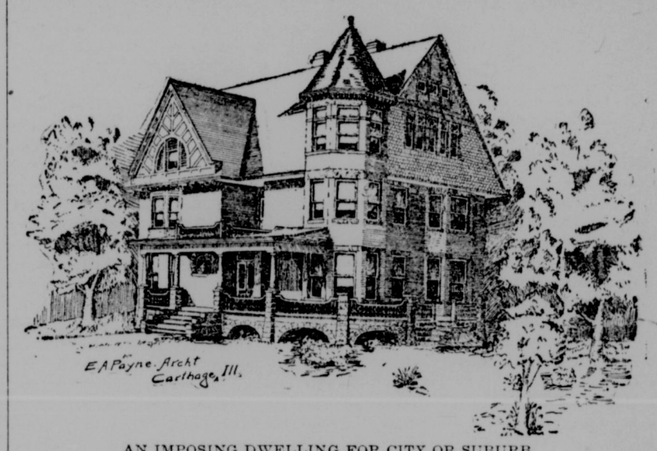
Art in Architecture

Designed and Written Especially for this Paper

IT is essential to health that the sanitary condition, since the home homes be in every way in a good is where everybody spends the greater part of his or her life. A permanent home should be built with care and planned with special reference to the wants and necessities of the family. Let us have permanent homes built in accordance with the times and most modern styles.

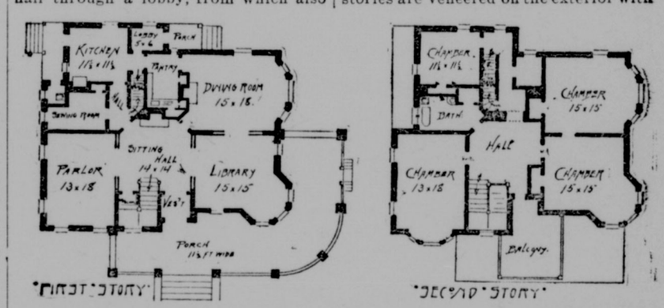
I have the pleasure of illustrating herewith a conveniently planned dwelling in a style of design suitable for a suburban residence. It is well constructed and finished throughout, and when surrounded with ample grounds it is very effective. In the first story the hall, library, parlor and dining-room are so located and connected as to be easily thrown together. The culinary arrangement is deserving of special mention for convenience. The small kitchen, furnished with brick-set range, sink, dresser, etc., is reached from the front hall through a lobby, from which also rises the back stairs, and is connected with the dining-room through the pantry. The pantry is thoroughly equipped. Passage to the rear outside is through an entry porch, and to the cellar from the kitchen inside.



AN IMPOSING DWELLING FOR CITY OR SUBURB.

The principal feature of the interior is the hall and staircase, which is trimmed in oak, the walls being paneled four feet high. The ceiling is heavily beamed, forming deep panels. The hall has a parquetry floor and a staircase with carved newels. The stairway is lighted by stained glass windows, shedding a soft and pleasant light over the upper and lower halls. The fireplace is built of brick and has a hearth laid in mosaic and an oak mantel. The parlor is treated in ivory white and gold in a delicate manner. The library is trimmed in mahogany. The dining-room has a parquetry floor and is trimmed in oak. It has a neatly designed brick fireplace and mantel set in an arched recess.

The second floor is trimmed in white pine finished natural. On this floor are four chambers and bathroom. The chambers are provided with large closets, and the bathroom is wainscoted and furnished complete. Several bedrooms could be provided in the third story if desired.



The materials used are a combination of stone, wood and brick. The foundation walls and underpinning are built of rough faced stone of a light grayish blue color, laid up and neatly pointed in white mortar. The first and second stories are veneered on the exterior with Roman gray pressed brick. The remaining portion of the exterior is covered with shingles. The roof is shingled. The striking feature of the exterior are the towers, balconies, spacious piazza and ornamental chimneys. Cemented cellars under the whole house contain laundry, furnace room and other necessary apartments. The house is heated by hot water and can be erected in most places for from $6,000 to $7,000.

HEART PULSATIONS.

Combining of Kinetoscope with X-Rays Will Make Visible the Organ's Beats.

To stand before a kinetoscope and see there produced the actual pulsations of your own heart, to note in the flying squares its location and appearance, and to deliberately count its strokes—that is the startling scientific possibility being made to mankind if the experiments now being made by Dr. M. K. Kassabian, of Philadelphia, are successful.

The result is to be reached by the combination of a powerful Roentgen ray and a specially contrived photographic apparatus operated on the principle of the kinetoscope. This machine, if constructed, would be so timed as to correspond with the pulsations of the normal human heart.

The proposal to thus lay bare the innermost secrets of anatomy was suggested by Dr. Kassabian in a paper read before the convention of the American Roentgen Ray society in Houston hall, University of Pennsylvania. It aroused instant attention, and has been the subject of widespread comment.

Dr. Kassabian was disinclined to predictions when interviewed, but he is earnest in his opinion of its feasibility. Thus far his experiments have convinced him the only problem lies in the construction of a photographic machine adapted to the work.

"The advance in X-ray appliances," said Dr. Kassabian, "together with the skill now being shown in the operation of the machines, makes the moving picture of the heart's action entirely practical. Formerly a single X-ray photograph took from two to four minutes. Now it can be secured in a second or less. The pulsation of the normal heart is 72 strokes to the minute. A photographic machine on the kinetoscope principle would show the dilation and contraction of the heart and the action of the diaphragm with mathematical exactness. It would reveal also the identical location of the heart. I am quite convinced of the feasibility of such photographs.

"As it stands now we have only a single view of the heart, and as the photograph might be taken during either contraction or distention we can never have an accurate view of its size. I consider the idea entirely feasible."

A further possibility of the machine is the recording by the watch how varying emotions react on the heart. Physicians can then determine just what effect excitement, fear, distress, joy, etc., have in accelerating the movement of the organ. Dr. Henry Hulst, of Grand Rapids, is another believer in heart motion pictures and an active experimenter.

Enormous Waste of Power.

Probably the greatest waste of power in this country, outside of the natural water power daily going to waste all over the land, can be found in the Connellsville coke region in Pennsylvania, where the gases from thousands of coke ovens pass off into the air without any effort being made for their utilization. These gases might be used to operate gas engines, just as illuminating gas is made to do at present, and the gas engines could in turn operate the dynamos with which to generate thousands of horse power for commercial use in the adjoining districts. It has already been proved, in the case of the Niagara Falls Power company and another long line in California, that distance is no barrier to the transmission of electric power, and even Pittsburg, with all its manufacturing industries, is not beyond the reach of this enormous quantity of power which is now going to waste.

Moissan Process Diamonds.

Recent experiments with the Moissan process for the artificial production of diamonds has shown that crystals of perfect octahedral form and transparency may be obtained by the fusion of a rock similar to the matrix of the South African diamonds. The crystals, however, are of microscopic size, and no way has yet been discovered to make the diamonds of sufficient size to be sold individually at a profit. If it should be possible to produce these crystals in large quantities, there might be a field for them as an abrading and polishing agent along with emery and corundum.

IT HAS BEGUN.

Here is a sentence from an editorial in last night's New York Evening Post:

"This ready sanction of the 'Jim Crow' law would indicate that Maryland and Mississippi must be bracketed as infected states, and that Warfield, urged on by Gorman, must be classed as a Governor fallen ill of negrophobia."

It is only a beginning of what will be printed all over the world. Maryland, whose population is only one-fifth negro, will figure in the same class as Mississippi and South Carlina, whose population are more than one-half negro. The results will be to keep out settlers and capital.

How does the Maryland Legislature like it?

How does Governor Warfield like it?

How do the people of Marvland like it?

MR. HEARST'S candidacy acquires such standing as it possesses solely upon the assumption that he "has fought the battles of the people against monopolies," and makes such progress as it has made only through the stimulating application of money spent with a lavish hand. There was, of course, nowhere in the country a demand for the nomination of Mr. Hearst until he and his agents created one. He makes his appeal solely to restlessness and discontent. He makes no profession of representing any great national principle. He formulates no policy upon which the business of the government and of the country could be carried on for a single day. He represents the sterile policy of agitation, nothing more. That is to say, Mr. Hearst stands for absolutely nothing but the arraying of a class against class in the United States.

MORTGAGE-TAX REPEAL.

While there peal of the mortgage-tax law has been defeated, a bill practically as satisfactory as that has passed the State Senate, and is now in committee in the House of Delegates, This bill abolishes the State's portion of the tax on mortgages, and as to the local share of the tax accommodates the case to the wishes of the repesentatives of the various counties and of Baltimore city. If passed by the House of Delegates, the result will be that in Baltimore city, and in a number of the counties, this arbitrary burden on a perfectly legitimate and highly desirable class of business transactions will cease to exist. When a person borrows money for the purpose of building a house, it will no longer be necessary either for him or the person who lends the money to pay a penalty of about half of one per cent. a year for the committing of this offense. That is what a mortgage tax really is; it is not a tax, but a fine. Just now, here in Garrett, we should be very anxious to stimulate and reward, rather than to discourage or punish, anybody who is engaged in the enterprise of building up our waste places. The mortgage tax is palpably a hindrance to that great work. To remove the burden and the friction it causes is a clear need of our situation. If the Legislature is not prepared to recognize the abstract justice of repeal by abolishing the tax throughout the State, the main practical object will be accomplished by a repeal bill which covers the case of Garrett county. The more counties included in it, the better.

THE COMMITTEEMAN.

Under the caption of "Governor Lowndes as a Committeeman," the Lonaconing Star contains the following editorial in its last issue:

"Maryland Republicans will send as delegates-at-large to the National convention which meets in June in Chicago, Hon. Stevenson A. Williams, Gen. Felix Agnus, Senator McComas, and Hon. W. H. Jackson, Former Gov. Lowndes will be recommended as the national committeeman from this state and consequently declined a place on the delegation to Chicago.

"Governor Lowndes will be a source of strength to the national committee this year. He will take with him into the position a rare knowledge of political warfare and campaign management—not of the sort that invites criticism and brings odium upon the cause in which his ability will be engaged, for Governor Lowndes knows nothing of questionable methods or unbecoming practices. He has seen some hard service and some hot fighting in his own state, but when he won, it was with clean hands; when defeated, there were no vain regrets.

"Governor Lowndes will be of great service to the committee, both as an advisor and as a director. His experience in political matters has been sufficiently extensive to enable him to have a clear and accurate knowledge of public affairs, their effects upon the people and the likes and temperament of all classes of citizens. His association and contact with people of all classes qualifies him to discern their needs and to anticipate their desires. His success in rendering satisfactory service to the people of his own state is attributable to this fact more than to any other.

"Governor Lowndes will make a competent, energetic and resourceful committeeman.

"Better still, he would make a most acceptable successor to the lamented M. A. Hanna as national chairman."

Obituary.

Paul Alfred Schultz was born April 3, 1895. His early home was in Potsdam, Germany. Potsdam is near Berlin and is the summer home of the Emperor. Paul's father was a military man and was desirous that his son should lead a soldier's life. After spending three years in the German army Paul found, however, that military life was to him distasteful and decided to come to America. He first came to South America, his friends think at about the age of twenty-one or twenty-two years. He He spent about a year in South America, then came to Virginia. Twelve years ago he came to Blaine. Finding the people in this part of the country congenial to him, he never traveled farther. June 26, 1901, he was married to Jennie Browning. He died March 10, 1904, having endured a lingering illness of about six months. He leaves his devoted wife and one child to mourn their loss.

Brother Schultz, like other men, had his faults and short comings, we have no doubt, yet judging from the many kind deeds performed in his behalf during his illness, we have reasons to believe that he was loved and respected by all who knew him. Enemies, to the writer's knowledge, he had none.

He often expressed his willingness to die, yet he was anxious to regain his health for the sake of his wife and child. We learn that while he was in Virginia he first came into the experience of Salvation by grace. The writer was several times at his bedside and not once did he express a doubt of his acceptance with God. Near seven weeks before his death he was taken to the hospital at Keyser where he remained until Saturday before his death. When the writer visited him at the hospital he spoke of his return home to his wife and child saying "What a home coming it will be." He was disappointed in his hope for recovery. When brought home on Saturday, he was very much exhausted. In a few moments he rallied and every heart was touched as he reached out both hands beckoning his friends to his side. As his friends were greeting him, he exclaimed, "I am trusting in the Lord." He lingered until Thursday, when with Christ as his shepherd he passed down "through the valley of the shadow of death."

The funeral services were held in the Blaine M. E. Church Sunday morning, March 13. The sermon was preached from the text, "If a man die shall he live again," Job 14.14. Interment was in the Kitzmiller cemetery. He was buried with the honors of the K. of P. Lodge, having been a member of that order at Gormania. The lodges at both Gormania and Blaine came out in full and all must have felt that a friend had departed as his brethern in the lodge dropped their evergreen in the grave, thus paying their last tribute to the memory of their deceased brother.

Paul, thou wast a friend to many on earth. We miss thee, but thanks be to our common Father, our loss is thine heavenly gain. Thy home, whence thou we believe dost look down and bid us with "beckoning hands" to come again to thy side. God grant that we, all thy friends, may one day stand with thee amid the "white-robed throng" on the "right hand." J. E. WELLS.

ANOTHER HORRIBLE FREIGHT WRECK

In Which Two Men are Killed and Another Badly Hurt.

FAST FREIGHT TRAIN NO. 97.

Wreck Was Caused by a Huge Stone on the Track Into Which the Train Crashed—Fireman and Brakeman Killed and Engineer Hurt.

Fast freight train No. 97, west bound, consisting of sixteen cars loaded with miscellaneous merchandise, and drawn by engine No. 2055, one of the modern passenger type of locomotives, ran into a rock weighing four or five tons in No. 58 cut, five miles west of Oakland, Tuesday night about 8.30 o'clock, completely wrecking the engine and five or six cars, and killing two men, Fireman Frank Fraley, of Terra Alta, W. Va., and Brakeman J. Wilson Richards, of Cumberland. Engineer G. W. Rice, of Keyser, was badly injured, but will recover.

At the point where the wreck occurred the west bound track is some twelve feet higher than the east bound track, the descent being straight down. The engine was carried over this and with it the two men above named, the engineer seeing danger, but not in time to warn the other men, jumped and thus saved his life. On top of the engine piled the tender and five cars, reducing the former to a mass of broken iron and the latter into splinters.

Fraley and Richards were caught under the derbis. The former was taken out five or six hours later while the latter's body was not recovered until noon yesterday, when it was brought to Oakland and encased in a casket and then sent on to Cumberland.

Engineer Rice was taken to the home of Mrs. Pendergast at Hutton where he was tenderly cared for until the arrival of Dr. Legge who gave him surgical attention and accompanied him home at Keyser on train No. 8 yesterday morning.

Fireman Fraley, of Terra Alta, W. Va., was about 23 years old, married, and leaves two young children. He was a first cousin to Messrs. G. A. and A. T. Fraley, of Oakland.

Brakeman Wilson Richards was married last Tuesday, March 15, to Miss Ella Dora Emmerick, of Ellerslie, Md.

Traffic was entirely blocked all Tuesday night the passenger trains being despatched from Grafton via the West Virginia Central Railway, and those from Cumberland bound for St. Louis over the same road.

The wreck was cleared up entirely late yesterday afternoon and traffic restored over both tracks.

The monetary loss to the railroad company will foot up many thousands of dollars.

WEEDS

Consumption is a human weed flourishing best in weak lungs. Like other weeds it's easily destroyed while young; when old, sometimes impossible.

Strengthen the lungs as you would weak land and the weeds will disappear.

The best lung fertilizer is Scott's Emulsion. Salt pork is good too, but it is very hard to digest.

The time to treat consumption is when you begin trying to hide it from yourself. Others see it, you won't.

Don't wait until you can't deceive yourself any longer. Begin with the first thought to take Scott's Emulsion: If it isn't really consumption so much the better; you will soon forget it and be better for the treatment. If it is consumption you can't expect to be cured at once, but if you will begin in time and will be rigidly regular in your treatment you will win.

Scott's Emulsion, fresh air, rest all you can, eat all you can, that's the treatment and that's the best treatment.

We will send you a little of the Emulsion free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

GRANGE ORGANIZED AT SWANTON

Last Saturday by Mr. J. B. Ager, Master of the Maryland State Organization.

Mr. J. B. Ager, Master of the Maryland State Grange organized a Grange at Swanton last Saturday at which the following officers were elected:

Master, Chas. T. Sweet; Overseer, Herman Steiding; Secretary, C. M. Miller; Lecturer, A. F. George; Treasurer, Theodore Beckman; Chaplain, Rev. W. A. Sharp; Steward, Theodore George; Ass't Steward, George Lee; Lady Ass't Steward, Mrs. B. Warnick; Pomona, Mrs. J. L. Fitzwater; Ceres, Mrs. Wm. Sharpless; Flora, Miss Jennie Beckman; Gate-Keeper, Ollie Switzer.

Besides there was plenty of the best material left in the following charter members: John L. Fitzwater, John B. Friend, Albert Wright, Wm. Sharpless, Joseph F. Friend, Jr., Wm. J. Barnard, Henry Barnard, H. B. Warnick, Wm. Chadderton, George Bray, J. M. Conneway and Frank R. Sharpless.

The Grange is the only co-operative organization of a national character which the farmers have, and it has increased in strength more within the last few years than ever before—over 50,000 new members having been added in 1903. This rapid joining of hands to assist and protect themselves is due to several causes, of which might be mentioned the rural telephone lines by destroying a sense of isolation on the farm and cultivating greater intimacy, but more particularly the seeing that all other great industries to decrease their expenses and increase their profits have combined, and feeling that so many of these great combines use their united strength to crush the farmers and all other uncombined industries to the wall.

The Grange is not a combination for such latter purpose, it is not primarily a union of farmers to transact business even. On the contrary it is an organization to look after legislation beneficial to the farmer, national, state and local, to draw the farmer and his family together in social gatherings, so as to give them confidence in one another, to so educate them and their children that they shall feel perfectly at home among the other best citizens of the country, whether upon the public stage, the halls of legislation or the drawing-room of the polite or cultured, to transact business properly, to discuss local affairs so as to shape their trend, to keep posted on prices on what they have to buy or sell and to avoid confidence games and frauds.

During the last thirty years since the Grange was organized by William Saunders, (for over twenty years chief of the horticultural division of our government), one of the grandest men the writer ever met, it has introduced and carried through more valuable legislation to the farmer than all other agencies combined. It is the father of our experiment stations and thus the grand-father of the Farmers' Institute By its influence the Secretary of Agriculture became a member of the President's cabinet. The Grange secured rural free delivery and insists on its extension to every rural home. It advocates national and state aid to road building, postal savings banks, national control of all corporations and combinations, pure food laws and the adding telegraphic and telephonic service to the postal department.

In the subordinate or local granges the meetings are pleasant and social gatherings of all the members both male and female with their elder children and invited guests. The business is conducted privately by the members only, and desirable new members admitted by ballot. There are entertainments for both old and young and often a regular farmers' feast of good things for all. Numbers of the offices are filled by the ladies and no order shows greater appreciation by their sex of this courtesy and acknowledgement of equality—about half the membership being females.

The great and prosperous West, by its rapid growth, its use of the most up-to-date methods and appliances, its application of business principles to farming, is a living example of what the Grange can do for a country or a section of the country.

Perhaps the best treatise on the World's Fair at St. Louis, is that published by the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, in an illuminated folder of eighty-four pages, setting forth the attractions of the great fair in a most admirable and complete manner. It contains some sixty-eight views of buildings including maps of St. Louis, the original Louisiana Purchase, and the Worlds Fair Grounds. It is a resume of what may be seen at the Exposition, giving interesting and valuable information in a way that one who starts to read can hardly lay the booklet down until he has read it entire. Aside from its contents, its artistic appearance in the standard colors of the "Royal Blue and Sepia," makes it a thing to be desired. It may be had free on application to any of the Baltimore & Ohio Ticket Agents or by addressing C. W. Bassett, General Passenger Agent, or D. B. Martin, Manager Passenger Traffic, B. & O. R. R., Baltimore.

THE SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Of the Organization of A Sunday School in Oakland Soon to be Celebrated.

A few weeks ago Rev. John M. Davis, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday school in Oakland, received a letter from Mr. David McCarty, who resides in one of the western states, enclosing the constitution and roll of scholars and teachers of the first Sunday school organized in this section of the country.

The letter accompanying the papers states that the school was organized in the old house on the Porter farm which is still standing and later removed to the school house at the old grave yard adjoining the Totten farm The school house was torn down many years ago. From the school house the Sunday school was removed to the Methodist church in Oakland upon the organization of the church here and the erection of the building.

The school was organized in April, 1829, by the father of David McCarty. The roll of the scholars include the names of but two persons yet living in this section, they being the venerable William White, of Joseph, and Nicholas Merrill.

The papers are all yellowed with age and are highly treasured by all the Sunday school workers.

KENDALL.

The prospects for gentle spring seem bright these days. This has been the hardest and most persistent winter that our oldest inhabitants can remember; but hard as it has been, it will be conducive to a great fruit year—the first for a long time.

D. H. Shank, general superintendent of the Yough Manor Lumber Co., and the Manor Land and Oakland Railroad Co., had several railroad wrecks last week. The loss to the company was slight but the loss of time of clearing up the wrecks was considerable.

Martha, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Huff, who has been sick for the last three weeks, has entirely recovered. She was attended by Dr. Mason.

The barrel factory is running in full blast under the skillful management of Harry Krug.

Henry Krug has been absent from his home at this place for the past ten days, looking after his extensive business interests elsewhere.

Geoge Sliger, the champion off-bearer on the large mill at this place, worked six days last week, but says that he is bound to have one day off this week to hunt groundhogs. George says that he would sooner eat groundhog than chicken,

S. A. Kendall, of Meyersdale, Pa., J. L. Kendall, of Pittsburg, Pa., and Judge U. S. Kendall, of Fairmont, W. Va., owners of the Yough Manor Lumber Co., were here Monday and Tuesday looking after their extensive interests.

Everybody around here is rejoicing because the legislature had the good sense to incorporate our sister town Friendsville. Kendall and Friendsville people have interests in common and as we have good prospects for a public highway to connect the two towns we will become practically one and the same town, even though we are two miles a part.

J. H. Black, the hustling life insurance man of Meyrsdale, transacted buisness here several days last week.

Some of young people will attend the Friendsville Normal school this sping.

Conrad Felker met with an accident last week which has disabled him for the present.

There are but few Kendall people attending court at Oaklnd this week, which is complimentary rather than derogatory, as our citizens are respectable and law abiding. But we do not want it infered that those who do attend court are anything else.

Public Sale of Personal Property.

The undersigned will offer for sale at his farm, known as the "Hook Farm," about one mile from Friendsville, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m., on Thursday, March 29th, 1904, the following personal property, to-wit: 1 dark gray horse, 5 years old, 1 black mare, in foal, same age, 3 milch cows, 1 yearling colt, 6 two-year old cattle, 3 yearlings, 4 hogs, and a lot of hay and straw, and a lot of corn, wheat, oats and potatoes, 1 mowing machine (McCormick), good as new, 1 two-horse hayrake, 1 two-horse buggy, 1 spring-tooth harrow, 1 grain drill (Superior), 1 sled, 1 Oliver chilled plow, 1 hill-side plow, 1 shovel plow, 1 double shovel plow, 1 double set buggy harness, new, 1 double set work harness, 1 single set buggy harness, 1 riding saddle and bridle, 1 grain cradle, grind stone, 1 iron kettle, rakes and pitchforks, cow chains and log-chains, 2 cross cut saws and 2 hand saws, 2 strans sleigh bells, crow bars, sledges, 1 cooking stove, 1 heating stove, 2 bedsteads, 1 sewing machine, 1 double-barrel shot gun, 1 cupboard, 1 extension table and a lot of bacon, chairs, glass ware, crocks, carpet, dishes and a lot of other things too numerous to mention.

TERMS.—All sums under $5, cash on day of sale; sums over $5, a credit of six months, with interest, with approved note, will be given purchasers. No property to be removed until terms of sale are complied with.

D. K. HARRING.

SERIOUSLY INJURED AT CRELLIN

A Mill Employe, Struck and Rendered Unconscious for 20 Hours.

Arthur Frantz, a youth of seventeen years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Frantz, of Crellin, and employed as an operator on the lath mill of the Preston Lumber and Coal Company's works at the above place, was struck on the side and back of his head by a piece of timber which was ejected by the machine and seriously injured. As a result of the blow he was entirely unconscious for a period of twenty hours. He rallied from the shock, however and is in a fair way to recover. The accident took place last Thursday.

Holy Week Services at St. Peter's Church.

Palm Sunday—Masses at 8 and 10.30 o'clock. The palms will be distributed before the last mass.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday—Mass at 8 o'clock, followed by a meditation appropriate for the day.

Holy Thursday—Feast of the Institution of the Holy Eucharist. High Mass at 8.30. In the evening at 7.30 a sermon on the Holy Eucharist will be delivered by Rev. D. J. Ryan of the Catholic University, Washington, D. C.

Good Friday—Mass of the Presanctified and Veneration of the Cross at 7.30. Way of the Cross will be read at 3 in the afternoon.

Father Ryan will again deliver the sermon in the evening at 7.30. Subject, "Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Holy Saturday—Morning office and blessing of the Easter water at 8 o'clock.

Easter Sunday—Low mass at 7.30; high mass and sermon at 10.30; night prayers and benediction at 7.30.

House Stoned.

A house situated on the extreme western end of Oak street and bearing an unsavory reputation, was stoned by some unknown person or persons last Sunday evening about nine o'clock. The inmates of the building, several in number shouting for the police alarmed that entire portion of the town. There is hardly a whole pane of glass in the building as a result of the fusilade of stones hurled against it. No arrests have been made in connection with the affair.

Funeral of Mr. Conner.

The funeral of Mr. John Conner, whose death resulted from injuries sustained in an accident Wednesday of last week on the B. & O. railroad, took place from the residence of his mother, Mrs. Levi Conner, on Lee street, Cumberland. Services were held in St. Michael's Catholic church by Father S. J. Clark, assisted by Father Nolan, after which interment was made in St. Michael's cemetery.

Hustling Store.

The Hustling Store at Mountain Lake Park wants to close out all clothing, hats, caps, a thousand yards of dark prints, piece goods, etc., at cost and less than cost. There is a large amount of these goods to sell and low prices will be maintained until all are gone. Some extra bargains will be found among these goods. Will offer also at low prices a large and select stock of timothy and clover seed. 52-4t.

will be paid for any information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person damaging our store window by scratching same with some sharp instrument. BOLDEN & BROWN.

Surveyor of the Port Ravenscroft was in Oakland on business last Saturday.

Do you eat? If not, why not? Get the habit. Try White's restaurant, Railroad street.

Mrs. F. H. Babb, of Keyser, West Va., was the guest Tuesday of Miss Nell Offutt at her home on Second street.

Mr. John E. Gnagey, of Accident, foreman of the grand jury at this term of Court, made this office a very pleasant visit Monday evening.

Mrs. M. L. Scott, who was in the eastern cities last week purchasing a spring stock of millinery goods, arrived home Saturday evening.

Major J. M. Burns, of Morgantown, is in Oakland this morning being on his way home from a visit of a week to Washington and Annapolis.

Joe White has opened a first-class restaurant on Railroad street. He will be pleased to serve the general public with all the delicacies of the season.

Mr. J. M. Conneway, was at Swanton last Saturday where he became a member of the Grange organized at a meeting of the farmers held there that day.

Hon. Ferdinand Williams, ex-Judge of this circuit, was in Oakland Tuesday evening on professional business. Judge Williams has many warm friends and admirers in Oakland who are always glad to greet him.

MUCO-SOLVENT is the remedy which should be used for every sore throat, because it is also a specific for the sore throat which precedes and accompanies diphtheria or scarlet fever. See advertisement in another column.

Mrs. C. E. Jaseph, nee Nelson, of Evansville, Ind., is here as the guest of her brother Mr. Thomas Nelson. From here Mrs. Jaseph will go to Pittsburg to visit her mother and other relatives.

Mrs. W. Y. Waltz, of Howesville, W. Va., who visited the family of the venerable Rowan White in Oakland several days recently, returned home Tuesday morning. Mrs. Waltz was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Margery.

Attorney Thomas J. Peddicord, who spent the winter in Washington, arrived home Friday afternoon and is engaged in court this week. Both Mr. and Mrs. Peddicord were extremely ill during almost the entire time the latter still being confined to her room in the above city.

Mr. Morgan W. Orr, of Hiorra, W. Va., who with his family occupied the Nelson property last summer, has rented Mr. A. D. Naylor's house on First street and will take possession shortly. Mr. Naylor, with his family, will occupy Crook's Crest, which he purchased some months ago.

A freight breakman, injured at Anderson, a few miles west of Rowlesburg, was brought to Oakland last Thursday afternoon in an unconscious state and taken to the McComas Sanitarium where he was examined and restoratives administered. He rallied and recovered to such an extent as to allow his discharge, going from here to his home at McKeesport the same night.

Mr. Charles D. Smith assistant prosecuting attorney of Parsons, W. Va., spent Sunday in Oakland. Mr. Smith has announced his candidacy for the nomination of the office he now holds as deputy at the primary election soon to be held in Tucker county. He has the best wishes of many Oakland people for his success.

We regret to learn that Rev. S. M. Miller, who has been pastor of the Presbyterian church here two or three years, contemplates resigning his pastorate within a few weeeks and going into another field. Mr. Miller and his estimable family have made many warm friends during their stay in Oakland, all of whom will regret to learn of their intended departure.

Hon. Patrick Finzel, of Finzel, Md., and H. W. Farner, the well known hotel man of Sand Patch, were pleasant callers on Wednesday morning. Mr. Finzel informed us that the Piney Run Oil & Gas company will be ready to start to sink their first test hole about the first of May. The extremely cold weather of the past winter has held them back greatly, but in the meantime the officers have been busily engaged disposing of stock and getting ready to begin operations when spring opens.—Meyersdale Republican.

Mrs. A. L. Dent, of Baltimore, is in Oakland as a representative of the Prisoners' Aid Association of Maryland. Mrs. Dent's visit to Oakland is for the purpose of raising funds with which to carry on the work of the Association, namely, the promotion of the temporal and spiritual welfare of those in prison or lately discharged therefrom, including the inmates of reformatories and almshouses. The recent fire in Baltimore has greatly handicapped the efforts of the officers in raising money with which to proceed with the work, thus explaining why outside aid is being solicited. A great many of the business and professional men of Oakland contributed liberally toward the fund.

At the city election held over in Oakland, Md., this week, the entire Republican ticket was elected. The Democracy didn't get a smell. The Mountain Democrat, owned and operated by Editor Litzinger of the Grafton Leader, was the organ of the opposition to the Republican ticket, and went down in defeat with the ticket. Bro. Litzinger may be well enough equipped in newspaporial ability to conduct a Democratic journal in Western Maryland spontaneously with the Grafton Leader, which he conducts in West Virginia, but he ought to be able to deliver the goods in the town of the state of which he is a resident before he attempts to make politics for a city of a state of which he is not a resident.—Grafton Sentinel.

ACROSS HIS PATH

"WELL, my lad, it's good to have you back once more."

"Thanks, Uncle Harvey; it's very kind of you to say so."

"Are you really better?"

"Sound as a drum! Never felt better in my life. There is nothing like New Zealand air, after all."

"So I should judge!" exclaimed Sir Hervey Ralston, a world of affection in eye and voice, as he surveyed the sunburnt face before him.

"Talking of health, you don't look much amiss yourself, Uncle Hervey; which, under the circumstances, is not surprising."

Sir Henry found his sunny smile infectious. "Perhaps not. You will be able to judge for yourself this evening. There is a function at Lady Wolverton's, and, although I am sorry it occurs on the night of your return, I thought you would prefer to come."

Stifling his disappointment, Ralston rejoined: "By all means, Uncle Hervey. I would not have you change your plans on my account for the world. Besides which, I am anxious to make the acquaintance of my future aunt."

Sir Henry laughed. "I never looked at it in that light before. She is younger than you, my boy."

"And so are you in many ways," retorted Ralston, stoutly. "You are a generation younger than most men of 45, Uncle Hervey. You know you are."

The deprecating, almost wistful look called forth by his words was not lost upon the younger man, who hastened to aver: "'I was desperately glad to hear your piece of news; found the letter waiting for me at Santa Cruz. You are much too good to die a bachelor, so I shall kick my heels with a light heart at your wedding, notwithstanding the back seat now in store for yours to command."

The laugh with which he ended was not a natural one, and his lips quivered under the fair mustache. The undivided affection of many years' standing, affection that between uncle and nephew was almost unique, was undivided no longer.

A drive of half an hour brought them to Sir Hervey's house.

"H'm!" observed Ralston, with a glance at the newly painted front. "Festive arrangements beginning early. Which is the happy day?"

"The sixth of April," replied Sir Hervey, leading the way into the house.

"And this is the tenth of February; it will be here in no time."

"I am glad you are back before April, lad. I began to think Dunedin was to claim you as a permanency, and I want you as best man for the occasion."

Hugh Ralston's eyes shone with pride. "I feel honored, Uncle Hervey. Any pretty bridesmaids to the fore?"

"You will probably meet one or two of them this evening. We have not much time to lose. You know your room."

Lady Wolverton's receptions were always well attended. In her position as queen of society in which she moved she had been ably seconded by her daughter, Adelaide, whose engagement to Sir Hervey Ralston she viewed with unalloyed delight. His immense wealth was an undisputed fact, their own property being known only to mother and daughter. How much of the achievement of Sir Hervey's desire had been due to the maternal pressure brought to bear upon the girl was not realized by the latter herself, so subtle and ingenious had Lady Wolverton's tactics been.

"Now for the fray," murmured young Ralston as they mounted the staircase; "the usual crush is evidently in store."

They had entered the reception room, and there, standing under the friendly light of a hanging lamp, Ralston saw the most beautiful girl he had ever in his life beheld.

"Ah!" exclaimed Sir Hervey, the blood coursing through his veins with a rapidity almost boyish. "Come, Hugh, and let me have the pleasure of presenting you; it is one to which I have long looked forward."

Adelaide Wolverton had seen them and was ready with a gracious welcome for the nephew about whom she had heard so much.

"And this is 'Hugh,'" she said. "You must not expect me to call you anything else, for your name has become a household word among us, has it not?" She turned to Sir Hervey, who met the shy, sweet glance with one of gratitude. That these two, whom he loved better than all the world besides, should be friends, was his one desire—a desire that seemed likely to be fulfilled as the evening wore away.

"Tell me," said Adelaide Wolverton some two hours later, "that you do not look upon me as an interloper. I was desperately afraid of you before I saw you."

Ralston laughed. "And what did you fear in me?" he asked.

"I feared your jealousy," was the prompt reply, "for I knew how much you and Sir Hervey had been to each other. Jealous people are so unreasonable, are they not?"

"So I should imagine."

"Ah, the conditional mood. That is delightful. Then you do not bear me any ill will?"

Ralston looked at the upturned face and rejoined: "Ill will? How could I bear you anything but the very reverse?" With grandiloquence he tried to cover his embarrassment, but Adelaide Wolverton was not deceived. She knew, and knew also that Ralston was aware of her knowledge, that their meeting had proved no ordinary one. For love had awakened, a love that would never sleep again.

"I see," she said, slowly unfurling her fan, "your emotion is due merely to gratitude. Mr. Ralston, how long have you been away from England?"

The change of tone and subject was not lost upon Ralston. They had been treading on delicate ground, and, thankful for the deviation, he replied: "Two years this month, but it seems like four—I have seen and done so much in the time."

Turning to the girl beside him he noted the shade of bitterness that had crept over her face, and somehow as he looked he knew that she was not happy in her engagement. A wave of pity for Sir Hervey welled up in his heart, for the baronet idolized his young betrothed.

Sir Hervey Ralston, honorable and clear-souled himself, incapable of subterfuge or pretense, was never ready to imagine evil of any shape in others. And if during the weeks that followed it seemed to him that Adelaide grew more and more impassive, while a spirit of unrest had seized upon his nephew, he strove to see no manner of connection.

And what about Hugh?

At one and the same time had the gates of heaven and hell been opened to him, and he reveled in his bliss, only to writhe in the agony involved. No words on the subject had he and Adelaide exchanged, thus far they had been loyal to Sir Hervey. But Hugh smiled bitterly as he acknowledged to himself the limitations of that loyalty. None knew better than he the subtlety of love's confessions.

On the evening of the last day in March he waited nervously for his uncle's approach to the smoking-room, which had been the scene of many a confidential talk before his voyage to New Zealand. Sir Hervey's step seemed to have lost its lightness, or so it seemed to Hugh, as he listened to its drawing near. He was later, too, in joining him than was his wont. Had any suspicion crossed his mind? Were his thoughts of next week's happiness unalloyed, or were they shadowed by a vague yet unmistakable cloud?

Hugh Ralston wondered, but said nothing as his uncle entered the room. The latter, with his usual precision and neatness, lit a cigar, seated himself, and was soon engrossed in the pages of the evening paper.

Thankful to escape the customary evening chat, Hugh paced monotonously up and down the room, with temples throbbing and the blood surging through his veins. How could he broach the subject that to-night must be faced once and for all?

"My dear boy," said Sir Hervey at length, glancing over the top of his paper, "could you not sit down? You seem restless to-night."

Hugh dropped into the nearest chair. Silence reigned for full five minutes, a silence that Ralston broke by saying, with the composure born of despair: "I cannot stand England after all, Uncle Hervey. I am off again next Saturday. You can do without me on the sixth, can you not?" He laughed a little curiously as he added: "I am hardly a necessary part of the play."

Sir Hervey folded his newspaper, laid it on the table and deliberately adjusted his glasses before looking in his nephew's direction. "Do I understand you aright? You prefer not to be with me on the day of my marriage?"

Hugh Ralston bowed his head.

Sir Hervey rose from his chair and instinctively the younger man did the same, a movement that brought them face to face as the words: "You dare not be with me!" broke from the baronet's lips.

The eyes of the two men met, and the soul of each was read. Then as Hugh leaned on the mantelpiece, burying his face on his arms, with a groan, it was the elder man who proved the stronger, who first brought light into the darkness that had descended.

Hugh was conscious at last of the pressure of a hand upon his shoulder, and as through a vast space and time he heard the voice of Sir Hervey saying: "It is well, my boy. I am not worthy of her, and might not—and should not—have made her happy. You must not blame yourself; far from it. I am going now to Lady Wolverton's and—will—release her." The last words were wrung from lips that were growing pale. Sir Hervey walked slowly to the door. Hugh had never moved.

Turning round as his fingers closed over the handle, the uncle said, imploringly: "Don't, my lad! Don't take it so to heart. I shall get over it, and you—you will be happy, as you deserve to be."

Corn, Corn, Corn.

Were the corn of the seven states loaded on wagons, 40 bushels to the load, and placed so the heads of the horses would come just to the rear end-board of the preceding wagon, and it were possible for this line of march to cover the land and sea, an average year's crop from these seven corn-growing states would make a complete belt of corn wagons six times around the world. Place the crop of 1902 in cars holding 500 bushels each, and allow 40 feet for car and coupling, and we would have a continuous freight train 38,378 miles long. After considering these figures one readily believes that, in the list of cereals, corn stands first in point of acreage, yield and value.—Walter H. Olin, in Four-Track News.

When His Troubles Will Begin.

A Chinaman has been made a lieutenant in a California regiment. His troubles will begin, says the Chicago Record-Herald, when he goes around to ask the colonel's consent to marry his daughter.

ADMIRAL SOTOKICHI URIU.

Admiral Uriu, the hero of the Japanese naval attack on Chemulpo, was among the first of his nation to be educated in the naval academy at Annapolis. He was a close student while there, and acquired a thorough all-round knowledge. Outside of his studies his chief interest lay in religious work. He is not only a Christian in theory, but he has lived his life according to his profession. At Annapolis he was president of the Young Men's Christian association, and often led and addressed meetings. After leaving Annapolis he studied in various technical schools in England and then returned to Japan as an aide in the admiralty.

WERE ENEMIES, ARE CHUMS

Two Neighbors, on Anything But Cordial Relations, Forgot Conventionalities at a Fire.

"It is curious how a fire will make people forget conventionalities," said an M street woman to a Washington Post reporter. "For two years I've lived where I live now, and I've never made the acquaintance of my next-door neighbor. Indeed, what with the birds she keeps and my pet cat, we've gone beyond being mere strangers, and have become almost open enemies. We've looked the other way when we chanced to meet, and the atmosphere has been anything but cordial.

"The night of the fire at the church near us I flew to the window at the first sound of the engines. I couldn't persuade my husband to put on his coat and go with me, so, as fires have a perfectly irresistible fascination for me, I dashed out alone. Almost the first person I saw was an intoxicated negro, and I simply reached out and took hold of a strange woman's arm. She was alone in the crowd, as I was, and we clung together for support for a half hour or so. We talked as if we'd known each other always, and it wasn't until I was chilled enough to think of going home that I really looked at the woman's face. It was my next-door neighbor, and we both laughed when each recognized the other.

"We went off home like old cronies, and had a cup of hot tea together before we parted. I like her immensely, and I hope she likes me. We've been marketing together twice, and once to the matinee. We're going to be chums, and if there hadn't been a fire in the neighborhood, I suppose we'd have gone on forever detesting each other."

Danger of Cremation.

Dr. Braunstein, of Wepperfurth, according to the London Mail, has been arrested on a charge of murdering his wife, whose body was cremated by his instructions. In November the doctor married a lady in Halle, her fortune amounting to £7,500 in ready money. Immediately after the wedding the couple left Halle for a trip abroad, and shortly afterward news was received that the bride had died suddenly. Suspicion was aroused, and the doctor is now accused of poisoning his wife. Owing to the cremation of the remains, however, there is no possibility of the body being examined for traces of poison, and the charge being thus either substantiated or refuted.

UNABLE TO ACCOMMODATE.

Millionaire Wanted Cash After Banking Hours—Time Locks Wouldn't Yield to Even His Credit.

A well known millionaire hastily entered a few days ago the bank where he carried a large deposit, says the New York Evening Post. He had left his pocketbook home and wanted cash. The bank was sorry, but could not accommodate him. It was past four o'clock, the vaults were closed and the executive staff had gone home.

The subordinate officers held a quick council, and one of them thus described the result:

"We piled up every cent we had in our clothes, then we went through the clerks and had every man in the establishment turn his pockets inside out. The customer was many times a millionaire, and could secure from us any day whatever sum he needed. But the time locks were set, and the best we could do was $50 in cash. He stuffed the roll in his pocket and hurriedly went on his way. We did not even ask for a memorandum, knowing that he detested details, and that a subsequent word with his secretary was all that would be needed to reimburse the bank."

The incident may be taken as illustrating, first, the limit which is drawn in the control of banks by great financiers, of which so much has been lately heard; second, the advisability of presenting checks before three p. m., and, third, the absorbing power of great wealth and credit over the surplus cash of small capitalists.

Bulldog Scared Away Guests.

A writer tells how a bulldog scared away the guests bidden to a lady's reception. The hostess was waiting in her parlor. She heard carriages arrive, heard the front gate open, but no guests appeared. "The situation became puzzling. At last the lady of the house went out to see if perchance the paving and the steps had suddenly crumbled away and left an aching void. Not at all. On opening the front door she found herself confronted with the cause of the phantom visitors—Rex, in his most amiable and complacent mood, sitting, peaceful and majestic, on the top step, whither he had dragged his kennel, a featherweight to so powerful a creature, after him. No pedestrian visitor, no card-laden delegate of 'carriage folk,' had ventured to affront that lordly presence."

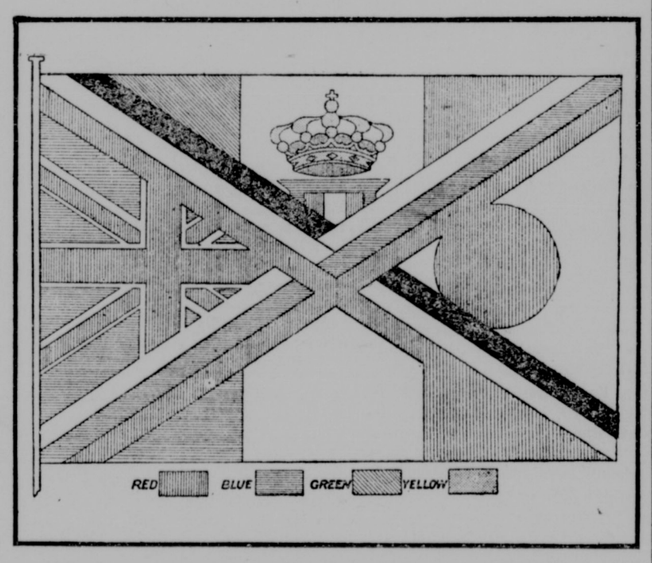
The world's typewriting record is held by a woman, who has accomplished the remarkable feat of writing 20,400 words in six hours. She had only ten minutes' rest and refreshed herself with pickles and charlotte russe.

AN INTERNATIONAL FLAG.



Six nations have troops stationed in some of the neutral ports of China, and in these cities the Russians, Japs, Germans, French, British and Italians live together in unity. The international clubs in the treaty ports have united on a flag, of which we give a picture. At the top is the green, white and red of Italy, below is the blue, white and red of France, on the left the union flag of Great Britain, and opposite is the Japanese emblem. Downward from right to left is the black, white and red of Germany, and crossing this is the white, blue and red of Russia. The United States and Austria happen to be outside this international comity.

New Excuse.

In the Portland municipal court recently a woman got to the limit of excuses by saying that an apparent drunkenness was in reality only a desperate attempt on her part to break in a pair of new shoes and at the same time to walk on ice. Judge Hill smiled but gave her 30 days.—Bangor News.

A severe case of Ovarian Trouble and a terrible operation avoided. Mrs. Emmons tells how she was saved by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am so pleased with the results obtained from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I feel it a duty and a privilege to write you about it.

"I suffered for more than five years with ovarian troubles, causing an unpleasant discharge, a great weakness, and at times a faintness would come over me which no amount of medicine, diet, or exercise seemed to correct. Your Vegetable Compound found the weak spot, however, within a few weeks—and saved me from an operation—all my troubles had disappeared, and I found myself once more healthy and well. Words fail to describe the real, true, grateful feeling that is in my heart, and I want to tell every sick and suffering sister. Don't dally with medicines you know nothing about, but take Lydia E. AGRICULTURE IN WESTERN CANADA.

Its Grain Fields, Ranching Lands, Dairying Resources.

The Editor of the Wisconsin Agriculturist, who was one of a party of editors of agricultural papers, took a trip through Canada during the past spring, writes to his paper in the following strain:—

The reason of his visiting Canada was to satisfy himself that the reports coming to his paper regarding the wonderful resources of that country were accurate. In view of the wonderful settlement that was going on there, many from this country crossing the line in search of permanent homes, and in view of what he had heard in regard to conditions of soil, water, climate, topography, fuel, grasses, rainfall, markets, etc., and also the influence which these have had on the present and future agriculture, he deemed it necessary to make an extended trip through all of the above territory.

In speaking of the Province of Manitoba, he says:—

"The Province of Manitoba comprises within its limits the far-famed grain-growing valleys of the Assiniboine and Red Rivers. Although called the Prairie Province of Canada, Manitoba has large areas of forests, numerous rivers and vast water expansions.

"The soil is a rich, deep, mould, or loam, resting on a deep clay sub-soil. It is well adapted to wheat growing, giving a bountiful yield of the finest quality, known the world over as No. 1 hard wheat. During the past ten years the growth of wheat and other grains has steadily increased, until now the production, by 35,000 farmers, reaches 100,000,000 bushels. Of the 23,000,000 arable acres in Manitoba, probably not one-half of it is occupied. Cultivated grasses yield about two tons per acre, and native grasses a ton and a half.

"There can be no question but that dairying will become a great industry throughout the north-west, and especially cheese making, as the climate is favorable and similar to that of Ontario.

"Crops grown are wheat, barley, oats, flax, rye, peas, corn, for fodder, brome, potatoes, roots, etc. The soil is very fertile, and moisture ample. The climate is good, and the growing season, while not quite so long as in Wisconsin, matures crops as the sun shines much longer, rising about four o'clock and shines until about nine at night. One can easily read a newspaper at 10 p. m. The long days make growth fast, and push crops to maturity ahead of frost.

"The ranching, the wheat growing, and the mixed farming belts all cross over Assiniboia. The yield and the quality of wheat raised along the main line of the Canada Pacific Railway, at such places as Indian Head and its allied districts, have become famous. Its possibilities are shown by the average of tests made at the experimental farm in 1902, when eleven varieties of the most suitable wheat, sown on April the 19th, were cut in 130 days; and yielded 4,314 pounds of straw, and 43 bushels and 2 pounds of grain per acre. Its mixed farming area is excellent, its range cattle, horses and sheep are the equals of any seen in the north-west, and its treeless portion is underlaid with coal. The town of Medicine Hat is heated and illuminated with natural gas. There are abundant deposits of brick, pottery and fire clays."

Agents of the Canadian Government will be pleased to mail an Atlas to any one interested, and also all other information regarding railway rates, etc.

Rabbit Cannery in Kansas.

It is said that a rabbit cannery will be established in Kansas City in the near future. Rabbits are canned in such a manner that when put on the market they are sold as chicken, lobster, etc. The establishment of this factory will be welcomed by farmers on the shortgrass country, as it would afford a good market for the sale of an animal that is now looked upon more in the light of a pest than anything else.

A Physician's Advice.

Yorktown, Ark., March 7th.—Dodd's Kidney Pills must not be confounded with the ordinary patent medicine. They are a new discovery, a specific for all diseases of the Kidneys and have been accepted by physicians only after careful tests in extreme cases. Dr. Leland Williamson, of this place, heartily endorses Dodd's Kidney Pills "as a remedy for the various forms of the diseases of the Kidneys, pains in the back, soreness in the region of the Kidneys, foul-smelling urine and cloudy or thickened condition of the urine, discharges of pus or corruption, Gout, Rheumatism, Inflammation and Congestion of the Kidneys and all kindred complaints." Continuing, he says:

"I could mention many cases in which I have prescribed Dodd's Kidney Pills with success. For instance, Mr. Robert Weeks, farmer, malaria haematuria or swamp fever three times, kidneys weakened, continual pain and soreness in back, which made him very nervous, had a little fever and sometimes chilly. Urine changeable, but generally very high-colored, an old chronic case who had taken much medicine with little effect. After taking Dodd's Kidney Pills about six weeks, he was entirely cured and had gained fifteen pounds in weight. The last time I saw him, he was the picture of perfect manhood."

HE WANTED TO FIGHT.

Union Soldier Deserted His Post to Join a Regiment at the Front.

"A good many soldiers," said the doctor, according to the Chicago Inter Ocean, "deserted to keep out of a fight. I never knew but one man who deserted to get into a fight, and his story is worth telling. Peter Mayville enlisted in the Ninth Vermont regiment, which, with 12,000 other union soldiers, surrendered to the confederates under Jackson, September 15, 1862, at Harper's Ferry. Under the terms of the surrender all the enlisted men were at once paroled, and the Ninth Vermont was sent to Camp Douglas, Chicago, to guard confederate prisoners, until exchanged.

"This was a great disappointment to Peter Mayville, and, as exchange was delayed, the Vermonter became restive, and then rebellious. One dark night he slipped out of camp and never returned. He was reported a deserter, and was so regarded by the men who knew him best. Mayville made his way to Pennsylvania, and enlisted, under the name of Peter Barry, in a regiment on its way to the front. He saw hard service at once, and at Gettysburg lost both arms, and received other wounds. Not believing that he could recover, he told his story to the surgeon, and in the end was sent home to Vermont, in as good condition as was possible under the circumstances.

"Mayville had been something of a character in his home neighborhood, and was very generally known as Peter Newcome. This name was given him because his young Canadian wife, in the year they came from Quebec to Vermont, was constantly complaining to the neighbors when her husband was off carousing: 'Pete no come.' Pete was so persistent an offender that the neighbors came to call him Pete Nocome, or Newcome, and this clung to him after he reformed, and he was better known as Peter Newcome than as Peter Mayville. So when he returned, and, as Peter Barry, was given a pension of $72 a month, there was less comment than there would have been under other circumstances.

"Barry did not deny that he had deserted from the Ninth Vermont, but he made it clear that he deserted because, with fighting going on in front, he could not bear the thought of idling away his time at Camp Douglas. As he could not be exchanged, and as he could not get into a fight as Peter Mayville, because Mayville was a paroled prisoner, he took the bull by the horns, and deserted into a fighting regiment. The pension officials conceded that Mayville's notions as to oath and parole were a little loose, but there was no doubt about the success of his plan to get into a fight. I saw him only a few years ago, a well-preserved, prosperous Vermont farmer, an armless hero to a people, who didn't care under what name he drew a pension."

Nine Pairs of Brothers.

About brothers in companies? In company I, Third Ohio, were nine pairs of brothers: George and Charlie Merrill, Curly and John Vanbrimer, John and Charles Hiskett, John and Charles Benedict, Milo and Simon Welch, Jasper and M. Mann, Joseph and S. K. Moore, Edward and L. Reed. Lieut. Moore was left in hospital at Tigert Valley, W. Va., in October, '61. George and Charlie Merrill lost their lives at the battle of Perryville, Ky.; Curly Vanbrimer lost an arm at that battle; John died in hospital. John Benedict was wounded at the battle of Stone river, and died in hospital. Lieut. Reed was captured on the Streight raid, near Rome, Ga., and was sent to Charleston, S. C., with other officers, to be placed under fire of the union batteries during the bombardment of the city. He escaped and was hid away by an old negro, but was taken down with the yellow fever and died. Three pairs of those brothers (of which the writer is one) are still living. We went through all the battles and marches of the regiment from start to finish. We were in the Streight raid, and were captured by Forrest near Rome, Ga., were paroled and exchanged, and sent to Camp Chase, O.—John A. Duncan, in National Tribune.

THE SERGEANT'S RETREAT.

Record-Breaking Run of a Union Soldier Under a Rain of Bullets.

I have been reading about the siege of Port Hudson as viewed by a confederate, and the reminder moves me to call up some recollections of my own, writes J. P. Lloyd, in the National Tribune. I remember when the first shell exploded over us—how my feet felt like pulling my body out of danger! How, just then, we were ordered into line of battle and moved up through the woods till we came in sight of the enemy's frightful big guns and their savage infantry with terrible rifles. We were ordered to retire then to the woods, where the confederates shelled us for all they were worth, cutting off great big limbs from the trees, and the limbs fell on us! We couldn't stand it long, and were moved forward into the open ground. There we lay down, and they got a cross-fire on us and let us have shells that exploded among us and solid shot that tore up the whole face of the landscape, and us with it. Then they got a position from which they could rake our line from end to end, and they added grape and canister to our dose, and it was so hot there that we couldn't lie still, and we got up without orders—and we were just as ready to go forward out of that storm, as to go back to escape it. Gen. Dudley rode up and said we were the regiment for him.

Well, we drove the rebs in and we kept them there for 40 days.

I do not doubt that some of our boys will remember one day when we were sent out as alleged sharpshooters. We were to change from one hedge to another several rods nearer the enemy. We started too late, and it was light when we reached the first fence. I thought that we must obey the order to get to the second fence, light or dark, though the order was to get there in the dark. Therefore I said: "Now, boys, we have to get over that open ground mighty rapid, or there won't many of us get there!" and I gave the order to "forward, double-quick!" and ran ahead as I gave the order. By the time I got half way I found the confederate fire was so heavy, and the bullets so thick that I wanted cover the worst way; and I was almost sure that all of my comrades were dead or wounded by those bullets. I threw myself flat behind a small bunch of bushes, thankful for that much to protect me; but the bullets cut all of those bushes down almost as soon and as clear as a farmer could have done it with his brush-hook. I do not doubt that the rebs were sure that I was shot to pieces, for they let up on me. But I fooled them a plenty! I got up like a jack-in-the-box and retreated at a speed that I'm sure has never been beaten by civilized man afoot! Then they scared me worse than ever, for they opened their rifles on me again. I don't greatly doubt that every rifle in that fort was a repeater, and that the entire confederate army was in that fort, just then, every man with a rifle, and that every rifle was fired at me with a rapidity that broke its record. If I don't think so now, I felt then that that was about the situation. I'd have been willing to sell those zip-zippers for a cent a thousand, for they would have set me up for life, a millionaire!

However, I reached cover, and found all of the detail there! Confound them, not one had obeyed my order to "forward, double-quick." They searched me for bullets and found that the only wound I had suffered was where a bullet made a long cross-cut slit in the side of my blouse!

A Famous Flag.

The war department has received from William Clausen, of New York city, the old flag of the First New York fire zouaves. This was the flag carried by the command in the civil war, and is the emblem which the gallant Col. Ellsworth replaced on the staff of the mansion house at Alexandria, Va., when he removed the confederate flag, for which act he sacrificed his life. Mr. Clausen says he came into possession of the flag as a gift from Andrew Goven, who was treasurer of Ellsworth post, G. A. R., and the custodian of the flag. Mr. Clausen has the documents to prove that the flag is an authentic relic, and he has sent it to the war department with the understanding that it shall be added to the war collection in Cullum memorial hall at West Point.—Washington Post.

HOW TWO BEAUTIFUL WOMEN ESCAPED DREAD CATARRH BY USE OF PE-RU-NA.

Catarrh Robs Women of Health and Beauty. Pe-ru-na Makes Women Healthy and Beautiful.

Miss Amanda Johnson.

Miss Amanda Johnson, Fairchild, Wis., writes:

"I write to tell you how much Peruna benefited me. For a number of years I had pain in my head around my eyes, and I thought it was because my eyes needed treatment, so I went to an oculist and had glasses fitted to my eyes and wore them for some time, but felt no relief whatever. In fact, I felt worse than before, and came to the conclusion that the trouble was not with my eyes, but with my head and that it must be catarrh. As so many of my friends had used Peruna with benefit for this trouble, I thought I would try it. I was not sorry that I did so, for in a short time I began to improve, and in four weeks my eyes were in splendid condition, my general health was much improved and all the catarrh of the head was gone. I was glad to get rid of this trouble and am glad to endorse such a good medicine as Peruna."—Miss Amanda Johnson.

Miss Flora Hauser, 1032 S. New Jersey street, Indianapolis, Ind., writes:

"I think I must have been troubled with catarrh ever since I was very young, aggravated each time I caught a cold. This did not prove sufficiently serious to be obnoxious until last winter. Then my head and nose were so stopped up that I felt I must do something. Peruna was recommended to me by a friend. I used it for four weeks, and found to my relief that it cured me. I have not had a bit of trouble since. My head is clear, and I can safely affirm that Peruna cured me."—Miss Flora Hauser.

No Woman Afflicted With Catarrh Can Be Either Beautiful or Attractive.

Hundreds of Women Cured by Pe-ru-na of Annoying Catarrh.

DR. HARTMAN has probably done more than any other physician toward popularizing a means of escape from the facial deformities, such as watery eyes, twisted nose, offensive breath, dry cracked lips, due to the ravaging effects of catarrh.

He has made chronic catarrh a lifelong study. His remedy, popularly known as Peruna, is the most famous remedy for catarrh in existence.

Probably there is not a man or woman, boy or girl, within the bounds of the United States that has not heard of Peruna. By far the largest majority have used Peruna.

The multitude of people that have been cured of chronic catarrh by using Peruna can never be known.

Many a girl has regained her faded beauty, many a matron has lengthened the days of her comely appearance by using Peruna.

Peruna produces clean mucous membranes, the basis of facial symmetry and a perfect complexion.

The women have not been slow to discover that a course of Peruna will do more toward restoring youthful beauty than all the devices known to science.

While it is true that Peruna cures catarrh wherever located, yet it is advisable for everyone to use Peruna as a preventive and not wait until catarrh has fastened itself in some part of the system.

Peruna acts quickly and beneficially on the inflamed mucous membranes lining the different organs of the body.

Thus it will cure catarrh wherever located.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

The International Sunday School Lesson.

First Quarter. Lesson XIII. March 27, 1904.

Copyright, Davis W. Clark.

Review of the First Quarter

On the background of the Scripture narrative of the past three months nine persons stand in high relief. There is a back group—Herod, Herodias, and Salome. This is the Herod (Antipas) who mockingly clothed Jesus with royal robes and sent Him back to Pilate—the Herod who took a post-graduate course in the art of luxury at Rome, and finished it by his incestuous and adultrous connection with Herodias. The latter had ambition as her ruling vice. For it she had discarded her rightful but untitled husband, and married one who already sustained the relation of uncle and brother-in-law to her, though by doing so she displaced a loyal wife from her husband's side. Salome, Herodias's daughter by her first husband, seems only to have been a paragon of voluptuous beauty, skilled in the lascivious dance of the Orient.

From such bad company it is a relief to turn to the four apostles whom Jesus called. Three of them—Peter, James, and John—are destined to become very conpicuous in the narrative of the New Testament. It is honor enough for Andrew, however, that he brought his brother, Simon Peter, to Jesus.

Above all who have been named, John the Baptist is the towering personality. In his person and mission he seemed the last effort of Providence to awaken the Hebrew nation. Had he never uttered a word, his very self would have been a sermon. His plain fare and coarse raiment were a protest against purple and fine linen and faring sumptuously every day. He took some jutting rock for a pulpit, and had the whole heavens for a sounding-board and a river for a baptismal laver. Add to these scenic incidents the most searching speech that ever fell from human lips, and is it to be wondered that a whole nation went out to hear him, and went down into his font, confessing their sins? He was no reed, bowing obsequiously under the breath of imperialism. The burden of his preaching was the immanence of the kingdom of God. The application was a call to repentance and thorough reformation: the sign was baptism.

But a greater than John the Baptist appeares. When Jesus comes, all the persons of this narrative fade as the stars do when the sun rises. The only recorded incident of Jesus' boyhood is found in this narrative. It is only only one incident; but it analyzed it will be found to be the whole period in epitome—the spirit, traits, acquirements of Jesus before entering upon His public career. In the rapidly-shifting scenes of the vivid narrative, Jesus appeared as a candidate for baptism, and in this connection we have His second recorded utterance, "Suffer it to be so now." This first word of His publiministry identifies Him with humanity. It is as if He had said, "What is obligatory upon man is binding upon Me." From this radiant scene of inauguration Jesus is hurried to the somber place of his temptation. There, in His human soul, and with His human resourses, Jesus fought to a finish a subjective moral battle which included in its issues all the principles of His public career. The rejection of Jesus at Nazareth is His rejection by the nation in epitome. The synagogue had judicial prerogatives. Each was a little independent republic: each could pronounce sentence for a penal offense. This is exactly what the synagogue of Nazareth did. It excommunicated Jesus on the spot; it cast Him out judicially; it proceeded to put him to death in a legal manner. Jesus did not elude His enraged neighbors by either striking them with blindness or making Himself invisible to them. "He passed through the midst of them." They saw Him as He passed, but were powerless to detain Him.

Next in interest to the persons are the places named in the course of these lessons. The home of Jesus had a beautiful setting of physical scenery. Nazareth, with its white homes and abundant foliage, has been described as a handful of pearls in a goblet of emerald. Hermon, Tabor, Carmel, the sea, and Esdraelon were in sight. The impression made upon Jesus' mind is evident for its reproduction in His parables. From the provincial town we are transported to the ecclesiastical metropolis and to the golden and marble temple that could accommodate a quarter of a million worshipers. It was here, no doubt, that, the Messianic idea first dawned in Jesus' boyish consciousness. Next we go down to the bank of the most sacred river in the word—the Jordan—the scene of Jesus' baptism.

The Forty-day Mountain is the place marked by an ancient tradition as the scene of Jesus' temptation. The place is singularly in harmony with his experiences. It is "pathless desert dusky with horrid shades." The denuded rocks and reddened soil scorched by a burning sun, and "the sulphurous sea stretching like a shroud over the accursed cities—all this land of death mute and motionless as the grave—formed a fitting scene.

Macherus was the impregnable fortress-palace overlooking the Jordan Valley, where Herod Antipas kept his court, and gave the banquet to his officers, at which Herodias baited her hook with her daughter's modesty, and went angling in the pool of drunken revelry. Here John the Baptist was martyred.

The Sea of Galilee is an insignificant little pond, seven by fourteen miles, but when one considers the events which transpired there, it rises to be easily the most sacred and important sheet of water on the globe. For example, in this series of lessons it is at Galilee that the miraculous draught of fishes is taken; the disciples are called; the storm is calmed; and the five thousand are fed. On the shore of this lake stood Capernaum (City of Nathum), one of nine cities, the sites of which have all been defined. This was the city lifted to heaven by Jesus' residence there. The glittering fragments of the centurion given marble synagogue, with the conventional twisted foliage ornamentation greet the eye of the modern travelor, and remind him of the doom which Jesus pronounced on account of the spiritual obtuseness of its population. In passing there is an illustration of how Jesus sought places where the people were massed. Practically His entire public ministry was in Galilee. Josephus may exaggerate when he says that there were two hundred and fifty cities there of fifteen thousand each; but recent exploration shows that the territory was so thickly built over at that date as to make it practically a continuous village.

Child-Study and Sunday-School Method

When Correggio overlaid the dome of Parma with the frescoes which make its common plaster more precious than gold, for every figure of prophet or apostle he gave us a number of happy, cherub-like children, unconsciously, perhaps, he was copying the bible. A child's face peers out of almost every page. We see the boy Ishmael fainting near the angel-pointed fountain, Joseph in his iridescent coat, Moses in his wave rocked cradle, Samuel answering God's call in the mystic shade of the tabernacle, two boys raised to life—one by Elijah, the other by Elisha; the children singing "Hosanna" on Jesus' approach; the lad with five barley loaves and two fishes; Jesus healing a boy and the daughter of the woman of Tyre, and raising the daughter of Jairus; placing a child in the midst of the disciples. The series closes with the most significant of all—a child in Jesns' arms. We may well marvel at this prominence of childhood in the Bible. They are far from being overlooked. Promises and commands are given to children; rewards are offered. More miracles are worked upon children than any other one class of persons. We may well ask, "Why this prominence?" It can not be accidental. It must be designed. If we find the child in the Bible, the natural inference is that the Bible is for the child. Putting children in possession of their heritage in the Bible is the legimate and supreme function of the Sunday-school—a function which it is performing more intelligently and successfully than ever since its first institution. All workers in this department of the Church ought to know their calling, the importance and dignity of it. They should appreciate the honor and seek to make full proof of their ministry. This they are undoubtedly doing as never before.

DEER PARK.

We certainly were surprised last Saturday evening when the Deer Park Concert band came out and played us a fine selection. It was enjoyed.

Mrs L. D. Thrasher spent a few days in Oakland last week.

Miss Bessie Diehl, who has been spending part of the winter at Mr. Ed. Smouse's, has returned home to Truesdell Heights.

Mrs. James Griffin was an Oakland caller last Saturday.

Miss Nannie Roadaheaver, from Clover Dell farm, spent last Sunday with her friend, Miss Jessie Taylor.

Miss Mamie Steinhart is visiting Mr. and Mrs. William Hennen.

Rev. E. Manges paid a visit to Mr. S. P. Specht, last Saturday night and also preached a very interesting sermon on Sunday morning.

Miss Nellie Thrasher, who is teaching the Chadderton school, spent Sunday at her home in this place.

Mr. Earl Browning, of this place, left last Monday morning for Ocean Mines.

Mrs. T. W. Taylor, who has been spending a few days with friends and relatives in Terra Alta, W. Va., returned home last Wednesday morning.

Miss Emma Glotfelty and brother James spent a few days at home near McHenry last week on account of the illness of their mother, Mrs. Mahlon Glotfelty, but we are glad to say she is improving.

There has been a couple sled loads of our young folks attending big meeting at Mt. Lake Park.

We are sorry to say that Mrs. Shaffer is ill at her home in this place.

Miss Nellie Enlow of near Oakland, spent Sunday with her sister, Mrs. John Speicher.

Rumor says there is going to be a wedding near Deer Park before long.

Mr. Laurence Hennen, who is staying in Cumberland, spent a few days home last week.

Miss Florence Thrasher entertained a number of her friends Saturday evening with games.

Only one more week of school and some I suppose are glad of it.

Mr. Herbert Browning, Principal of the Deer Park school, was an Oakland caller Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. Brison Welch, from McHenry, were in town on business last Thursday.

Mr. James Glotfelty was an Oakland caller last Friday.

Mrs. Albert King and William Warnick and family left for their home in Ohio last Monday.

Miss C. Victoria Pysel, from Maple Heights, near this place, spent last Wednesday night with her friend Miss Ida Thrasher.

Mr. Gay Wheeler was an Oakland caller last Tuesday.

Mr. W. R. Coglan was an Oakland caller last Monday.

Mr. Frank Wheeler, of Pittsburg, spent Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Wheeler, of this place.

Mrs Eckerman has been very ill at her daughter's, Mrs. William Hennen, of this place, but we are glad to say she is improving.

Miss Katherine O'Donnell, of Mt. Lake Park, is visiting her friend Miss Osa Fisher.

We are sorry to say Mr. Joe Lashorn is not any better, but we hope he will soon improve.

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

Scientifically, spring begins today, but experimentally the conditions prevalent here are far from spring like. The whole scene without is wrapped in a sheen of ice, a heavy sleet is upon the trees, while from out the branches a robin may now and again be heard pouring forth a cheerful melody, giving the only touch of spring to the dreary scene.

An unusual run of water came to the sugar makers in this section, on last Sunday, and a few camp owners were out gathering to prevent large quantities from going to waste.

Dr. Stroup and family, of Friendsville, are visiting Mr. Stroup's parents, Rev. and Mrs. Stroup, at this time.

Mr. Peter G. Stark, who was drawn upon the jury, went to Oakland on Sunday to be present for court opening on Monday.

Mr. E. F. Durst, of Grantsville, is caring for Mr. Stark's interests here while the latter is absent.

Perhaps no feature of THE REPUBLICAN is more thouroughly apprectated by its readers at this time than the weekly letters from the state capital. We find that through these letters many persons are enabled to gather a better idea of the work of the Assembly than could be had from any other medium. The masterly speech made by Senator Palmer, and published in THE REPUBLICAN has called forth many complimentary remarks, and is approved in the strongest termsby the Republicans of this district.

The operations of thieves in this community are becoming more and more obnoxious, and the way meat, apples, flour, ground feed and grain are being carried off is terrorizing the community, and it is hoped the criminals will soon be caught.

"Frits" sat on the snaggy end of a nail keg, down in the corner grocery, and buried his mournful countenance in the depth of his toil hardened hands and soliloquised: "Blamed if I don't b'lieve that thar cider had pizen in it, an' twixt them blamed dorgs keepin' me way from the gals, an' the wimen tryin' to pizin me wid hard cider, it's a pesky poor show fer me in these parts, an' I reckon I'll go out West an' marry that rich Dutch gal and let Bittinger go to blazes" and he kicked the postmistresses' yaller dog through the window, and bit off a fresh chaw.

OF VALUABLE
REAL ESTATE
SITUATE NEAR SWANTON, GARRETT COUNTY, MARYLAND.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county passed in a cause wherein Albert Lewis Miller et al. are complainants and George W. Miller et al. are defendants, the same being No. 1254 on the Equity docket of said Court, the undersigned trustee will, on the 2nd Day of April, A D. 1904,

SATURDAY,
AT 11 O'CLOCK A. M.

in front of the Court House in the town of Oakland, Garrett county, Maryland, offer for sale at public auction

All those tracts or parcels of Land called "Much To Do About Nothing" and "Elk Lick," containing in the aggregate 822 Acres, more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed unto Margaret Miller, late of Allegany county, deceased, in a deed from J. W. S. Cochrane and David W. Sloan, trustees, bearing date the 22nd day of October, 1896, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, follos 410, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county.

The property is situated about two miles East of Swanton in Garrett county. The quality of the soil is good and there is much valuable timber on the property. There are also two large glades on the property, making it one of the finest grazing farms in the country.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by the decree, viz.: One-third of the purchase money cash; one-third in six months, and one-third in twelve months, or all cash, at the option of the purchaser. Deferred payments to be secured by the bonds of the purchaser with surety to the satisfaction of the trustee, and to bear interest.

THE MARYLAND GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

The Session Will Close Monday Next at Midnight.

LEGISLATURE EXCEEDINGLY DULL

About the Only Promise Made By the Democrats Fulfilled Was the Passage of the Disfranchisement Amendment—Garrett County Legislation.

[From our Special Correspondent.]
STATE HOUSE, ANNAPOLIS,
March 29th, 1904.

This week and Monday of next week sees the end of the General Assembly of 1904, unless, as is highly improbable, an extra session should for any reason be called. The old familliar last-week-hustle has pervaded the atmosphere for a week or more already, so everyone down here is entirely aware of the near approach of the session's close, and few are not glad of it. Old timers say of it that this has been one of the dullest if not the dullest session within their memory, and few to contradict the statement are to be found. Much has been done in the work of keeping up with the important drudgery of clearing away the files, certainly both houses are to be congratulated, for nothing in this regard justly lays this session nor the officers of this assembly open to criticism. For little else, however, will it be remarkable, and it will hardly be denied that much that has not been done was hoped and expected by many of this General Assembly.

True, the disfranchisement amendment has been passed, and on that score at least the Democratic managers need not feel that they promised much which they did not do. But even here on this single matter of this amendment the Governor and his party are badly at odds, and none would be very much surprised if the one man most responsible for the ultimate defeat of this amendment, is not the Governor himself, the man whom all would have justly expected from his remarks of a few months ago to find in the front ranks of the bill's enthusiasts.

The present status of the amendment is this and it was determined last Friday. It has been announced for some time that Mr. Warfield would not sign what is known as the Poe amendment, which has passed both houses and which is the very nearest and closest dodge known to get around the 15th amendment, and which Mr. Warfield objects to most because it disfranchises all non-property owning negroes, and at this time has not entirely given up hope that such a bill may be put through.

It is safe to say that it will not be, especially now because of the action of Friday, when on Mr. Gorman's motion the amendment was placed in the keeping of the clerk to the court of appeals, once and for all settling the question of whether or not the Governor shall veto the measure. The provisions of that bill are considered very drastic and for the reason that they are so complete that under the operation of it, should it ever become a law or a part of the constitution, no negro can vote.

The Haman bill, loaded with amendments so that Mr. Haman himself dosn't know his pet project passed the house today, leaving the snarl no nearer a settlement than before, for the Wilson bill which has passed the senate is as different from the bill which today passed the house as the original bill was from these two measures. It is not anticipated that much good will come from this session's oyster legislation.

The repeal of the mortgage tax too is having all sorts of a stormy passage, a committee having been put on from the two houses today in order to find out a way to get together on this most important measure. As it was the senate refused to concur in the house's amendments and the final disposition of the matter is now up to the compromise committee.

The election bill, the three judges bill, the elimination of the party designation on the ballot bill and the registration bill have all passsd the senate, resting on the house files before striking out into the rough waters ahead. For the house is likely to be a very stormy place for those bills, with its complete lack of organization and powerful opposition. The democrats in the house itself are anything but a unit on the advisability of these measures, and the Governor's opposition is reported to be pronounced.

Last week the first real genuine flurry of interest occured which has marked this session, that is if the senatorial fight be not counted, and possibly excepting the Baltimore county road bill fight as well. Delegate Feaga held up the democratic majority boldly and successfully by demanding the full reading of all bills, in order to force the recommittal of a local bill which he did not want to pass without his home delegation's first having passed on it. The Lewis road bill, the home measure which he was after reposed in his desk too before he let up in his filibustering tactics, a practice which the majority members for some hours were fearful would become prevalent.

Mr. Palmer's bill, introduced last Thursday, to authorize the Governor to appoint an additional justice of the peace for Jennings, in the Third district, was favorably reported today, but amended so as to apply to Friendsville, in the Second district instead of Jennings, in the Third.

Howard's bill, amending the Garrett county license law, introduced in the Senate on Wednesday last by Mr. Palmer, was today reported favorably. This measure was incorrectly stated in the last letter and applies only to district No. 5 and provides for 12 recommenders instead of 7, and they shall reside within one mile of the saloon instead of three. As this bill repeals a section of the old local option law it was necessary to recite that title in the bill, and was confused in making up the letter as providing for local option in Garrett county.

Howard's county commissioners' bill was similary treated today by the senate.

Mr. Howard's bill providing for suits in the defendant's district, pased the senate today. Of course this has already passed the house.

Letter to A. T. Mathews

Dear Sir: Here's a bully one.

Mr. Dooley (not of Chicago), painter, Lancaster, N H, got the job of painting the Episcopal parsonage. He was used to a paint, as pure as Devoe, but weak and short-measure—he didn't know it was weak or short-measure. Dooley surveyed the iob, and said it would take 20 gallons.

Mr. L. F. Moore, our agent, offered to give 10 gallon Devoe. Accepted of course.

Eleven gallons did it; the 10 plus 1.

Mr. Moore isn't painting parsonages on shares this year!

Yours truly

What a Granger Has to Say Concerning Farmers and Farm Methods.

The following communication was prepared and handed into this office a few days ago by a leader of the Grange movement in this county who requests its publication:

Farmers must remember that this is an age of organized effort, an age of rapid changes, and the methods of our fathers, however successful in the past, will not succeed now. New methods, new systems, thought and brain culture, must be applied in keeping with the changed conditions, to insure success. What the farmer needs now is, not more physical labor, but more thought. The farmer who expects to keep to the front must do so by the power of knowledge—cultured brain, not muscle. That farmer will succeed best who will spend one-fourth of all the hours he devotes to labor to mental labor, to thinking of and devising plans for conducting his business. The farmer who will spend a half day each week in attending the meeting of a good Grange will have his mind so quickened and sharpened by coming in contact with other minds that he will make and save more money in the course of the year than he would if he devoted all of his time to physical labor, to say nothing of the social pleasures to himself and family of meeting with his neighbors and their families.

All work and no play not only makes Jack a dull boy but makes a dense farmer. It is among such that confidence men and frauds in general find their victims. They work the hardest, live the poorest and it is seldom their children remain on the farm. Ask them if they take a good farm paper and they say they can't afford it—two cents a week for the best. Ask them to go to a Grange meeting once a week and they reply they hav'nt time, and yet these same men will pay $65 for a stove that they could get for $35 from a merchant, and take a half more time to do some kinds of work than a brother granger who has discovered how to do it.

Grange Meeting.

Swanton Grange No. 149, will meet at May's Hall at 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon, April 2nd, 1904. All members are requested to be present. Officers are to be installed.

Elizabeth Grange will meet at the Mosser House at 2 p. m. on Saturday.

GRAND JURY REPORT.

To the Honorable Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland:

The Grand Jury have the honor to report that they have thoroughly examined all the witnesses brought before them; have investigated each case and infraction of the law brought to their attention, and where the evidence justified against offending parties indictments have been returned.

In performing these duties 101 witnesses have been examined,—presentments have been made and —indictments found.

We beg the Court will accept our grateful acknowledgements for its timely instructions and patient forbearance in the discharge of our duties, and thank our State's Attorney for his prompt assistance.

In conformity with the law and the direction of the Court we have visited the public buildings.

The care and the neatness with which the records are kept in the office of the County Clerk are especially commendable.

The office of the County Treasurer and the office of the Orphans' Court were also open to our inspection and both showed that they were as well kept as the limited space would allow.

In the office of the County Commissioners we found that the assessment books are left standing on a table exposed to dirt and dust. We recommend that they be protected not only from dust and dirt but from possible destruction or loss by fire; otherwise this office was also in a commendable condition.

We visited the jail and found nineteen prisoners where there was only room for four. They were as well provided for as the limited room would permit. Most decidedly the county has outgrown the jail we have, in size and modern ideas of the sanitary conditions required in public buildings and render it a disgrace to our county.

Notwithstanding a bill has been introduced in the legislature embodying the recommendations of our last Grand Jury regarding the jail and courthouse, we feel that the County Commissioners have been derelict in many minor matters about the premises. The walks have been allowed to become very much dilapidated, the eave troughs have not been renewed causing the drip to wash the mortar out of the side of the building, the fencing about the premises is unsightly and insecure and the windows and doors in the Clerk's office badly out of repair.

Having as far as we are able concluded the duties for which we were assembled, we respectfully ask our dismissal at your hands.

All of which we respectfully submit.

J. E. GNAGEY, Foreman.

C. T. SWEET, } Clerks.

FRIENDSVILLE.

We are in the midst of a cold wave again.

J. W. McCullough is away in the interests of his business.

R. C. McCandlish, cashier, is at the county seat at this writing.

J. H. Cuppett and C. V. Guard, two of our prominent business men, were in Oakland a day or two last week.

Peter Kenny, of Mt. Savage, is employed as stenographer by the Bear Creek Lumber Co.

Mrs. Mary Frantz, of Johnstown, Pa., is visiting friends at this place.

Mrs. Geo. W. Kemp, of Harnedsville, Pa., is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E Bishoff, at this writing.

Miss Nina Wright, of Uniontown, Pa., it paying a visit to her relatives in this town.

Examiner Browning was a caller here last Saturday.

Orland Dunham, took his departure Monday for Keyser, W. Va. where he will attend school.

Wm. Holman, who has been in Pensylvania for some time past, in spending a week or two with parents here.

Carrie L. and Earl W. Frantz spent Saturday and Sunday with friends near Hoyes.

Mr. Alvin Lowdermilk, one of Garrett's progressive school teachers, leaves to-day for California, Pa., where he will spend the term.

Floretta, the little daughter of W. W. Savage, is seriously ill at this writing.

Rev. D. A. Friend is preparing to build here in the near future.

D. K. Harring, and family are making preparations to leave here here for one of the southern states, where they will make their future home.

A new company has been organized, known as the Friendsville Milling Co., and will be ready to begin operations by Sept. 1st.

Easter services will be held here in the Methodist and Lutheran churches, next Sunday.

KENDALL.

Arthur Lowman, general yard foreman, has returned after a visit of two weeks with relatives at Brookville, Pa.

D. H. Shank, Superintendent of the Yough Manor Lumber Co., spent Sunday with his family at Confluence, Pa.

Rev. Donechi delivered a very interesting sermon on Sunday last.

John Hostetter contemplates going into the farming business.

Judge U. S. Kendall made a flying trip recently to Fairmont, W. Va., on very important business.

Mr. Harry Krug is visiting friends at Oil City, Pa.

John Michaels, trimmer man on the large saw mill of this place, has moved to White Rock.

After a very successful term our school closed on Friday, under the management of Professor T. A. Fike.

The Yough Manor Lumber Company has several new buildings under construction.

S. A. Kendall, President of the Yough Manor Lumber Company, spent a couple of days at Swallow Falls, Md., looking after business interests.

H. K. Friend spent Monday at Swallow Falls.

Uncle John Patton secured a position of sawing with Groves Bros., on the goat farm.

Chief Engineer D. D. Carothers, of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, confirms the report that the company will build four spurs on the 17 mile grade. This has been one of the worst grades in the country, and has resulted in many fatalities, a large number of which occured within the past few months. Mr. Carothers says that surveys are being made for the spurs, so that the grade will be bettered considerably for operation and safety.

"LIKE AS A FATHER."

Sent up to bed in the dark, alone,
Where all of the corners were weird and dim
And the shapes and the shadows waited him
At every turning—my little son.
Sent for some childish mischief done
At the hour when childish hearts are high
With joy of the evening's revelry—
And his fault at worst was a tiny one!

A wistful moment his feet delayed,
Waiting to let my face relent,
And then, a pitiful penitent,
His faltering, frightened way he made;
But up in the stairway's deepest shade
I heard him pause where the shadows crowd
And whisper, "Father," and sob aloud,
"Father, go with me. I am afraid!"

Quick as his calling my answer leapt,
Strong as his terror my shielding arms
Folding him close from the night's alarms,
Sheltered and comforted while he wept;
And up in the nursery's light I kept
A tender watch until he smiled again,
Till the sobs of his half-remembered pain
Lessened and hushed, and the baby slept.

Father of love, when my day is done
And all of my trespasses written in,
Not for a thoughtless or willful sin
Send me out in the dark alone;
But so as I remembered by little son,
Come to the prayer of my pleading breath
And lead me safe through the night of death,
Father of light, when my light is gone!
—Nancy Byrd Turner, in Youth's Companion.

"The Long Arm."

BY KEIGHLEY SNOWDEN.

AGAINST his will Col. Sale was playing one more hand. He played at all times very quietly, so far as a card table manner is concerned, and to-night he was sometimes mildly humorous. His preoccupation could not be imagined. But it deepened during the final rubber, and, far away in thought from Piccadilly, he heard the Strid roar at Bolton, in lovely Wharfedale. That was a place where a man might easily seem to die by misadventure.

The game being ended, he pushed the cards away with a smile. Some sense of embarrassment lay upon the other players. His luck had been worse than common, he was a pleasant officer, and everybody knew him to be "hipped." He wrote in his neat hand upon the back of visiting cards an "I O U" for each member of the party, while they were paying cash or checks. His refined and tranquil face was flushed a little; the act brought home to him a very disagreeable sense of his position.

He reverted to a conversation which had passed before the game began. "You are all very good fellows to wait," he said. "I'm sorry. I have not at all the same faith in my chances."

His sensitiveness provoked a friendly murmur and some high encouragements. When a man is "off his luck" he cannot do better than go away and forget it. In the high priced club where the colonel played above his purse worse luck than his had been known to right itself.

Col. Arthur Sale was a man of no excesses but this of gambling; middle aged, a good soldier, with some reputation as a traveler and a sportsman. While yet a lieutenant he had made two independent journeys in the Soudan about the time of the first mahdi's rise to power. His resolute courage had been attested then and since; the regularity of his life was of late confirmed by a happy marriage, and men knew him for a nice sense of honor and excellent temper, taste and social tact. These last qualities were best observed in his duller moods, when a special gentleness appeared in him.

Few men were better liked, and, as commonly happens, not the most imaginative among his friends could suspect what he had it in mind to do. He was going to Yorkshire "for a month's fishing." But, for some time now, the position must have seemed to Col. Sale to have a hopeless look. He had lost hard upon £5,000 in a few months; his means were narrow, and, after calling in all but insurances, he was in debt for three impossible thousands still.

To give up honor and life was doubly futile. But what had determined him was the necessity of saving something for his wife and boys. He said goodby to them in the morning. Let those who share his temperament be Col. Sale's judges. Granted his point of view, there must have been something beautifully tender and brave in the light farewell, and yet one does not care to think of it.

Pass to certain reflections of the journey. They had some bearing on the sequel. With only a few days to live, and with the sense of mastery which every calm resolution gives, Col. Sale was more than usually clear headed, although his heart labored, and scenes from the old past ran mostly in his thoughts. In particular he was struck by recollections of a college friendship and of a boys' conversation which pointed to his present case. It was the most intimate and lasting friendship he had known, and he would have liked to say good-by to Jack Alleyn. Dear old fidus Achates, matter of fact and gay and kind. What in these last few years had become of him? He might even have shown a better way with debts of honor. He always did know the right thing to do, and did it with a turn of the hand. When they were mere boys, Jack once boasted lightly that he would undertake—

Ah, happy time! In a flash the scene returned. It was in the great holidays, on a night of sentiment and philosophy, things they did not know by any such names, and talked nevertheless on all occasions. There was a badger. While it was out they had stopped the earths, and they lay among bracken and rocks on the edge of a Yorkshire moor waiting for it. The moonlit dale was romantic, but not Jack, and they were talking ghosts. Touching to remember how the dear fellow's chaff had never hurt him! But Jack provoked him to say—he recalled quite freshly the mood in which he spoke bantering, but still with a delightful, creepy sense of committing himself to something risky:

"All right, old chap, but if ever I get into Queer Street"—innocent word in those days!—"and have to shuffle off this mortal coil, I'll let you see. I'll be an apparition myself and make a friendly call in search of sympathy. 'Go away,' says you, 'you're an imposition. Besides, I never feel for spectres.'"

It startled the colonel to see himself half aware of the end so very long ago. Fate! Thought stood still at the great, surefooted mystery. And what Jack Alleyn said was far from serious, like the end of that night's adventure.

"Rot!" it was rather a favorite word of his. "I can go one better, sonny. I'll undertake to make my call on you before you do the shuffle."

How lightly life is looked at before we come to live it, and still one plays the man! But is not this, thought Col. Sale—alone with his soul now—is not this the great and ultimate test, that manhood be true to the boy's inspirations?

The notion held him. If, indeed, we must all "give an account of the deeds done in the body," was that a test he could undergo himself sans peur et sans reproche? He quaked; the standard boyhood sets is high. He had not tried to pull it down, thank God, but inspirations, or only aspirations, the review of them now in a long reverie depressed him; he had to brace his courage and play the man at last. And it pleased him, because of the shattered ideals, to snatch at one light word which he might yet fulfill. If such things were, he would keep his engagement with Jack.

The purpose leaped into his mind and gave him the shiver and thrill he had sometimes found in situations of quiet peril.

Mr. Jack Alleyn is well known in Liverpool, though not by the name I have given him. He was to have been a soldier with his friend; he became a cotton merchant. As for this friendship of which the story tells a singular outcome, it had endured, of course, through long separations, with meetings rather more infrequent since the mid nineties than before. It was the summer of this year, and Jack had not seen his old chum at all since the war in South Africa. But he had longed to do so, and to him, as well as to the fighting man, that threat of a "friendly call" had recurred, though not his own jesting answer. It had even recurred more than once when scanty news made him fearful, but he would have been immensely surprised to see it fulfilled at any time. He is among the most practical of men. The colonel was right—Jack would have known a better way with debts of honor.

In the house where Col. Sale was a guest he enjoyed the perfect liberty of an old and dear comrade. It was not until the fourth day that he could think of his purpose, resolutely. The Wharfe was in spate then, after rain among the hills, and he went out to fish with worm below those woods in which the Strid is situated. His host being no fisherman, Col. Sale took with him, by an arrangement made overnight, an old water bailiff of whom he was fond.

They reached the Strid about the luncheon hour. The spate had fallen and left the rocks exposed, and the place looked more than ever fitting for his design, a suicide to be accomplished without suspicion in another man's presence. Col. Sale took a dram with him and ate a sandwich, and they watched the water thunder down. It is a boiling white cataract between gray walls of granite and below it a long, deep pool lies. All had gone well for the colonel's evasion. It was the old man himself who had suggested that some of the upper reaches should be tried, as he knew them best, and the rocks were slippery.

"What was that old tale of the 'bootless bene?'" the colonel shouted in his ear. "Isn't it here the boy jumped across, Tib?"

"Tried it," his companion answered. "See yo' that rock at points across an' dips. That's wheere 't wor. Fro' th' other side it's simple, but not this, for no man alive."

"I'll go and look at it," said the colonel.

He finished a second sandwich and then rose, leaving Tib to gather up the tackle. He was a little nervous, but felt no hesitation, no doubts of himself, and, without a glance either at the fierce water or about him at the paradise which these fine woods resemble, he carefully scrutinized the rock in face. His leap must look like a real attempt. Presently he turned away, satisfied, and waited for the old man's eye. He waved a hand.

Old Tib shouted, but it was not for this that Col. Sale, with the first step desperately taken, stood rooted where he was. He had seen Jack Alleyn's face above the opposite brink, a few paces down stream.

Jack advanced quite slowly, until his pert little figure showed complete, from Panama hat to brown shoes. He was looking intent at first, as if he had not recognized his friend, but his red face relaxed in the funny little smile down his nose that Sale knew. He danced a little dance above the torrent, came out on the point of the dipping rock and dropped over.

Col. Sale let him speak the first word. It was a dumb show, like everything else he had done in the cataract's roar, and, for the first time in life, the man who would have relinquished life so boldly was at a loss from fear. Jack's living and warm grasp gave him a great shock, moreover. Instantly he drew Jack away, but with a hand which became so viselike, and with such evident nervousness, that his friend was shocked at the change in him. Privately Jack swore at the war for it, yet thought it strange in such a gallant man. He was pulled up to the fringe of a wooded bank before the colonel spoke.

"My dear old chap! What brings you here? How the deuce did you find me?"

The little cotton merchant continued to act facetiously. "Ah," said he, pushing a chest out, "blow me if I can tell you that! Genius, I think. The British army lost a very good man when I stopped growing, Art. * * * Had you seen me? Were you going to jump up that silly rock?"

"Jove, how you startled me!" the miserable man ran on. "Do you know, I had you in mind at that moment, as if I should see you directly. * * * How long are you here? Where are you staying, old Jack? * * * Wasn't that strange, though?"

Jack thought his friend's behavior stranger. He was not unaware of the card play, rumor of which had reached as far as Liverpool. "'Devonshire arms,'" he said, laconically. "Got any fish?"

"Not very many." Poor old Sale. How sick he looked! "But now that you're here—wait a minute, I'll let old Tib go home."

He came back smiling and with his natural color, and Jack was uncommonly funny about the war. It did not surprise the jester that his friend put no more questions with respect to the manner of their encounter. He was a good deal touched, for, on the other hand, Sale's affectionate cordiality confessed relief from a great distress. They went down to the hotel, and there the afternoon was whiled away with talk of old times, as if no mystery had spun fine threads between them.

It was over the after dinner smoke that both men came to an awkward silence. For Jack, at any rate, this was not endurable; he waited for some more intimate talk, hoping good from it, and then set about with deliberation to put his friend at ease.

He said, very quietly: "I know what you're thinking of Art."

The colonel controlled himself with difficulty. He had little doubt left just at that moment that Jack had seen through his bad acting, but he looked up, saw him admiring the ash of his cigar, and still kept silence, dreading the word that would shatter self-respect.

"You're as superstitious as ever; wondering what the deuce that 'coincidence' portends of my turning up so adroitly. Oh, I know you of old!" He laughed gently. "My dear fellow, I'm sorry to disabuse you, but it's simply no coincidence at all. I've been hunting you about town for a week, off and on; got your address from you're wife, and here I am, on a most prosaic business mission! But confess. You've been thinking it odd all day, haven't you?"

The comfort of this was worth a settlement of all debts. But, as an explanation, it did nothing to shake a saved man's faith in the supernatural.

"Well, yes," he replied to the challenge.

"Just so. You're the same old dreamer, and it isn't good for the nerves, Art. * * * Are you game," proceeded Jack, in his very quietest tones, "to do a big journey nowadays? One of your old adventures?"

Col. Sale gazed at his friend with strange eyes.

"It's this. You know the state of the Egyptian fiber market? Or, of course, you don't; that wouldn't interest you. Egyptian fiber is at tenpence a pound, and that's a famine price; perfectly frightful! In Liverpool we've formed the Imperial Cotton Growing Extension association, pooling a little capital to look for new fields and promote enterprise. I hope it'll do some good. What we want now, as soon as ever we can lay our hands on him, is the right sort of man to go down the railway route from Cairo to the cape—taking his own time about it, of course—and spy out possibilities. Well, I told the other directors about you and the mahdi. I'm to ask you if you'll undertake the trip, old chap. It's dangerous, I know, but what they offer to do, apart from cost of equipment and all that, is to put down £2,000 a year for, say, three years, and I am empowered to pay it into your bank if you consent."

The man for whom this miracle was worked leaned forward to put his face in his hands. Jack saw his chest heave.

"What do you say, O, Benedick, the married man? Will you go on this wild goose chase for us, or would you rather fish and play bridge at home?"

"You know I'll go," said the colonel, at length. "God bless you, Jack!" But still he hid his face. "When did you hear about my bridge losses?"

"My dear fellow! Not so bad, is it? Why, when I got to town I heard of them, of course."

Tennyson errs. There are times when half a truth may be of all lies the whitest.

"Then you are right; it was not a coincidence at all." The colonel's eyes were shining as he uncovered a face composed and stern. "It was God's hand, old friend. I'll prove it to you. * * * Jack, if you had been an instant later I was a dead man."

"Thanks," said the incorrigible Jack. "I rather took credit for my own exertions."—London Sketch.

BLUE FOX FARMING.

On an Alaskan Island a Wisconsin Business Man Has 1,500 Animals Whose Fur Is Worth from Ten to Eighty Dollars Each.

George T. Scove, after an absence of nearly six years on an isolated island off the Alaskan coast, is in Manitowoc, Wis., spending the winter with relatives. He is the son of H. M. Scove, a former well known shipbuilder, and was born and educated in Manitowoc. In 1898 he went to Alaska and acquired some mining property, on which he prospected for a year, and then associated with him Charles L. Mann, of Milwaukee, the latter taking a half interest in the mines, with the stipulation that Scove should engage in the blue fox farming business with parties having equal ownership in the mines and the new industry.

Scove preempted Patterson island, located off the southeast coast of Alaska, 60 miles north of the international boundary line. Scove then went to Prince William sound and purchased 66 pair of the best breed of blue foxes and took them to Patterson island by water, a distance of several hundred miles. Here he had shacks and fish shanties erected. The foxes, though used to a more northerly climate, thrived, but High island, adjoining Patterson island, separated by a channel only 100 yards wide, was an attractive spot for the foxes, and they swam across and inhabited High island. He then found it necessary to purchase this island, too, to save his stock.

The foxes care for themselves, with the exception of their feed. They subsist entirely on fish and berries. During the salmon run large quantities are caught at the mouths of inlets and are smoked and preserved for the season. Other varieties, such as halibut, cob, dog fish, shark and flounder, are caught during the summer months.

The foxes have regular feeding places on the islands, and receive their "rations" every afternoon.

During the five years the 66 pair have increased to over 1,500 foxes. The fur is one of the most expensive in the market today, and brings a price of from $10 to $80, according to the quality, size and color of the fur. The color ranges from a maltese to a dark navy blue. London is the general market for blue fox furs, which are used extensively in dress trimmings.

NEW CURE FOR LOCKJAW.

Midway Men Invent Electronometer Which They Hope Will be of Great Use in Nervous Diseases.

Capillary electronometer is the name of a new instrument delicate enough to register the minute discharges of electricity in nerves and muscles. The invention will greatly aid the cure of lockjaw, they hope, and be of great use in nervous diseases. It is a device conceived by the research workers in the physiological laboratory at the University of Chicago, its inventors being C. C. Guthrie, E. P. Lyon and F. H. Rieske.

A fine glass tube with a hole in it no larger than a capillary gland on the back of a human hand is the mechanism of the instrument. The tube at one end contains mercury, which penetrates the small extremity of the tube. The tube rests in a cup of acid, and the two are joined by platinum wire.

All life action is chemical and electrical, the inventors believing, and by the action of the electrical discharge from a moving muscle on the mercury in the tube the amount of energy expended may be gauged.

This Is Miraculous.

Manhattan, Kans., March 14.—One of the strangest cases that has ever been heard of in Riley Co. is that of the three-year-old daughter of Mr. Jonas Brubaker of this place.

Some time ago the little girl took whooping cough, which was followed by pneumonia. When the pneumonia left her, she was taken down with malaria fever with at times symptoms of Spinal Meningitis.

The family doctor brought her safely through these troubles, but after the fever Bright's Disease set in and the doctors gave her up. Her father tells the rest of the story:

"We began to give her Dodd's Kidney Pills and after she had taken about three and a half boxes, she was entirely cured. Now she is well as any child, running and playing as if nothing had ever been the matter with her. The doctors said she was beyond the reach of medicine. Dodd's Kidney Pills certainly saved our little girl's life, when she was so far into the chronic stage of Bright's Disease that we thought nothing could save her."

RESTORED TO HEALTH.

Many weak, suffering women do not know that their kidneys are sick. Backache tells of sick kidneys and so do urinary disorders. Sick kidneys make bad blood, and bad blood makes bad digestion, heart palpitation, dizzy headaches, nervousness, sleeplessness, sciatica, rheumatic pains and constant depression.

Can't be restored to health until the kidneys are cured. Read how one woman was restored by using Doan's Kidney Pills:

Mrs. H. A. Van Sickle, 311 6th Ave., S. W., Roanoke, Va., says: "Kidney trouble was hereditary in our family and I had been so continually afflicted with the disease that I began to despair of even temporary relief. Sometimes I suffered so severely that I was confined to my bed. The aching in my back was intense and the kidney disorder caused an excess of uric acid in my blood which impaired my digestion. I was compelled to deny myself of many of the little delicacies of diet. The doctors diagnosed my case as congestion of the kidneys. I had about given up hope when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, but I took only a few doses when their curative powers were proven to my satisfaction. I have never been without them in the house since."

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers; price, 50 cents; or mailed on receipt of price by Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for free trial.

WAR REMINISCENCES

A DEFEATED MULE RIDER.

Jim Said It Was "Easy When You Know How," But He Got the Lofty Toss.

When the First Connecticut H. A. placed their batteries in position at the defenses back from Harrison's Landing, on the James river, after the notable "seven days' retreat," the writer went one day to a spring in a field outside the breastworks, for water. Feeding in an adjoining field, I noticed a remarkably fine mare mule, and, having lost my horse a few days previously, I thought it a good chance to supply myself with a mount, writes Walter T. Sage, in the National Tribune. I therefore quietly approached, and had little difficulty in capturing Mrs. Mule, somewhat to my surprise, as she appeared to be quite young and high spirited. As she had nothing but a rope about her neck, I took a turn about her lower jaw, and, leading her to the fence, jumped on her back. I professed myself to be quite an equestrian, but I had barely touched her back before I found myself on my back, on the ground. Mightily astonished and full of anger at the ease with which it was done, I again led her to the fence, and, making careful preparations, I again mounted her, but had no chance to get my heels together under her belly ere I once more went sailing through the air, coming down with a force that convinced me that I'd had a "genteel sufficiency," as the saying goes. While thinking over the mule's ability as a first-class contortionist, I remembered the many boastful utterances of our darky wagon driver, Jim, who really was a remarkably good driver, and I thought there was some prospect of fun ahead, so I led Mrs. Mule to camp, tied her to a tree in rear of camp, and hunted up Jim, first informing my comrades of the fun at hand, as well as the men in the infantry supporting the batteries and arranging that they should gather around, apparently by chance. I offered Jim if he would break in the mule so I could ride her, a five-dollar bill, and he was as vain as a peacock over my flattering mention of his abilities as a rider, and promptly assured me he could "certainly do it for shuah." We held the mule, and Jim saddled her, and after a little skirmishing around, and cinching her up tightly, he put on his great Mexican spurs, and, taking a short, thick whipstock from his wagon, he mounted, while half a dozen of us held her firm. Jim locked his spurs together under her belly, and with a broad grin and the remark of how "easy it was to ride a mule, if you only knew how," told us to let go. For about two minutes we hardly knew where Jim and the mule were, or what they were doing, but concluded they had something to do with the cloud of dust that was rising so thickly all about us. Presently the dust commenced to settle, and we discovered them in pretty near the same position in which we had last seen them, Jim still in the saddle, the mule's legs braced out, and she now refusing to move in any direction, although Jim now used both whip and spur. This lasted so long, and we jeered and chated poor Jim so unceasingly, that he finally became careless or reckless of consequences, and allowed his legs to hang loosely, his heels unlocked from their hold. It was but a moment, now, before Mrs. Mule realized that her time had come, and was not slow to take advantage of it, for we saw a huge black shape go sprawling over our heads and land in the deep sink dug in rear of the company kitchen.

As Jim straightened up out of his disgusting bath, and clambered out, smeared from head to foot, the expression on his face was enough to convulse a corpse, and at the roar that went up from the hundreds who had witnessed the feat, Jim turned up his eyes, and, with a muttered curse at the mule, he hastened off to his wagon, and was never, to my knowledge, known to boast of his prowess as a rider of vicious horses or mules. The writer had no further use for such a playful animal, so turned her loose.

BIG WHISKERED COLONEL.

Stirring Incident of Stone River Battle in Which a Strange Character Figured.

"That does not surprise me," said the captain, in the Chicago Inter Ocean. "I was in the regular brigade at Stone river and my mind has been ever since in a state of confusion as to certain things that happened in Palmer's front on the 31st of December, 1862. There was no trouble about our own line. Wherever the regular brigade went it stood like a rock. At one point we had been formed to check the confederate charge that had shattered two or three fighting brigades representing as many divisions.

"We were posted so as to have a view of the ground fought over and the scene was exciting and confusing. We saw one of Palmer's brigades hurled against the confederates in such fury as to break the confederate line. We saw one of the charging regiments, isolated, spread its thin line to check a heavy column of confederates charging toward us at regimental front. The colonel commanding the isolated regiment wore a heavy flowing beard and he and the other field officers were good riders and were well mounted. But when the confederate column struck the union regiment it seemed to me that the colonel and his men were literally swallowed up.

"The confederate column did not stop. It came rushing on like a great machine, running over and crushing the life out of the regiment in its front. We saw the colonel and his horse go down in the instant that the lieutenant colonel, major and lieutenant were blotted out of the picture. As the confederate column swept on the field behind it seemed covered with dead horses and men. But as the confederate column came nearer us we saw men in blue running with it on the flank, and a little later saw this line of blue diverge, form, and blaze away at the men with whom they had been running.

"Then, looking back over the field, we saw men clustering like partridges about a something which a minute later became the whiskered colonel and his horse. It seemed incredible, but I'll be hanged if that colonel didn't mount his horse, out there in the rear of the confederate line, and gathering his men about him start at a gallop in pursuit of the fellows who had run over him. He hadn't more than 50 men with him, but he seemed to think he was chasing the whole confederate army right into our hands. The confederates, moving not directly against our front, but obliquely, as if projected against a point to our left, came upon us like an avalanche, but the regular brigade gave them such a reception that they veered off and the big whiskered colonel, with his partridge formation of fighters, was persuaded to give up his rear chase and come through our lines just in time to escape a second charge that left scores of our men dead in line.

"Now many of our boys never saw this big whiskered colonel at all, and never believed that he came to our lines in the rear of a charging confederate column, but I watched him through the glass, from start to finish, and his rear chase of a confederate brigade, 50 times as strong as his own force, was one of the most mysterious happenings at Stone river. I never saw the man again and I don't know who he was."

HE GOT THE WHISKY IN.

Clever Scheme, But the Inventor Spent a Week in the Guard House.

A book could be written on the very curious devices resorted to by soldiers to smuggle whisky into camp. The first incident of this kind came under my notice while we were at Paducah, Ky., in January, 1862, preparing for the advance against Donelson, says a writer in the American Tribune.

A soldier of the Twenty-first Illinois infantry, Grant's old regiment, started out from camp with a coffee pot, explaining to the officer in charge of the guard that he was going after milk for a comrade who was not feeling very well.

On his return the officer suspected the man had whisky in the pot, but the man persisted that it was milk, and to prove it he poured a quantity through the spout, and was permitted to pass on. That night there was a general drunk in the soldiers' quarters, ending in a free fight.

An examination discovered the fact that the man had put a little milk into the spout of the pot, sealing the inside of the opening with bread and filling the body of the vessel with whisky.

That soldier spent a week in the guard house thinking over his misdirected talents for strategy.

USEFUL GERMAN DEVICE.

It Prevents Most Effectively Fires from Locomotive Sparks and Is Now in General Use.

The constant danger of widespread and disastrous forest fires and other conflagrations and the deplorable losses of property and life which occur each year from such causes in the United States lend a practical interest to the best methods employed in other countries for averting similar dangers.

Forest fires in Germany are comparatively infrequent for three reasons: First, the country has a rainfall so copious and uniform that periods of drought which render woodlands easily inflammable are relatively rare; second, where railways traverse tracts of pine forests strewn with the dry, fallen needles of the previous year, they are generally ditched and diked along both sides of the line so as to confine a fire to a small and easily controlled area; and, third, because every precaution which inventors can devise to arrest locomotive sparks and prevent them from escaping into the air is practiced on the state railways and enforced on all private and corporate lines.

Until recently it was not apparent that the German engines were in this respect much, if any, in advance of those of other countries. The problem here, as elsewhere, has been to devise a metallic network fine enough in mesh to effectively sift the glowing sparks from the blast of a locomotive without so obstructing the draft as to compromise its steaming capacity. Hitherto the bars or filaments of network spark arresters have been mainly round and fixed in place—conditions which always entail more or less danger of choking and clogging whenever the space between bars or meshes is small enough to really prevent the escape of sparks and glowing embers of dangerous size.

These requirements have led to an ingenious improvement invented by a German engineer named Heydemann. It has been in use during the past two years on the state railways of Mecklenburg, with such success that it has been adopted for trial on the Hessian and several corporate lines, and has become therefore a subject of current public interest. The device consists of a series of three grates set one above another in a square iron or steel frame of such size and form as to fit into the smoke chambers of the locomotive. The arrangement of three tiers of grate bars will be shown by the diagram.

Each bar is about two inches wide by one-tenth of an inch thick, and is ingeniously set into the frame so as to be held in place against any shock or pressure and at the same time to be free to expand or contract with changing temperatures. As shown by the diagram the middle tier or grate contains twice as many bars as the top and bottom tiers, and the arrangement of bars and spaces is such that while a free passage is secured for the gases of combustion no spark or ember more than 0.16 inch in thickness can escape, and these are so small that they are self-extinguished within a few feet after escaping into the open air and cause no danger. This ingenious arrangement of the bars, together with the readiness with which they expand and contract under varying temperatures, acts to dislodge the adhering particles and prevents the arrester from becoming clogged, at the same time permitting a draft so open and free that the steaming capacity of the engine is said to be visibly greater than with any other type of spart catcher heretofore used in this country.—Dean B. Mason, U. S. Vice and Deputy Consul General at Berlin.

ETHER AFFECTS PLANTS.

Scientific Tests Prove That It Hastens Their Development and Shortens Winter Rest.

By a series of experiments Dr. J. Johannsen, professor of vegetable physiology at the Copenhagen agricultural college, has established the fact that under the influence of ether or chloroform plants shorten their period of hibernal rest and develop foliage and blossoms from two weeks to as many months before the normal time.

Prof. Johannsen found that plants are most susceptible to the influence of anaesthetics toward the end of their period of rest, and that no noticeable results can be obtained if plants are subjected to the influence of ether or chloroform before they have entered upon the period of rest or after they have begun their spring activity.

Lilacs, etherized at the end of July, after they had reached their rest period, but while they were still in leaves, lost their foliage rapidly and at once began to develop new leaves. In five to eight days they had new foliage and a few days later were in full bloom, while lilacs not treated with ether did not develop to maturity until 20 or more days later.

Chloroform seems to act more energetically than ether and its use is preferable from an economic point of view. Some florists in France and Germany have already begun to make practical use of the accelerating effect of anaesthetics upon plants and have obtained gratifying results with lilacs, snowballs, azaleas, deutzias, glycinium, and many other flower-bearing shrubs.

NEW PRECIOUS STONE.

Kunzite, a Beautiful Lilac Gem, Discovered by an Expert of the Geological Survey.

Kunzite is the name of a new precious stone that has been discovered by one of the experts of the United States geological survey. Do you know what kunzite is? If you do not, George F. Kunz, its discoverer, can tell you.

Kunzite is the principal gem discovery of the year which ended a month ago, and Pala, in San Diego county, Cal., is where it was found.

Crystals of great size and beauty have been obtained, and the stone has been cut into very beautiful gems for jewelry, and bids fair to become popular.

Kunzite is a beautiful lilac color, and comes under the head of spodumene, sometimes called triphane. Spodumene is a silicate of aluminum, and is found in colors varying from gray, yellow and greenish white to an emerald green and purple.

In a forthcoming volume on mineral resources to be published by the geological survey considerable space will be devoted to this new gem. This volume will also contain a great deal of valuable information concerning the development of the mining of precious stones in this country.

New discoveries of very fine rubellite and other tourmalines have also been made at Pala and in other parts of California. Topaz, both white and pale blue, has been identified for the first time in that state.

It was found at Coahuila in distinct and beautiful crystals, the dimensions of the largest being three-quarters of an inch by one inch. Magnificent spessartite garnets were obtained near Ramona, in San Diego county.

Outside of California prospecting and development work have been carried on in a few scattered districts.

Turquoise has been mined in several places in New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada and California, and many gems of great beauty have been found.

The sapphire mines of Montana were worked last year by three different companies, two of which developed fine blue gems in Fergus county, and the other multi-colored stones in Granite county.

In North Carolina prospecting for beryl and amethyst was continued. Some of the government geologists believe that diamonds are to be found in Indiana, and the matter has been discussed in scientific papers.

WHY DOES IT DROP?

A Question That Has Puzzled Aeronauts for a Long Time Explained in a Simple Way.

Every year, more and more interest is taken in the science of ballooning, and, with an ever increasing number of aeronauts pursuing their investigations, the mysteries of such air-sailing are one by one, steadily if slowly, being solved.

For a long time one curious phenomenon puzzled all voyages by air. When a balloon, in the course of a trip, passed over a forest, it was sure to descend from its former elevation, and a good supply of ballast had then to be thrown out in order to keep it up. This small diagram reveals the reason for such behavior of the aerostat.

As the arrow shown indicates, we will suppose that the balloon seen in position on the left is being carried through the air towards the point occupied by the balloon on the right. And on the way the course through the air passes over a forest, also indicated. The dotted line, denoting the elevation of the balloon in its flight, shows what will happen. Over the forest the balloon will drop, as the dotted line indicates. Ballast will be thrown out to keep the balloon-car from the tree-tops, and after leaving the forest the balloon, now lighter, will rise higher than before.

Why does the balloon drop when over the forest? Because, as the "pyramid" marked over the forest shows, there is above all such collections of vegetation a high prism of moisture-laden air, caused by the abundant transpiration of the trees and bushes. And, entering that mass of damp air, the buoyancy of the balloon is much reduced, and naturally it descends.

The Weight of Children.

Some curious experiments have been made at one of the royal philanthropic institutions in Copenhagen. For some years back the 70 boys and girls in the place have been carefully weighed every day in groups of 15 and under. Thereby it is proved that the children gain weight mostly in autumn and in the early part of December. From that time till the end of April there is scarcely any increase in weight. More remarkable still, there is a diminution till the end of summer.

English Bank Note Paper.

It is not every one who is aware that a Bank of England note is not of the same thickness all through. The paper is thicker in the lefthand corner to enable it to retain a keener impression of the vignette there, and it is also considerable thicker in the dark shadows of the center letters and beneath the figures at the ends. Counterfeit notes are invariably of one thickness only throughout.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

TELLING AGES OF CATTLE.

It Can Be Done with Almost Absolute Exactness by the Teeth of Domestic Animals.

One of the great sensations of this year's International was the turning down of a pen of 15 head of Aberdeen-Angus steers, two years old and under three, by the official veterinarian. A protest had been filed against this grand lot of cattle and was based upon the allegation that they were over age. To settle the matter the official veterinarian, acting for the exposition management, examined the mouths of seven head of the lot of 15 cattle, and made his report to the effect that two of the eight were over three years old. This decision sustained the protest and threw the pen of cattle out of the competition, thus preventing them from winning the grand championship of the show, to which they would otherwise have been entitled.

This is a most unfortunate occurrence, but the veterinarian could pursue no other course in the matter, as he found two of the animals clearly four years old. Even where but six broad permanent teeth are seen the animal may be considered 42 months old, if all the teeth are fully through and in wear. "Six-tooth" cattle are, however, given the benefit of the doubt by veterinarians, as there is some evidence to show that forcing may induce slight precocity in the cutting of teeth. Great discrepancies, however, cannot possibly be caused by an manner of feeding or kind of environment so that a full-mouthed steer cannot on any pretext be considered possibly within the specified age limit allowed for show animals in the class in question.

The illustrations accompanying this statement are taken from Kuidekoper's "Age of Domestic Animals" and will make the subject clear to stockmen.

The age given under each cut is an average one, taking everything into consideration, and every reader will find them corroborated if he will go to the trouble of examining the mouths of cattle of which he knows the age perfectly.

At last year's show a similar protest was filed against a fine lot of cattle shown in class for steers two years old and under three, but was not sustained, as no animal was found to show more than six broad permanent incisors.

We trust that stockmen generally and cattle exhibitors in particular will study the accompanying illustrations carefully and make their exhibits conform to them at future shows. Action to this effect may be taken by the management showing dentition departures from standard types will not be eligible to exhibition. It would be well in the premises for exhibitors to make themselves familiar with the subject and see to it that their animals intended for showing have teeth corroborating statements made relative to dates of birth. Many desire to have it believed that forcing materially effects dentition and changes the normal appearance of the mouth, indicating age, but it may be regarded as certain that no full-mouthed steer will be allowed to compete in classes for cattle three years old at future meetings of the International.—Farmers' Review.

Treating Seed Potatoes.

Recent investigations made at the Ohio experiment station show that a disease, heretofore but partially recognized, injures potato tops severely at times. This is the potato rosette, and this disease appears to be general. Seed treatment in 1903 has increased the yield where the disease prevailed from 25 to 125 per cent. on a light crop. Bulletin 145, just published, gives the second series of results in treating for this trouble. Formalin at the rate of one pint in 30 gallons of water, is the solution used. Immerse the seed potatoes in this for two hours, after which the tubers may be dried and cut for planting. This bulletin will be sent to all citizens of the state who may apply for it.—Ohio Experiment Station, Wooster, O.

Miss Agnes Miller, of Chicago, speaks to young women about dangers of the Menstrual Period.

"To Young Women:—I suffered for six years with dysmenorrhea (painful periods), so much so that I dreaded every month, as I knew it meant three or four days of intense pain. The doctor said this was due to an inflamed condition of the uterine appendages caused by repeated and neglected colds.

"If young girls only realized how dangerous it is to take cold at this critical time, much suffering would be spared them. Thank God for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, that was the only medicine which helped me any. Within three weeks after I started to take it, I noticed a marked improvement in my general health, and at the time of my next monthly period the pain had diminished considerably. I kept up the treatment, and was cured a month later. I am like another person since. I am in perfect health, my eyes are brighter, I have added 12 pounds to my weight, my color is good, and I feel light and happy."—Miss Agnes Miller, 25 Potomac Ave., Chicago, Ill. — $5000 forfeit if original of above letter proving genuineness cannot be produced.

REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE TO MEET APRIL 6.

Mr. John B. Hanna, chairman of the Republican State committee, on Saturday issued the call for the meeting of the committee on April 6 at noon in the Royal Arcanum Hall, Baltimore. The committee will decide upon the time and place for holding the state convention for the selection of delegates to the national convention.

The state convention must take place at least a month after the meeting of the committee and the same time before the national convention, so that the convention will probably take place some time early in May. The national convention meets in Chicago, July 21. It is settled that the state delegates will be solid for Roosevelt.

GIVE THE CHILDREN A CHANCE

Sitting in a bad position all day, breathing air contaminated by forty or more sets of lungs working there by the hour and scolded more or less one third of the time, as the teachers are easy or hard to please, the school child gets used to submission. He sits quietly while he knows that wrong is done all about him. He learns to cheat in examination. He practices sly deceit. He sometimes does worse.

Let us bring our children up so they will grow naturally. Let us instruct them incidentally and not primarily. Let the school exercises be planned to meet the wants of the child's mind rather than try to make the mind conform with the prearranged system.

Let there be a campaign against the liar, the sneak, the thief, the impure, the undeveloped and the envious, and let it be begun before they are mature and hardened.

FULL SCHEME TO CONTROL MARYLAND NOW REVEALED.

The Democratic managers have at last given to the public their complete plans for making Maryland "solid" for their party for years to come.

The first step is the Poe suffrage amendment which on its face is intended to eliminate the negro but which in reality makes it possible for partisan boards of registry to arbitrarily refuse to register anyone who does not pass a satisfactory "examination" as to the meaning of any portion of the Constitution of the United States. This scheme is opposed by both Governor Warfield and Attorney General Bryan, because of the obvious opportunity for fraud.

The next step proposed is to do away with the present admittedly fair system of bi-partisan Boards of Registry and Judges of Election and give the majority party two-to-one. This bold move has aroused such a storm of protest over the State that it is said the Democratic managers may not push it through. Governor Warfield is fearful of the effect on his party and it is said is strongly opposed to the change. The next move is to postpone the general registration of voters from this year until 1906, when it is hoped the other two plans will be enacted into laws.

Another move is to remove the party designation in certain parts of the State where it will work the most injury to the Republicans and leave it on where it will help the Democrats.

Maryland has already suffered enough fraud by Democratic manipulation of our election laws. Thousands have been distranchised either by inability to read or by inability to correctly vote a complicated ballot. Trick ballots and other glaring frauds have been practiced and contested elections in Baltimore and other parts of the State have been the result. The Democratic Governor and Attorney General promised during the campaign to remedy some glaring defects in the law and especially to provide that the intent of the voter should govern in counting the ballots. Nobody hears of anyone making a bona fide effort to redeem this pledge. Like the cruel Egyptian task-masters, they, on the contrary are making the people's burden heavier than before. Justice and right are forgotten in their lust for power. The mills of the gods grind slowly but surely. Our people are honest and brave and manly—when once aroused to the full import of the schemes being worked they will sweep these conspirators against pure elections from power and the people will come to their own again.

SHORT RUN.

Short Run has not been heard from for quite a while and we wish to imform the readers that an earthquake or a cyclone has not passed over this section effacing us from the topography of God's county.

A storm, resembling somewhat a cyclone, honored us with its presence Tuesday evening, scattering fences, sugar buckets and most everything else loose at both ends, but its ravages left us still intact as a community with nothing seriously injured, except the third commandment which was broken next morning when sugar makers went out to find their trees wasting their sweetness on the ground and the cattle up to their knees in the wheat fields.

Sugar making is sung by the robins. The recent warm spell, with the thermometer at eighty, caused some anxiety, but the following freeze and snow are what makes the dollars come rolling home and the hearts glad.

Those who have camps are so "sweet" that the only way to get down to normal is to eat pickles and drink hard cider and those unfortunate in having none visit those who have thus taking opportunity to "sweeten up" for their respective belles and beaux. Thus, between the two, most of the sugar made is eaten, but it is freely given by our hospitable farmers.

One of our most distinguished guests at the sugar camp was Mr. Low Hoffman, of Gormania.

Miss Stullenbarger, of Elk Garden, is visiting relatives in this vicinity.

Mr. Benj. Paugh, of the Glades, spent a night with his sister, Mrs. J. T. Harvey.

Dr. Millen and Prof. A. S. Lee, both of Blaine, were interested spectators of Wilson's camp recently.

Mr. J. H. Wilson is at Oakland as a juror during court.

The coal mines are not running full time at present.

Saturday evening we noticed an object making a brown streak toward Deer Park. Sunday late we beheld the same object approaching more slowly and with difficulty, halted it. It turned out to be a brown horse and a driver and the haste in going was found to be occasioned by the serious condition of the driver's heart. The possessor of that troublesome organ hails from Elk Garden.

One of the most successful terms of school ever held at Short Run closed Friday. Miss Cora Weimer, the teacher, deserves all the praise and we can not speak of her in terms too high. She leaves the school in excellent condition for her successor who, we hope, will be herself. The last day was spent in a convivial union of teacher, pupils, expupils, trustees and patrons and in sight seeing. Lessons were heard in the forenoon after which dinner was spread consisting of all the good things that can be res urrected from a farmer's cellar and prepared by farmers wives and daughters. Music was furnished during the meal by a large graphophone provided with the latest records. After dinner, of course the boys and girls must have a game of "Pig" so they repaired to the bridge and left the older folks alone to talk about the weather, of its effects upon the coming fruit crop, of sugar making and about various topics equally interesting. A short afternoon session was held during which gifts and prizes were distributed and the school closed to spend the remainder of the day sight seeing on the Huckle-berry Rocks.

Rocks are quite common in this vicinity, especially in the roads, but the Huckle-berry Rocks are somesomething out of the ordinary and are worth anyone's time to see. Some of the young children never saw them before and they presented a picturesque appearance as they cautiously gathered around the ice-clad chasms pointed out by Miss Weimer. After two hours of exploration, the teacher announced that "school was out" and all went home declaring they had never spent a better day, nor a more profitable term of school.

COURT HOUSE BONDING MEASURE

Text of the Bill Introduced in the Legislature Authorizing the Issuance of Bonds.

In the House last week Mr Howard introduced the following bill:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the question of whether or not the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall issue bonds to an amount not exceeding one hundred thousand nor less than seventy five thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing lots and furnishing and building or erecting a court house at Oakland, the county seat of said county, and a new jail and furnishing the same at a cost not to exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, which shall be submitted to the registered qualified voters at the Congressional election to be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in the year nineteen hundred and four; the said ticket to be voted and to be printed on the congressional ballot to be used at said election. The ballot to be used in said shall have printed on them "for the issue of bonds" or "against the issue of bonds," and shall be counted and returned as other election returns are counted and made.

SECTION 2. And be it enacted, That if it shall be found by the returns of said Judges of election that a majority of the votes cast in said county are for the issue of said bonds, then it shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Garrett county, within nine months after said election, to issue said bonds to an amount not exceeding one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, in sums not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars each, and shall bear interest not to exceed five per centum per annum, and within nine months after said election, if it shall be decided by the ballots cast at said electionthat said bonds shall be issued the said County Commissioners shall issue bonds, which bonds shall be signed by the president of the Board of County Commissioners, and to be countersigned by the clerk to said Board, and the said bonds shall be made payable in the following manner, that is to say five thousand dollars each and every year, beginning with the year 1907; and they shall have coupons attached for the semi-annual interest, payable respectively on the first day of February and the first day of August in each year; the said bonds shall be dated as of the first day of August, 1905, and shall be forever exempt from all taxation for any purpose, and shall have printed on them a reference to the act authorizing the issue thereof.

SECTION 4. And be it enacted, That said bonds shall be issued to mature at such date as shall not require the payment thereof of more than five thousand dollars in any one year, but none of said bond shall be issued to mature before the first day of August, 1907.

SECTION 4. And be it enacted, That in order to pay the interest on said bonds, the County Commissioners shall annually, beginning with their levy laying session in 1905, levy on the assessable property of the county sufficient amount to pay said interest until the said bonds shall respectively mature; and for the payment of said bonds, they shall, beginning with the year 1907, levy on the assessable property of said county, the sum of five thousand dollars to pay said bonds, which shall be paid in the order of their serial number, beginning with serial number 1 and in their successive order.

SECTION 5. And be it enacted, That of the whole issue of said bonds so authorized or so much as may be necsary, the said County Commissioners shall immediately after signing the said bonds, as herein before provided sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which said sale of said bonds shall be made upon due notice by publication in such newspaper or newspapers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper and necessary.

SECTION 6. And be it enacted, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be applied by the County Commissioners of said county for the purchase of such lots and the erection and furnishing of a new court house and jail building at Oakland, the county seat of said county, and for no other purpose; and for the building and furnishing of said court house and jail, the said Board of County Commissioners shall contract by sealed bids, for which contracts advertisements shall be made in such newspaper or newspapers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper, giving notice of the time and place of the public opening of such bids, and they shall require such bidder to file with their bids a good and sufficient bond with a surety or sureties to be approved by them in such penalty for the faithful performance of the contract thereunder as they may deem proper, and upon the opening of such bids, the said County Commissioners shall award the contracts to the lowest responsible bidders, but they shall have the power to reject any and all bids.

SECTION 7. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

OPPOSES ARMY CAMP SITES.

General Chaffee Finds Fault With Nearly All Recommended.

FILES OBJECTION WITH SEC'Y TAFT

The Oakland Site Not Considered By Committee When it Made Its Report to Congress—Our Chances Yet Good.

The army camp site is still a living issue with the people of Oakland notwithstanding the recommendations made by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House which filled its report on the 23rd inst. wherein no mention was made of the local site.

A letter received by the editor from Col. Pearre states that the recommendation was slipped through the committee when a bare quorum was present and in the absence of the chairman, Congressman Cooper, and that he intends to fight its adoption on the floor of the House when it is brought up.

That Oakland still has a chance to secure one of the sites is still an open question and is somewhat strengthened by the presence here on last Friday and the inspection of the ground proposed to be used by Col. H. O. S. Heistand, Assistant Adjutant General, and Capt. Moss, aide to Gen. Corbin. This was Col. Heistand's second visit to the Oakland site and his impressions as to its desirability were not changed in the least degree.

A telegram under date at Washington on the 28th inst. says concerning the sites recommended by the Military Committee:

"Secretary Taft has forwarded to the Senate Military Committee with his approval a letter written by General Chaffee, Chief of Staff, in opposition to certain features of the bill providing for the purchase of camp sites for military maneuvres at Conewago Valley, Pennsylvania, at Fort Douglas, Wisconsin, at the Henry ranch in California, and at Fort Sam Houston, Taxas.

"General Chaffee favors the general scheme of large maneuvering camps, but does not consider it wise to select them arbitrarily at this time. He suggests that an appropriation of $2000000 be made for such camps, and that their selection be left to the War Department after further investigation of the snbject. General Chaffee says the upset price of $50 an acre allowed for the ground of Conewago is $15 an acre more than the value placed upon the ground by an army board a year ago. The sites in Wisconsin and in Texas are opposed on the gound of their remoteness, and the Henry ranch site on the ground of its alleged unhealthfulness.

"General Chaffee says he is satisfied that the sites mentioned in the bill have not been sufficiently examined to justify their purchase, and he suggests the appointment of a board of army officers to make the necessary examinatoin. The Chickamauga Park site meets with his appoval, and he advocates the purchase of ground for the extension of that park."

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

The village school at this place closed on last Friday, after a successful term of six months. The teacher, Mr. E. S. Brenneman, deserves much commendation for the untiring efforts towards the advancement of the school, and the zeal manifested in the daily discharge of the professional duties of his high calling points strongly to the possibility of that gentleman attaining a high place in the ranks of the educators of the county.

Miss Ida Ralston, who taught a successful term in the Inskip school, returned to her home at this place last Saturday.

Dr. Russel Bover, of Accident, was in this section on professional duties last Saturday.

Mr. Peter G. Stark's and family were visiting Mr. Stark's aged step mother, who is ill at her daughter's home, near Avilton.

Mr. Simon Maust was on a buisness trip to Grantsville last Saturday.

Last week brought for our enjoyment three or four delightful days, the mercury going up almost to summer heat, but this week begins with a return to wintry conditions.

Reports at this time shows that about one half of an average sugar crop has been gathered with prospects of a satisfactory yield yet to come.

W. A. Althers is now engaged painting the interior of Jonas Bittinger's residence.

Dr. C. B. Stroup returned to Friendsville Monday, his family being unable to accompany him on account of the illness of their little child.

Mr. William Ralston is visiting his parents this week.

EASTER AND BOREAL WEATHER.

Rain, Wind, Low Barometer, Snow and Much Colder Promised by Hicks.

Rev. Irl Hicks, in his forecast for April makes the following predictions:

Storms of rain, wind, low barometer and high temperature, will have given place to snow, rising barometer and much colder in all western sections as April comes in. Cold, northerly winds, with frost and freezing northward, will follow about the 1st to the 3rd, progressively from west to east. If frost reaches far into central to southern sections at this time our readers should not be taken wholly by surprise. Careful and impartial observers must have discovered that the Easter full moon is almost invariably attended and followed by severe and disagreeable squalls and boreal weather. The present case we believe will prove no exception to the rule. Plants and tender vegetation should be protected against the probability of killing frosts during the first three or four days in April.

About the 4th to the 6th falls a reactionary storm period, during which time falling barometer, change to warmer, with more rain and storminess will be probable. Hail storms will be most natural at all the April disturbances, and sudden drops of temperature should not surprise any one after all the well-defined storm movements.

The vulcan storm period, central on the 10th, will bring a series of pronounced storms. The culmination of these storms will fall about Sunday, the 10th, to Wednesday, 13th. Look for high temperature, low barometer, with rain, hail and thunder, progressively from the west to east, on the 11th, 12th and 13th. Rapid rise of barometer and change to quite cool will follow behind storms, but a reaction to storm conditions will suddenly return, and from the 15th to the 17th it will again become very warm, progressively, the barometer will again fall to low readings and decided storms of rain, hail and thunder will occur along paths of low barometric pressure. The sudden revolutions of Venus from hot to cold will be felt at this time and at each disturbance during the rest of the month. Tornadic disturbances should be apprehended, if very low barometer, high temperature and abnormal humidity prevail at this time.

A regular Vulcan-Venus perturbation will be central on the 21st, extending from the 19th to the 23rd.

The barometer will drop low and the temperature rise very high as this period progresses, resulting in many vicious thunder and hail storms on and touching the 21st, 22d and 23rd. The normal tendency to April thunder showers will grow into decided and far-reaching rainstorms, with dangerous winds and possible tornadoes during the progress of these disturbances. The inevitable change to much cooler, with frosts general over central and northern sections, will follow up the western flanks of these storms. Late snow squalls need surprise no one, as the high barometer follows low areas at these April periods.

One of the most decided and perhaps violent storm periods of the month, extends from about the 26th to 29th. This period is nearer the center of the Venus disturbance, is in a Mercury perturbation, with Moon on the celestial equator, in perigee and full. We warn our readers to watch the barometric conditions and storm developments at this time. Very general and severe storms are more than probable. This is a time when destructive hail storms are almost a certainty in many sections. Abnormal downpours of rain will also visit central to southern regions. The month will go out with high barometer, cold winds and frosty nights northward.

WEEDS

Consumption is a human weed flourishing best in weak lungs. Like other weeds it's easily destroyed while young; when old, sometimes impossible.

Strengthen the lungs as you would weak land and the weeds will disappear.

The best lung fertilizer is Scott's Emulsion. Salt pork is good too, but it is very hard to digest.

The time to treat consumption is when you begin trying to hide it from yourself. Others see it, you won't.

Don't wait until you can't deceive yourself any longer. Begin with the first thought to take Scott's Emulsion. If it isn't really consumption so much the better; you will soon forget it and be better for the treatment. If it is consumption you can't expect to be cured at once, but if you will begin in time and will be rigidly regular in your treatment you will win.

Scott's Emulsion, fresh air, rest all you can, eat all you can, that's the treatment and that's the best treatment.

We will send you a little of the Emulsion free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

Monday, April 11, 1904, as required by law, for the purpose of making the 1904 Levy. All persons having accounts for same are requested to file them on or before the above date.

By order of the Board.

A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

FOR SALE

At Deer Park, Maryland, Main Line B. & O. R R., 2500 Feet Above Tidewater, a Country Place of about 185 Acres.

Thoroughly equipped as a farm and bounded by three county roads, insuring convenience and privacy. It is well adapted to public use such as a sanatorium or to private residences, five sites with beautiful views and appurtenant acres, being reached by its three miles of private pleasure drives through the woods.

The dwelling house was built from plans by Hewitt Bros., of Philadelphia. The plumbing is by Ogelsby, of the same city. It has recently been put in complete order and repainted, and is replete with the modern appliances of a gentleman's residence. It is within ten minutes' walk of postoffice and railroad station and within one mile of the Deer Park Hotel. Its general plan is as follows:

Wide porches surround three faces, terminated, on a level, with billiard room.

I. FIRST FLOOR. Parlor, hall with main stair case, library, dining room and lavatory.

II. BACK BUILDING. Stair case to cellar, in which are furnace, gas machine (supplied by outside gasometer), wine closet, pantry (hot and cold water), back stairs to second story back building. Laundry—3 stationary tubs, hot and cold water in each; ironing stove, fire hose on reel and special boiler. Kitchen, with range, sink and all applicances. Back porch, ten feet from which is ice house practically inexhaustible in summer; servants' bath room, etc.

I. SECOND FLOOR. Two communicating chambers, with bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; total, four chambers with three bath rooms.

II. BACK BUILDING, 2nd FLOOR. Four chambers, two closets, bath room with W. C. adjoining.

THIRD FLOOR. Two chambers, two large lofts.

Every room has gas fixture and eight rooms have open fire-places in addition to furnace registers.

The water supply is unexceptionable, its every source being from springs rising within the confines of the place and all having passed analytical examination. Two tanks (each in contact with outside air) having a combined capacity of 14,500 gallons, a wind mill a horse power and an overshot wheel supplying the motor. Three dams (likewise spring water) contribute the ice supply and two of them are stocked with fish. The outbuildings are a barn with stalls for six horses and eight carriages, with ample storage for hay, straw and oats and having a coachman's room, a tenant's house of five rooms, a large cow and sheep stable and numerous sheds, etc.

This property is without incumbrance and possession can be given in June, 1904.

The office of the Preston Lumber and Coal Company was moved Tuesday from its old quarters in the Ravenscroft building to rooms in the Garrett National Bank building on Second street.

Mrs. Julius C. Renninger, who spent a week or two in Washington, returned home Monday afternoon. She was accompanied by her aunt, Mrs. Burkhardt, who will be her guest a week or two.

Services will be held at the M. E. church, Mountain Lake Park as follows: Preaching at 10.45 a. m.; Sunday School at 2:30 p. m., on Sunday, April 3rd, and prayer meeting Thursday evening at 7.30.

Mr. Bruce Blocher, one of Garrett county's popular and energetic young men, was the guest of friends here yesterday on his way to Chicago, Ill., where he has accepted a very desirable position.—Frostburg Paper.

Nathan R. Selby, of Selbysport, was in Oakland last Friday and Saturday on busisness. Mr. Selby recently purchased the Jonas Frazee property at the above town and contemplates making some needed improvements after which in all probability a first-class store will be opened to meet the demands made in that section by the citizens.

THREE INCIPITENT BLAZES

And Damages of a Minor Character Resulted.

Within the past three or four days the citizens of Liberty street have experienced three fires, but in all cases the blazes were discovered in their incipiency and put out before any great damage to any of the property affected resulted.

Friday the roof of Mr. Julius C. Renninger's residence was found to be on fire, having caught from a spark blown across the street from burning underbrush and about the the same time a bed mattress that was upon the porch roof at Mr. E. H. Sincell's residence, adjoining that of Mr. Renninger's was also discovered to be on fire. With a bucket of water both blazes were extinguished in a moment.

Tuesday evening the roof of Mr. G. S. Hamill's residence on the same street was set on fire by sparks emitted from a chimney. The blaze was gaining some headway when discovered by Mr. James Delawder who claimed to the top of the house and tore the burning shingles away.

The many Oakland friends of Joseph King, of near Gorman, were pleased to see him in town yesterday, he having recently recovered from a very severe attack of illness.

Mr. Wm. R. Brydon, one of the most prominent citizens of Garrett county who resides at Bloomington, and who suffered since early in the winter from a slight stroke of paralysis, is rapidly recovering his health.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Orr, of Kingwood, arrived here Tuesday evening to superintend the removal of their household goods from the Nelson property to the Naylor property which will be occupied by Mr. Orr and his family this summer.

Mr. W. McCullough Brown, of near Bayard, was an Oakland visitor Tuesday where he inspected a number of houses for some friends who desire to come here from Philadelphia and Baltimore to spend the summer.

The time to go after business is all the time. A business man must be alert and improve every opportunity. A carefully planned system of advertising will do more to acquaint the people with the store and its methods and its goods than any thing else.

The friends of Rev. E. Manges will be glad to learn that his daughter Miss Corinna, residing with her brother at Hummelstown, Pa., who has been ill with typhoid fever a week or two, is somewhat improved and that strong hopes are entertained for her recovery.

Cashier R. C. McCandlish, of the Friendsville Bank, accompanied by Messrs. D. H. Custer and John H. Cuppett, also of Friendsville, were in Oakland last Friday where they attended the meeting of the creditors of the Commonwealth Tanning Company held at the office of Attorney G. S. Hamill.

A number of leading farmers met at Oakland on Wednesday preparatory to applying for a charter for a Grange at Oakland. A meeting was called for Tuesday evening, 7.30, sharp, at the Court House. All producers of soil products are requested to be present to help select good officers.

The schools throughout the county—those that did not lose any time during the scholastic year—closed on last Friday afternoon. The schools compelled to close during the epidemic of diseases which prevail in many sections of the county, will remain open until the time thus lost has been made up.

In St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church in Oakland services will be conducted as follows: Preaching this (Thursday) evening at 7.30; preaching and preparatory services Friday evening at 7.30; preaching and communion services Sunday morning at 10.30 Easter service Sunday evening at 7.30; Council meeting Monday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

Many of the merchants expect a good spring business while others seem to doubt what they may expect. The result will be largely due to the careful work and vigorous advertising of the merchant. People will respond to the effort of the careful merchant. Putting good business ideas into advertising space will help a merchant to talk intelligently to a great many people and there are few instances in which profits will not follow.

Prolific Winter Layers.

Mrs. Ross Compton, near Grantsville, Garrett county, has gathered 179 dozen of eggs from about 60 hens since Jannary 1 last, from which she has realized $45.20 in a little less than three months. The expense in feeding these fine winter layers was not much felt, as the Compton farm is one of the finest in the county. This ought to be an inducement for some persons to embark into the poultry and egg production. But little capital is needed and the labor light and easy. Some skill and care are called for. With Mrs. Compton the business is almost a science.

MEETING OF THE CREDITORS

Of the Commonwealth Tanning Company Held last Friday.

A meeting of the creditors of the Commonwealth Tanning Company of Garrett county which was adjudged bankrupt by United States District Judge Morris in Baltimore early in this month, was held at the law office of Gilmor S. Hamill in Oakland last Friday when a majority of the creditors were present either in person or by proxy.

The meeting was presided over by Referee in Bankruptcy Albert A. Doub, of Cumberland. Among those present at the meetiug were Samuel G. Maxwell, of Titusville, Pa., president of the corporation; U. G. Palmer, its manager; O. C. Crane, of the Terra Alta Bank; F. M. Reynolds, of the Keyser Bank; R. C. McCandlish, of the Friendsville Bank, and representatives of various other financial institutions of Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

The creditors elected Messrs. Fred. A. Thayer, of Oakland, Davisson Armstrong, of Frostburg, and F. M. Reynolds, of Keyser, trustees.

Messrs. F. A. Thayer and E. H. Sincell, of Oakland, who were appointed receivers by Judge Morris, will make sale of the property at an early date.

NEW COMPANY CHARTERED

Which Will Operate Near Oakland With a Capital Stock of $25,000.

Yesterday Secretary of State William M. O. Dawson, of West Virginia granted a charter to the Preston Glass Sand Company which is capitalized at $25,000. The corporation will operate over in Preston county, West Va., on lands recently purchased from the Preston Lumber and Coal Company, upon which a fine body of almost pure silica has been discovered. The incorporators are J. M. Orr, of Oakland; P. C. Stemple, of Kingwood; C. N. Orr, of Hiorra; Ira E. Robinson and G. H. Kunst, of Grafton.

DIED.

COOPER—At his home in District No. 10, this county, of a complication of diseases, March 23rd, Charles Cooper, aged about 32 years. The deceased leaves a mother, father and six sisters. He was a moral young man, well liked by all who knew him. His funeral was conducted by Rev. I. W. Abernathy, the interment being made in the home burying ground.

Public Sale of Personal Property.

I will offer at public sale at my farm near Schell, W. Va., on the 14th day of April, the following property: 3 cows, 3 two-year old heifers, 2 yearling steers, 23 head of sheep, 2 hogs, mowing machine, horse rake, farm wagon, plows, harrow, household furniture and other articles too numerous to mention. A credit of 6 months will be given on all sums of five dollars or over, by purchaser giving note with approved security and bearing interest from day of sale; under five dollars, cash on day of sale.

4 JOSEPHUS HARVEY.

May Be Life Cripple.

Mr. A. J. Frazee, of Garrett county was recently thrown from a load of hay. His hip was mashed and it is feared he may never walk again without crutches. Mr. Frazee is a brother of Charles F. Frazee, East End, Pittsburg. He was formerly a well known coffee salesman. In 1891 Mr. Frazee went to live on his farm in Western Maryland.

THIS SPACE WILL BE TAKEN NEXT WEEK BY

In First National Bank Building.

A. D. Naylor & Co. are now prepared to furnish anything in the vehicle or implement line at the lowest prices, having received this season six car loads of vehicles and farm wagons and also one car of implements. 3t.

Drs. W. H. H. Bixler and Benj. F. Selby, who have formed a co-partnership for the purpose of practicing dentistry, have secured rooms in the First National Bank building and will occupy the same within a few days. The rooms will be fitted up expressly for these two gentlemen and will contain all the conveniences necessary for the successful practice of their profession.

Never mind, this condition of life will not last forever. There are pessimists who live on the dark side of things and who hunt misery with a club every time they move. You can never get any encouragement from them, nor can they be cured. Shake them and hunt up the sunny fellows. There are plenty of them to be found anywhere and they are worth their weight in gold. The business situation is brightening up all around; prosperity has not deserted us and life is worth the living.

UNCLE HENRY ON REFORM.

This world ain't just as I would make it if I could have my way;
Life ain't exactly as I'd take it, if I could have my say;
I know a hundred things at least that I would change about
If I could rule o'er man and beast and fling
the troubles out,
And yit, now since you ask, I don't know just where I'd begin—There'd be so much to judge and weigh before you started in.

I know things ain't just as I'd like 'em, I know there's evil here,
But where and when and how to strike 'em and make 'em disappear—
There's where the rub comes in; somehow the minute that you start
To change affairs, why, there's a row, and things git ripped apart;
The more I think I'd do if all this world was just my own
The more there seems to be that I'd just kind of let alone.

The men that find the wrongs and fight 'em,
as far as I can find,
Don't seem to git much, when they right
'em, but kicks from them behind;
I'd like to help along some way to fix things here below,
So only doin' right would pay and sin would have to go;
But, seein' how the ones who change things here are hammered at,
I guess I'll just be good myself and let it go at that.

—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Record-Herald.

Three Times and Out

By ELENORA E. REBER

JOHN BENTON was in despair. He had borne up twice under a like affliction, but the third was a little too much even for one of his proven long-suffering disposition. His trouble consisted in nothing more nor less than the fact that his sister, who had been his housekeeper but one short year, had just told him of her intention to marry Timothy Martin.

"Great Scott, Millie, I thought you said you would not marry if I brought you out here."

"I did, John, but 'wise men sometimes change their minds,' and you know that is every woman's prerogative, especially in a case like this."

"But what am I to do?"

"Send for Janet."

"Not I. I have brought the last sister I am going to out here, just to have them marry when I begin to think they are going to stay by me."

"Well, then, why don't you marry some one yourself and be sure of always having a housekeeper?"

"Sure of nothing. She would probably elope with the first strange settler that took a claim within 25 miles. Tim Martin can't give you half as good a home as you have here, Millie," he continued. "You'd better stay with me."

"I know, Jack, his house isn't much more than half as big as yours, and there isn't a tree anywhere near it, and maybe he won't ever have as many acres in his farm as you have, but I love him, Jack, dear," she whispered into her brother's ear, "and I know I shall be happy with him, and I know that I couldn't be happy, now, without him. You don't understand, Jack, how it is. I wish you would fall in love with some nice girl, then you would know. I will come over every week and clean and bake and help you all that I can, but I—I can't stay."

And then John stroked her hair gently and told her it was all right, and said he would get on well enough, for Millie was his favorite sister, and he could not bear to see her distressed.

"Martin is a good fellow and doing well, and if she must marry I would rather it would be him than any of the others I know around here. But it is rather hard on me, just the same," he thought.

John Benton was one of the first settlers in that section of the country, and he had the best location the land around afforded. A creek cut his farm in two, and he had acquired several sections skirting the stream on both sides, thus getting running water for his cattle, and also securing a little timber, and some of the wild fruits which grew along the stream. It was a really beautiful place, and he had built good, substantial buildings upon it, instead of mere skeletons, as most people did at first. When everything was ready he asked his oldest sister to come out and live with him. She did so and stayed with him two years, then married a neighbor. Another sister was invited to take her place in his home, and she, too, married after a time. Now Millie was also preparing to follow in their footsteps.

"I would marry some girl if I knew one who could keep house decently and who would be willing to go into it on a business basis; but these girls are so silly and care more for a little sentiment than they do for a good home. There isn't anyone around here that I'd want, though, and I can't go traveling around the country looking for one, so I suppose I might as well settle down into a confirmed bachelor, and learn to do my own housework," he mused to himself that evening.

The next morning he was driving across the country on an errand to a neighbor's when there suddenly came into view on a little knoll in front of him a woman, who, when she arrived at its top, looked around in every direction, then, seeing him, waved her hand and started toward him.

"Some tenderfoot who is lost," mused Benton, as he drove toward her.

"How do you do," the woman, who proved to be a young and pretty one, said, as she came within hearing distance. "I wonder if you can tell me where I am. I am boarding at Mr. White's, and I guess the unbroken whiteness of this prairie must have confused me, for I am lost. I started for the schoolhouse, but I am sure I have gone farther than it is from the house."

"You don't mean to say that you have walked all the way from White's this morning?" exclaimed John, touching his cap to her. "Why, that is five miles. Aren't you nearly frozen?"

"No, I am not cold," she answered, "but I feel as though I had walked ten times five miles."

"Well, you can't walk back, that's sure, and if you will allow me I will take you over. It won't be a great deal out of my way."

Although he spoke thus questioningly, he alighted to assist her into the sleigh, for there was obviously no other course open to her than to accept his offer.

"I am John Benton," said the man, by way of introducing himself. "That is my home you see back half a mile. Perhaps you've heard Mr. White speak of me."

"Yes, I have heard your name, Mr. Benton. I am Miss Thurston, the teacher. I am awfully sorry to put you to so much trouble. It was stupid of me to get lost, and I thank you for your kindness from the bottom of my heart."

"Don't mention it, Miss Thurston; it's no trouble at all. And you are certainly not to be blamed for getting lost, for even old settlers do that frequently."

"But hadn't you better let me drive back to the house, to get warm, and let my sister make a cup of tea for you," he said, growing suddenly solicitous.

"Thank you, Mr. Benton, that is kind of you, but I am really not cold, and I shall be late at school as it is."

What she thought to herself was: "It is bad enough to be obliged to accept his help when I am an utter stranger, without putting myself under heavier obligations. Besides, there is no telling what kind of an old maid his sister may be, nor what she might think of this exceedingly unconventional, if unavoidable, affair. She would probably imagine I had designs on her handsome brother, for he certainly is a good looking man, and as polite as he can be. Of course, I really ought to fall in love with him after such a romantic meeting," then suddenly realizing whither her thoughts were trending, she actually blushed. Fortunately for her, he was too much interested in his own thoughts to see the change of her color. He, too, was thinking strange things, but for some reason which he did not try to analyze, he did not care to interrupt his reverie.

"She is a fine looking girl,' he thought to himself, "and plucky, too, to walk so far through the snow, though it is easy to see that she is pretty nearly tuckered out. She has just the color of brown eyes that I like, and the hair blowing about her temples is beautiful. I suppose there are half a dozen young chaps in love with her already, who will try to win her. A girl can't be in this country a week before every young claim jumper in the region knows it and commences to pester the life out of her, and she has to marry one of them to get rid of the crowd."

Really, it almost made him angry to think of it. "And, of course, they won't have any more sense with a girl like her; what on earth would she want with such fellows as they? I wonder if anyone has asked her to go to that entertainment at the Gray schoolhouse? It's four miles out of my way, but I've a mind to ask her! That isn't half so far as some of them go for a girl!"

He did not drive rapidly, and he did not think all this at once, but sandwiched his thoughts between sentences. When he arrived at the schoolhouse and he helped her out of the buggy, her hand rested a moment in his, and then and there he made the quickest resolution of his life, and the most important, namely, that if her heart was not already in the keeping of another he would win it. He was not sorry when they found the scholars had gone home again, evidently thinking that she was not coming that day, and they went in, while John stirred up the fire, insisting that she must warm herself before he took her on to Mr. White's.

Miss Thurston protested at his putting himself to so much trouble for her and insisted that she could walk back, but he would not hear of it. Perhaps it is not surprising that, under these circumstances, their acquaintance progressed very rapidly, and when John asked if he might call on her she said she would "be very glad to have him, for he seemed already like an old friend."

Well, that was the beginning, and it does not take much imagination to see what the end would be if he had his way about it, and he did.

If there had been enough people round about who knew how frequently John availed himself of the privilege she gave him, and how often they went sleigh riding, there would have been much wagging of tongues. Mrs. White, however, was not a gossip and saw few people, while John's sister looked wise and said nothing, for Miss Thurston had won her heart as well as his, and when her school was out John announced to Millie that she need not plan to come over and cook and bake for him after she was carried.

"Three times is out," he said, "and—"

"And you've made up your mind that it is better to risk an elopement than another sister. Well, you are wise," she finished for him.—Prairie Farmer.

The Trouble.

"I wonder why Mr. Oldbow goes to see Miss Frocks after she has rejected him so emphatically," remarked Hojack.

"Just to pass away the time," suggested Tomdik.

What Is Wrong with the Picture?

EARLY WORK IN METALLURGY

Great Skill Had Been Attained by Artisans Mentioned in the Bible.

"On the subject of emtallurgy the Old Testament is our best authority, and the accounts we there find lead us to believe that considerable skill had been attained by the very earliest nations," said a writer in the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "Tubal Cain was, we are told, a great worker in metal. Among the earliest allusions to works in metal in the books of Moses is the mention made of the presents offered to Rebecca: Abraham's servant gave her, 'And it came to pass, as the camels had done drinking, that the man took a golden earring, of half a shekel weight, and two bracelets for her hands of ten shekels' weight of gold,' and spoke to her of his master's riches, particularly mentioning silver. 'And the Lord hath blessed my master greatly, and he is become great; and He hath given him flocks, and herds, and silver, and gold, and men-servants and camels, and asses.' Gen. 24, 22-35.)

"The accounts of the ornaments and utensils in the history of Jacob, and of Joseph, and in various other passages of the books of the Old Testament prove in like manner the extensive employment of metals at that time; and their being applied to purposes of luxury indicates that considerable progress had been made in the art; long use naturally preceding any attempt at refinement. The earliest recorded names of sculptors (and they are metal workers) are in the Old Testament. One was Bezaleeb, of the tribe of Judah, who was filled with the spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning work, to work in gold, and in silver and in brass, and in cutting of stones to set them, and in carving of timber; with him is associated Aholiab, of the tribe of Dan. They were the artists appointed to execute the work of the tabernacle. (Exodus 31.)

"Among the Egyptians also the employment of metal was known in times prior to any historical record; and it is probable that the metallurgical knowledge possessed by other countries was derived directly or indirectly from this source; indeed, in proof of this, the casting of the golden calf by the Israelites may be cited. The Asyrians and Babylonians attained very great proficiency in the arts connected with metallurgy, for works in gold and bronze decorated the gardens of Semiramis, representing a variety of subjects. The artificer employed by Solomon in the decoration of the temple was Hiram, a native of Tyre. He was a widow's son of the tribe of Naphtali; for he cast two pillars of brass, of 18 cubits high apiece. (1. Kings, 7.) The Phoenicians art has been immortalized by Homer with the distinguished title of 'The Sidonians, the Skilled Workers.' India furnishes some curious examples, such as idols and utensils. The Greeks displayed exquisite taste in their specimens of statuaries and were highly celebrated for the superiority of workmanship."

His Present.

"John," she said, "your little wifey has been saving up her money to buy you a nice present."

"Good little wifey," he replied. "What is it?"

"A smoking jacket," she explained. "And I saved the money all myself out of the house allowance. Wasn't I thoughtful?"

"Splendid!" he exclaimed.

"What did you do with that I brought home last night?" he asked in some surprise.

"Oh, that's what I saved the smoking-jacket money out of," she answered, "and there wasn't any left."—Chicago Post.

"NO TIPS" ON INVITATION.

Suggestion from England Which Might Well Be Adopted by American Entertainers.

"Tips?" said a well-to-do man the other day, according to the New York Sun. "They are getting beyond the means of ordinary folks in decent society. I visit nearly every Sunday in spring, summer and autumn the country house of some wealthy acquaintance, and I give you my word the tips are never less than eight or ten dollars, and I recall one house where they amounted to $15.

"That means from Saturday afternoon to Monday morning. If I give the butler at any of my friends' houses less than five dollars he takes the first opportunity to make me uncomfortable; and all the other servants must be treated in like fashion, though the tip need not be so large.

"The thing is worse here than in England, because tipping is systematized there and it is not here. If you are merely a visitor at an English country house and do not shoot or fetch along a horse or an automobile, your tips can be kept within a reasonable limit. But here you are exposed to a tipping competition with men who have no notion of the value of money.

"I saw not long ago a card of invitation to the house of a titled Englishman on which was engraved: 'It is requested that no gratuity be given to the servants.' Why can't something of the sort be done here? Would it not minister to the dignity of a rich man to make an agreement with his servants to give them a suitable tip for every guest that comes to the house, and then request the guests to give no tips?

"Such an arrangement would be no serious tax upon the host. Moreover, it would save his guests from occasional embarrassment and give his hospitality a less sordid air."

MUCH TIME WAS WASTED.

For Years He Had Wound Every Night a Clock That Would Run Eight Days.

Next to his prayers, the most regular and unfailing duty that old Mr. Snipes performed was the winding up of his clock.

As he explained to his chums, "That clock is the pride of my life. For 35 years, man and boy, have I wound him up every night nigh upon ten o'clock, and always before 11. I couldn't sleep without going of it; I'd as soon, or sooner, go without my food than miss doing of it."

It was quite a mania with him, and his good wife, sharing his pride in the timepiece, naturally aided his madness on the one theme, says Ally Sloper.

One evening they had a new acquaintance to supper, who happened to be a watchmaker.

"Excuse me a minute," said Mr. Snipes, at ten-thirty, "while I wind up the clock.

The jeweler looked at it. "That's rather a nice clock," he said.

"I should think it is," cried Mr. Snipes. "It's the pride of my heart. So it is of the missus's—ain't it, matey?"

"That it is," said his complacent spouse.

"Man and boy," went on Mr. Snipes, commencing his usual story, "man and boy for 35 years have I wound up that clock every night regular between ten and 11——"

"Every night?" struck in the jeweler.

"Ay, man, every night!" echoed Mr. Snipes.

"Well, of all the born idiots!" returned the other. "Why, how many weeks of your life have you wasted? It's an eight-day clock!"

Intemperance in Business

By REV. B. L. McELROY, of Columbus, Ohio.

THERE is an intemperance widespread and deadly that finds many of its victims among business men. Sagacious men who have watched the movement of life for a generation, dread this form of intemperance expressing itself in a high-strung life of endless excitement when men become "besotted with the cares of this life."

In both business and professional circles men are playing themselves out by the excesses in which they indulge. This intoxication arises either from success or the desire for it. Lack of moderation here often renders men ridiculous, even if not making them base. Generally it sends them on to impossible ventures, imperiling themselves and many others. Once a victim of this subtle form of intoxication, a man is about certain to launch upon a life that would suggest a delirium. Every city has its annual tragedies, bound up in the prose of honorable business life, and this want of control furnishes a larger quota than any other cause.

A new crusade in the interest of commercial sobriety is decidedly in order. He is a poor spectator of passing events who has not marked the downfall of many a one attempting to play the part of "a high roller." This intemperance is manifest also in the eagerness displayed for social preference, a harmful and ignoble ambition, surely, when it prompts to overreaching. Because of this mania the social world to-day is full of adventurers, adventuresses, and adventuring families, people who feel the necessity of keeping up appearances, even if "on the installment plan."

WEAPONS OF THE JAPANESE

Among Them the Sword Is the Most Important and Is Finely Made.

In the Detroit Museum of Art is an interesting collection of war implements of Old Japan. The collection was made by Mr. Frederick Stearns in Japan some 15 years ago, when comparatively few tourists from this quarter of the world visited that country, and when Japanese cities were surfeited with the implements which were supplanted in 1870 by the introduction of modern methods of warfare and the abolishment of the feudal system, says the Detroit Tribune.

Two complete suits of armor are in the collection. One of these dates back from the sixteenth century; the other is of more modern date, but exactly like it in all its parts. A complete suit of armor as worn by the Japanese soldiers of the higher class previous to 1870 consists of a helmet, chain mail in parts and breast armor, together with two hip pieces. Chain mail pantaloons, lined with silk brocade, protect the thighs. They are worn under the hip pieces. An iron mask covers in some cases the entire visage, in others only the nose, cheeks and chin, allowing the eyes to be uncovered, and these are protected by the broad helmet. The shoulders are protected by two pieces with fine bronze open-work mountings. Upon these are fittings in which in battles a small flag is fastened bearing the crest or monogram of the wearer. Chain or armor sleeves protect the arms. The back of the hand is protected by embossed iron. A body piece covers the chest and back, held together by tyings of heavy silk green braid. In the back of this are two sockets for the banner pole. The helmet is made of heavy lacquered iron. Two cresis branch from the front in a moon-shaped manner and between them a bronze disk representing the sun. A pair of sandals completes the outfit. This armor is exceedingly heavy and looks impregnable to such weapons as were used.

The lance and bow were noble weapons, but the sword outranked them. A sword with the Japanese in feudal times was the most important of all weapons in war and for personal use. Iyeyasu, who was the first great Shogun of Tokugawa, 1610-1630, termed the sword "The Soul of the Samurai." To him it was the most important of his possessions.

Upon this weapon the Japanese lavished all the resources of their art. The forging of the blade became a high art, and its experts won great honor and fame; the making of a famed blade was a subject of meditation and prayer; upon the scabbard was lavished all the laquerer's skill; to the guard and other metal mountings were given an infinite variety of lessons from nature and her creatures and from the religious and symbolic legends. The higher classes wore two, and the children of these classes commenced in early youth to wear wooden ones. The proper use of the sword was made a part of the system of education, and the ceremonies attending its use in everyday life were most elaborate and minute.

The abolition of the Shogunate in 1868 was soon followed by a decree abolishing the wearing of the sword; hence, there came into disuse hundreds of thousands of beautifully decorated weapons, which have been distributed all over the world by purchasing tourists, and thousands, deprived of their ornaments, have been converted into more peaceful forms, such as knives, tools, etc.

A time was in Japan when a man's station could be determined by the sword he wore at his side. A person magnificently garbed with an ordinary weapon would be adjudged of low degree, while a poorly dressed person wearing a fine sword would be extended distinguished homage. A fortune was invested in arms. A rich noble often possessed 1,500 swords, some of them costing $1,400, and the daimios vied with each other in owning elegant specimens of the armorer's craft. All the metal work of Japan, the beautiful designs, and exquisite hammering, are due to the many wars. The ornamentation of the guard and sword's accessories have been the craze of tourists and collectors for 30 years.

GRAND OPERA IN EUROPE.

Not So Much Money in Music There as in Great Britain and America.

London and New York are practically the only important cities in which opera pays its way. On the continent of Europe, although most opera houses are subsidized, the money comes from the privy purse of the sovereign, and not from the national or municipal funds or rates. In Vienna the opera house, which cost £500,000 to build, is supported personally (and at a rumored cost of about £70,000 a year, although no official figures are available) by the emperor, who also gives nearly £25,000 a year to the opera house at Buda-Pesth. And yet the Imperial Opera company of Vienna is not to be compared with that at Covent Garden.

At Munich the regent of Bavaria pays for the old Residenz theater a subvention of £12,500 a year out of his own pocket, besides covering any deficit. At Wurtemberg the king pays the deficit, which amounts to about £15,000 a year. In Berlin the subsidy of £54,000 a year is granted "from the private means standing at the disposal of the king." At Weimar the deficit is paid partly by the monarch, partly by the government. In Russia the czar personally backs the opera house and theaters at a cost last year of about £300,000, a certain proportion of which, however, is paid as pensions to retired artists. Prices of seats vary from 5s. to 15s. 6d. a night. At Dresden the king of Saxony gives a subvention of £31,000 a year and also pays a deficit of about £15,000 annually. In all these cases it will be observed that the money comes out of the private pocket of the monarch, and the opera may indeed be considered as one of the expenses of maintaining a court.

Apart from republican France, only in the smaller countries—such as Belgium, Denmark, Egypt, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland—are the opera houses subsidized by the state, and the amounts paid are comparatively small. In Norway the subsidy—the very trifling one of £1,100 for both opera and drama—is paid by the municipality. And it is the same in Italy, although the land of song needs comparatively little subvention, for the populace are practically all opera-goers. There has been no subsidy at all necessary at Rome since 1898.

In France subsidies are an old custom, although they have not been provocative of enterprise. For example, at the Paris grand opera the manager receives a yearly subvention of £32,000. Yet the repertory is wretchedly small.

Auto for Farm Work.

The following is the record of a gasoline tractor used in England for drawing agricultural machines: Six acres of grass cut in three hours and 40 minutes, using 5½ gallons of gasoline; three acres of grass cut in one hour and 35 minutes, using three gallons of gasoline; two and one-tenth acres of land, with hard surface, plowed to an average depth of seven inches, in five hours and 50 minutes, using a double-furrow plow, and consuming 7¾ gallons of gasoline; 19 acres of wheat harvested in ten hours, using 8½ gallons of gasoline. The cost of the machine is said to be $1,500.

OPINION OF THE EDITOR OF "NEBRASKA FARMER".

He Expresses His Approval of American Immigration to Canada.

During the Winter months the head of the family consults with the other members as to the prospects for the future, and doubtless one of the most interesting topics discussed is that of moving to some district where it is possible to more easily secure what is necessary for a comfortable existence; where it is an easy matter to become possessed of sufficient farm land to assure a competence for the future. This, not only interests the head of the family but every individual member of it.

Having before me the knowledge where he can secure a home with the expenditure of but little money, it is well for him to obtain all information possible regarding the productiveness of the land in the country that he may select. For several years past a large number of Americans have removed to Western Canada and as nearly as it can be ascertained almost all of these have expressed themselves satisfied with the conditions that exist there. During the past Summer a number of the Editors of Farm papers throughout the United States made a personal visit on a tour of inspection and the reports of these gentlemen prove interesting reading. Mr. H. E. Heath, Editor of the "Nebraska Farmer," a paper enjoying a wide circulation as well as the confidence of its subscribers, after giving some idea of the extent of this wonderful country says:

"Western Canada is the last unoccupied and unimproved good agricultural land in America available today."

He then discusses its possibilities for raising live stock and the advantages it possesses for dairying, farming and wheat growing, and says: "What has been said about the country as to the ability of the soil, the yield of wonderful crops of wheat, is quite justified."

To quote further from Mr. Heath, he says, referring to climate:

"These people (skeptical ones) do not know or realize that altitude more than latitude makes climates; that large bodies of water, both fresh and salt, that never freeze over, exert a wonderful influence on climate. Another influence on climate, more potent than those named above, which applies more to the Alberta district, is the warm Chinook breeze from the Pacific Ocean, which is 600 or 700 miles nearer than Colorado or Wyoming, besides the Rocky Mountain range is not nearly so high nor half so far from the ocean as it is down in the States.

"In further considering the climate of the Canadian prairies, we should not lose sight of the fact of the influence of the rains; the total average rainfall for the season is but 13.55 inches for the territories, and 17.32 inches in Manitoba, and that the amounts falling between April 1st and October 1st are respectively 9.29 inches and 12.87 inches, or about three-fourths of the entire rainfall. From the middle of June to the middle of July there are over two hours more daylight in every twenty-four hours than there is in Nebraska. The main reason why Western Canada wheat grows to such perfection is the effect of solar light, or longer period of sunshine it gets each day. This is what makes seeds or grain more perfect, grown in this country than elsewhere. This extraordinary rapid growth of vegetation under the influence of this long continued sunshine exceeds anything known in lower latitudes. * * *

"We do not wish it understood that wheat alone is the main product of this country; it leads in that, yet it is destined to become famous for its cattle, horses and sheep and for its dairy products. We saw more and larger bands of cattle and sheep grazing in Assinibola and Alberta than we ever saw on the western plains of the United States. One band of cattle numbering 5,000 head were grazing on the rich grass and sheep without number."

The Government of the Dominion of Canada is still using the same energetic efforts which have been used for the past 5 or 6 years to settle up these western prairies, and on application to any Agent of the Canadian Government the settler will be able to secure a certificate entitling him to a low rate which will give him the opportunity of visiting any portion of Canada's grain producing domain.

LATEST ENGLISH KINK.

Bridesmaid's Muff Supplants the Bouquet That Has Been in Use for Many Years.

If we cannot have brand new ideas to meet the demand of this novelty loving age we can have adaptations of old fashions that answer the purpose just as well as if they were really new comers. Such an adaptation—and a pretty one, too—is that of substituting a muff of dainty design and elaborate workmanship for the regulation bouquet, which for many a day has been dutifully carried by the bridesmaids at fashionable weddings. The custom, which originated a century or more ago, was revived this season, meeting with especial favor in King Edward's land. Things of beauty, indeed, are these bridal muffs, delicately perfumed and harmonizing with the color scheme and accessories of the wedding. Sometimes they are of a choice variety of fur, but as often as not fur is introduced to produce an effect of contrast or is omitted altogether, satin, soft and lustrous, mingled with embroidery and frills of chiffon or lace being substituted. Heart shape is the preferred one for muffs of this sort, the accompanying sketch showing the effect. Fashioned of pearl white satin, the outline is accentuated and softened by full frills of mousseline de soie, large bows of satin ribbon adding the final decorative touch. A handsome chain lends an extra touch of the glorification to the bridesmaid's muff.

The muff is of ordinary shape, particularly the "granny" type in vogue at present, is adapted to this form of embellisment and garniture, satin as a background or hand painting serving admirably for foundation material.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE WIFE'S ALLOWANCE.

Necessity of Asking for Every Penny She Spends Is Humiliating to American Women.

Next to love, the most important, often the most importunate, question between a man and his wife is money. To the young and romantic this may seem a sordid condition. Love, in their view, means bonbons and long-stemmed "American beauties." Later on, when they learn that it also means taxes and coal bills, shoes, pew rent and groceries, they will see why it is that the most beautiful superstructure must have a firm financial foundation.

Then will come, or at least ought to come, the question of an allowance for the wife—a very modern question in the opinion of the many, and a foolish one in the view of the old-fashioned and conservative. It is true that it is raised more often than it used to be. The reason is that women's views of life, especially of married life, have advanced. Many were self-supporting before marriage, and many more might have been so if they chose. To them the exchange of financial freedom for absolute dependence is not attractive. They had the control of money before marriage; they reasonably desire the control of at least a little after marriage.

To men of sympathetic imagination this question may never present itself. They supply unasked not merely the wife's known and expressed needs, but, realizing their own fondness for a new tie or the occasional entertainment of a friend at luncheon, they appreciate a woman's need of funds for which she need not account.

The other type of man—the type which pays the regular bills and takes no thought of extraneous wants—should remember that married life is often compared to a partnership. It is not necessary that both partners draw equal sums from the profits of the business, but even the junior partner expects to use his small share as he pleases. If he is worthy to be a member of the firm he will not take advantage of his position, nor draw more than the business will stand.

The Youth's Companion truthfully says that the necessity of asking for every cent she spends is humiliating to any woman of sensibility. She wants her allowance, as Burns said of wealth:

Not for to hide it in a hedge, or for a train resplendent,
But for the glorious privilege of being independent;

and if she has it she will use it, in most cases, wisely, and both she and her husband will be happier.

MAGIC MEAL CHEST.

How a Humble Piece of Pantry Furniture Became Bewitched Under Strange Circumstances.

It was in the latter part of the seventeenth century that the meal chest which has always been in the Spofford family and now owned by Mrs. Orin Spofford, of Georgetown, Mass., became bewitched under the most peculiar circumstances.

The meal chest is an ordinary one and was kept in the attic of Mr. Moody Spofford's house at Rowley Hill, filled with meal which was used in the family. Hannah Hazen, who was employed in the family, was of good, respectable family and lived in the town, the only thing known against her being the information obtained from the children that she had been trying to coax fortune through experiments practiced by the old-time superstitions.

The statement of the proceedings has been extracted from a written account of Dr. Jeremiah Spofford, who was asked to prepare it, and which was corroborated by a dozen witnesses, all of whom were present. It was one afternoon, while Hannah sat in one of the chambers quietly spinning, that she became annoyed by strange sounds, which seemed to come from the side of the house, and for which she was unable to account. They seemed to be from the sides of the walls, and responded to each and every pound of her fist on the laths.

She became so frightened that at last Moody Spofford, who was passing the house was called in, and he in turn was amazed at the sounds. He carefully examined the walls, striking them with a hammer to see whence came the sounds, but finding no loose lath, was perplexed all the more, as every blow which he gave was followed with another of equal sound. The jar of the spinning wheel was incapable to produce the noise, and, at last, unable to fathom the mystery he gave it up and left for his home.

He had, however, not been long home before he was for the second time called to the house, but again was he baffled. Had this happened during the time of the witchcraft excitement, Hannah's chances of dying a natural death would have been small, but as it was the mystery only excited the curiosity of the neighbors, for when later she was sent to the attic on account of the trouble down stairs, to sift meal to her amazement the chest, which was filled to the brim with meal, commenced to jog away two inched at a time, until it had reached the corner, and after a little it became so excited that when her dress touched it it flew to the ceiling and also went over the stairs.

This was too much for the family, and the children fled in fear to the neighbors, telling them the wonderful feats that were happening to the house. Curious people gathered in large numbers and soon grew so excited that poor Hannah was set to work touching everything to see how it worked. The door latch flew up with great rapidity when she touched the door, and even the farmer's heavy workbench when touched jogged rapidly over the floor. When, however, a horseshoe was fastened over the door the latch stopped its antics and the table ceased to move.

Excitement was at its height when the owner of the house walked in, disgusted at the commotion, sent the neighbors to their homes, summoned the ministers and had prayers said over the girl. The next day was the Sabbath, and all was quiet in the household. Monday, as soon as Mr. Spofford had left the house, the neighbors for a second time gathered and the same performances were gone through, this time three large men, Dr. Amos Spofford, David Thurston, Esq., and Capt. William Perley, all sat on the chest, and yet with their united weights did it rise nearly to the ceiling and start to turn a corner.

The master of the house, suspecting that the work might be renewed, came home, and the ministers were for the second time called for prayers, and the matter was stopped through the sending away of the girl who was at the bottom of the trouble, and who seems never afterward to have been gifted with the same power.

Ever after the chairs, tables and meal chest kept to their own places, and although the matter was quieted down, yet the witnesses could not be silenced through its being an optical delusion which had occurred while they were in the room.—Boston Globe.

An Empress' Furs.

The dowager empress of Russia is the owner of the finest collection of Russian sables in the world, and she has given some exceedingly valuable presents of this beautiful fur to her sister, Queen Alexandra. When traveling, and for winter sledge drives, the empress often wears a mantle which has a lining valued at $50,000. It was made of skins collected for her by the governor of a polar province, where the taxes are paid in furs.

Easter Lesson

Easter lilies are silver trumpets announcing the joyous festival of the Christian year. The universal human heart gladly responds to the summons and makes its pilgrimage to the empty tomb near to Calvary. There immortal hope is rekindled, and the world's Dead March changes to a Hallelujah Chorus. Hail to Easter!

Our first meditation is naturally upon the entombment. It should be noted that the deepening gloom in which the life of Jesus closed is relieved by several significant incidents. Loyal affection provided Him with a suitable room in which to eat the last meal with His disciples. An angel supported Him in Gethsemane; Herod, Pilate, and the Centurion affirmed his innocence, His disciples, with the women and his mother stood near enough to the cross for the sufferer to see their tears. But the climax of these mitigating incidents is reached in the attention which the dead body of Jesus received. It would have gratified His implicable enemies if no discrimination had been made between the body of Jesus and the malefactors with whom He had been crucified; if His corpse, like theirs, could have been rudely tossed into some adjacent pit. From such dishonor the body was unexpectedly rescued, and, according to prophecy, a grave made for him with the rich.

Joseph of Arimathea—a man of rank, wealth, influence, a Sanhedrist, but no sharer in the foul crime of the illegal condemnation of Jesus—suddenly throws off the mask of secrecy, and, to the surprise of his late associates, reveals himself a disciple. He goes still further, and, penetrating to the presence of Pilate, asks the privilege of doing the last offices for the Crucified.

The procurator would not hesitate to grant such a small boon to the body of one whose pure and lofty spirit had not failed to make its impress upon even his materialistic nature. He only expresses surprise at the early death of Jesus, and, calling the centurion who presided at Calvary, has the report officially confirmed, thus unconsciously adding an important link to the irrefragable chain of evidence as to the resurrection of Jesus.

Joseph, clothed with an authority which it would be idle to dispute, leaves Pilate's presence. His servants are waiting for him in the courtyard of the palace. Together they hasten to the scene of the crucifixion. Nicodemus hearing of Joseph's mission to Pilate, is moved by the illustrious example to cast off his disguise also; and providing himself with myrrh and aloes, such a quanity as would serve for a kingly burial, he sped his way with his attendants to Calvary.

The nails may have been drawn, the body lowered, and the cross left standing, as it usually depicted in the masterpieces; or the cross may have been lifted from its socket, and laid upon the ground, and the body detached. However that may be, the body is probably laid upon the bier which has been brought for the purpose, covered with a sheet, and lifted to the shoulders of the servants. Joseph and Nicodemus—noble mourners—follow in that funerl procession unparalleled. The distance is very short to Joseph's new rock-hewn tomb in the garden near to Calvary.

In the cool vestibule of the sepulcher the bier is set down. Water is brought from some neighboring pool or fountain. That precions casket of clay so marred, is laved with sacred care. The brow, lacerated by the thorny crown, the back corrugated by the merciless scourge, the wounded hands and feet, the pierced sides, the blood-clots and death-sweat, all dissolved and washed away, and the body thoroughly dried, they begin to swathe the limbs and torso with broad linen bands, sprinkling copiously the powdered spices in every fold. Last of all, they cover that serene and holy countenanee, imprinting it no doubt, with a kiss of undying affection. The task being finished, they carry the enswathed body from the antechamber to the grotto and lay it gently upon its stony berth in the wall. All haying come out of the crypt, but one thing remains to be done—the rolling of the great millstone against the door of the sepulcher, and the placing against it in turn of the lesser stone.

So the body of Him who made earth and sky is entombed. Through the Passover Sabbath that holy form rests on its rocky couch, embalmed in the fragrance of the flowers of the garden, as well as unguent's love had provided. On the dawn of the Sabbath the fear which had grown insupportable drove the Sanhedrists to Pilate again. It was hard for him to concede the request which they had made concerning the man still living, but to one to whom death ended all, the petition concerning one already dead, seemed a matter of entire indifference. With a toss of the head he bade them do as they pleased with a dead body. Thus another link was forged in the chain of evidence, for their lives were the forfeit of it if the seal was broken, or the body removed. The record is charmingly artless. It is transparently true. The women, not knowing how complete the embalment had been, at the very earliest hour practicable take additional spices and run to the sepulcher. Thev are so precipitate that they forget the heavy stone which would make their entrance to the tomb impossible. Had thev forgotten Jesus' oft-made declaration that He would rise from the grave? Certainly not, but evidently they, with all the disciples, gave it a spiritual interpretation. And the apparent desecration and robbery of the tomb were an overwhelming surprise and grief to them. But the open tomb was converted into a bureau of information for His troubled disciples. White-liveried attendants were there to point them to the place where the Lord lay, and the grave clothes laid in such orderly fashion as to preclude the idea of a hasty and clandestine removal, and to annonnce the blessed truth: "He is risen."

The Teacher's Lantern

Easter has been called the Queen of Festivals and the Christian Passover.

* * * * *

On the morning of the third day the seal was broken, the stone rolled away, and the body gone. Friend and foe alike admitted this. Some circumstances transpired against which even the world-famed disciple of the Roman soldier proved inadequate. The only historically credible account of that circumstance is based upon the testimony of the disciples. The only sufficient explanation of the bewilderment of the guards, the surprises of the disciples, and the consternation of the Sanhedrists is found in the resurrection of Jesus.

* * * * *

There have been many remarkable recognitions which have become matters of history, but it may be doubted whether Mary's recognition of the risen Savior has ever been surpassed in pathos and importance. The time, the first Easter Sunday; the place, the tomb in the garden near to Calvary; the Person, Jesus, who was dead, but alive forever.

An unnecessary mystical meaning has been attached to the words of Jesus to Mary, "Touch Me not." They certainly do not mean that Jesus was literally not to be touched. He allowed the other women to clasp His feet. He commanded Thomas to thrust his hand into His side. Probably all that Jesus meant was, "Do not cling to Me as if it was your last opportunity—I am going to ascend to My Father immediately."

* * * * *

Under the "old covenant" two golden angels stood vis-a-vis looking into that holiest of shrines, the ark. Under the "new covenant" two living angels stood vis-a-vis looking at the place where Jesus body lay. The empty slab of the sepulcher was just as significant as blood-sprinkled golden mercy-seat. The presence of angels desire to look into." All the higher intelligences are interested in the things which concern the destiny of man.

* * * * *

With refrence to the resurrection of Jesus, there have through all the ages between two Voices. The Voice of Denial has always been wavering and changeable. It has advanced one theory after another. Each virtually denies the sufficiency of the preceding. In striking contrast to this is the Voice of Faith. It is a steady unchanging affirmation. What it said nineteen hundred years ago it says now—"The Lord is risen!" One century proclaims it to another until now twenty centuries join in the affirmation, "The Lord is risen indeed!"

* * * * *

Reasoning forward from cause to effect, nothing short of some such event could have inspired the leaderless disciples to go forward to found the Church. It is in this sense that Pressense savs, "The empty tomb of Jesus was the cradle of the Church."

* * * * *

Reasoning backward from effect to cause, noting the universal extension of Christianity in so brief a time, it must be admitted that the new faith was sealed by some supernatural event. In this sense it has been said, "It is infinitely easier to admit that the Church was the offspring of a miracle than that it was born of a lie."

TRUSTEE'S SALE

OF VALUABLE

REAL ESTATE

SITUATE NEAR SWANTON, GARRETT COUNTY, MARYLAND.

By virtue of a decree of the Circuit Court for Garrett county passed in a cause wherein Albert Lewis Miller et al. are complainants and George W. Miller et al. are defendants, the same being No. 1254 on the Equity docket of said Court, the undersigned trustee will, on the 2nd Day of April, A D. 1904,

SATURDAY,

AT 11 O'CLOCK A. M.

in front of the Court House in the town of Oakland, Garrett county, Maryland, offer for sale at public auction

All those tracts or parcels of Land called "Much To Do About Nothing" and "Elk Lick," containing in the aggregate 822 Acres, more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed unto Margaret Miller, late of Allegany county, deceased, in a deed from J. W. S. Cochrane and David W. Sloan, trustees, bearing date the 22nd day of October, 1856, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T., No. 28, folios 410, etc., one of the Land Records of Garrett county.

The property is situated about two miles East of Swanton in Garrett county. The quality of the soil is good and there is much valuable timber on the property. There are also two large glades on the property, making it one of the finest grazing farms in the country.

TERMS OF SALE—As prescribed by the decree, viz.: One-third of the purchase money cash; one-third in six months, and one-third in twelve months, or all cash, at the option of the purchaser. Deferred payments to be secured by the bonds of the purchaser with surety to the satisfaction of the trustee, and to bear interest.

No more Macerated Money.

Manufacturers of souvenirs of Washington will no longer be permitted to make busts of Lincoln and build likenesses of other great men of macerated currency in which small fragments of real green money are conspicuous. That expression, "made from a $500 bill," has caught the eye of so many Washington visitors, will now sink into disuse. Hereafter, no macerated currency will go out of the Treasury Department, unless it is ground extremely fine and then bleached. The matter was taken up bs Secretary Shaw on a complaint from the division of the Comptroller of the Currency.

NEW CITY OFFICIALS TAKE CHARGE OF AFFAIRS

Mayor McComas Administered Oath to Recently Elected Officials.

MR. DIXON CHOSEN AS COUNCILMAN

To Fill Vacancy Caused by Disqualification of Mr. Naylor Who Has Removed Outside the Corporate Limits—Council Proceedings.

Monday evening of this week the recently elected Councilmen of Oakland were sworn into office by Mayor Henry W. McComas who had subsequently subscribed to the oath before Clerk of the Circuit Court at his office in the court house.

The new members, Messrs. Harned, Helbig and Lawton immediately entered upon the discharge of their duties.

Mr. A. G. Ross, one of the hold-over members of the body was elected president, and Mr. John C. Dunham, who has been Clerk for many yaars, was again chosen to fill that position.

Mr. A. D. Naylor who had been Councilman for a year, having been disqualified as such by removing outside the corporate limits, tendered his resignation and, by authority vested in them by the Charter the members of the Council elected his successor by ballot. Messrs. D. M. Dixon and George Fleming were nominated to fill the vacancy. Each received two votes, when the president of the body, having the deciding ballot, cast it in favor of Mr. Dixon.

Mr. E. H. Sincell, as attorney, presented to the Council a franchise seeking the right to lay pipes and maintain a sewerage system within the town.

Mr. Fred T. Martin asked that the franchise for the same purpose granted him at a former meeting of the Council and which expired on April 1st, be extended. Both propositions will be acted upon at a special meeting to be held to-night.

The electric lighting franchise presented by Mr. D. E. Offutt, seeking the right to maintain the privilege of lighting the town for a period of twenty years, was presented and laid upon the table.

Mayor McComas presented his message in which he nominated Mr. N. S. Heindel attorney for the town; A. B. Gonder, police justice; John Sweeney, day policeman, and William Broderick, night policeman.

Among other matters the Mayor recommended that the streets, alleys, etc., be thoroughly cleaned at once; that the Council be as economical as possible in its expenditure of funds; that the Council as a body inspect all streets, alleys, walks, etc., at an early day; that should Council decide to make any permanent improvements that work be begun at once; that electric lights be placed at certain points.

Council elected Mr. G. W. Legge the collector and Col. A. G. Sturgiss treasurer.

The advisability of purchasing a lot upon which to erect a municipal building was discussed but no decision was reached.

The paving bill of C. Kennedy amounting to $2300 was orderd paid.

Resolutions of Respect.

At a meeting of the Sessions of the Oakland Presbyterian Church the following preamble and restiution was adopted.

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst Brother James R. Bishop, who for more than thirty years has been a ruling elder in our Church; therefore,

Resolved, That while it is with deep regret we record his departure from this life we humbly resign ourselves to the will of Him who doeth all things well, and while our hearts are made sad by the severance of these earthly ties we can with the eye of faith pierce the overshadowing cloud of gloom and see beyond the glories of an eternal existence freed of all the perplexities and disappointments incident to the material world; and while the dealings of Almighty God are inscrutable to us and His ways past finding out we are encouraged to believe that He will reveal Himself to us in our inner lives and give us grace sufficient to enable us to accept with becoming resignattion on whatever in the perfection of His plan we may be called upon to endure.

A Card of Thanks.

The family of Mr. Louis M. Skipper desire to return their heartfelt thanks to the many kind friends and neighbors who assisted them during the sickness and after the death of Mrs. Fanny May Lewis, who departed this life March 25th.

Letter to F. G. Hyde.

Dear Sir: If you paint two houses alike with two different paints, and one alike with two different paints, and one takes twice as much paint as the other, you know which paint to buy after that—so far as go-far goes—don't you?

One of these paints is Devoe; the other is any average paint. The worst are worse than that; the better are not much better; no other paint than Devoe is anywhere near Devoe in go-far. Devoe is go further; the rest are go-short go-middling and go-three quarters.

Yours truly

MARRIED

WOLF—BROWNING—At St. Peter's Catholic church on Monday morning at five o'clock, Mr. Joseph Wolf, of Oakland, was married to Miss Flora, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Browning, who reside several miles west of town. The groom was attended by Mr. Edward Helbig while Daisy Browning, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. Shortly after the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to the wedding party after which they departed for the points east where they will remain a week or more, visiting Washington, Philadelphia and New York.

Electric Line to Oakland.

Agitation has begun looking to the construction of an electric line from Terra Alta to Oakland, and we believe such a road would be a paying investment. Especially during the summer months is there an immense amount of travel between the two points and there would be considerable more could the people go and come when they please instead of having to wait for a train.

If sufficient capital can be interested in this venture we predict it would be a money maker.—Terra Alta Republican.

Maloney's Political Manager

By W. M'LEOD RAINE

(Copyright, 1903, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"DO YOU think Bob Maloney will get the nomination for state senator?" asked a delegate from the First.

The other politician shook his head.

"Guess not. Maloney's struck twelve o'clock. Ostrander's got a lead pipe cinch on it. You see, Bob's one of these reform fellows who don't believe in treating. That ain't politics, and Ostrander does politics seven days in the week."

"I'm not so sure about it. Young Maloney is a hustler. I'd a dashed sight rather see him get in than the other man. Ostrander is a pretty poor apology for a man, and Bob is as straight as a string."

"That may be all so, but you'll see who wins. It will be the man who knows how to play the game of politics."

Bob Maloney nodded smilingly as he passed the two men at the entrance of the convention hall.

"Think I've struck twelve, do they? Well, if I have the gong is due to sound thirteen next time. I'll show these fellows I'm not all in by a good deal. If Meyer holds the First precinct for me as he promised, Ostrander will be nominated to stay at home. I've got to win. There are no two ways about that. I told Maurine I was going to win, and I believe she is making a test of it."

"THAT LETS MALONEY OUT GOOD AND PLENTY."

She was. Maurine Ostrander sat well back in the gallery of the convention hall and watched young Maloney closely. He was apparently brightly indomitable, but she read a troubled mind behind his smiling energy. "This is my busy day," was written all over his manner. He flitted from one delegate to another while the chairman was delivering the usual opening panegyric on what his party had done and would do. Decidedly this alert young man with the good shoulders had plenty of force. She glanced from him to her brother and back again. There was no shadow of doubt in her mind as to which of them would make a better representative of the people.

A fragment of whispered talk reached her from under the eaves of the gallery.

"Notice how Ostrander jobbed young Maloney? He had four delegates from Mapleville thrown out. Claimed some irregularity. He's working hard to get Meyer to throw him some votes from the First. He'll get them, too. If Meyer hasn't been bought, I miss my guess. The plan is to adjourn the district convention till two o'clock so that Ostrander can get in his fine work during the recess."

"That lets Maloney out good and plenty, then," answered the second man, as they moved away. "Ostrander will spend the time treating in the saloons."

Maurine's blood pounded. She looked at her brother and asked herself whether he would stoop to take an unfair advantage, and in his shifting eyes and furtive glance she found her answer. Shame surged through her, and with it a great sympathy for the clean young man who would win fairly or not at all. She felt she must warn him, must let him know that the man on whom he depended was about to play him false. On the back of her card she penciled a note and sent it to Maloney by a boy. She watched the boy push his way through the crowd to him, and then noted the sudden animation with which his eyes swept the galleries for her. At last his glance found her, and he nodded smilingly to reassure her.

But he lost no time in hunting up Meyer, and something in Meyer's shifty manner confirmed a suspicion which had already been lying dormant in his mind. He determined to trust Meyer only so far as he could see him. He knew that the man from the First precinct dare not openly betray him, but that he might contravent an adjournment for that purpose. To frustrate this Maloney had a secret talk with Heisman and other delegates from the First. If Meyer meant to play false, Maloney proposed to see that Meyer would have no goods to deliver when it came to the critical moment.

The routine business of organization occupied the morning, and at noon adjournment calls were issued for the different district meetings. Ostrander, tugging at his yellow mustache which covered his weak mouth, was plainly nervous and anxious. His eyes traveled from Meyer to Maloney, then swept across the other delegates. Maloney, on the other hand, appeared quite at his ease. He was stationed at Mr. Meyer's elbow, and that gentleman clearly did not relish his close proximity.

"Move that we adjourn to meet at 2:15," cried one Ostrander delegate.

"Second the motion," said Meyer, feebly.

Heisman had the floor in an instant, to let Maloney's followers know that it was a test vote. Bob Maloney himself followed in opposition to the motion. Meyer, pledged to support Maloney by his instructions, had to fall into line on the vote which followed.

The count stood: For adjournment, 32; against adjournment, 36. Five minutes later Robert Maloney was nominated for sate senator by a vote of 41 to 27. Ostrander, with a badly damaged smile, moved that the nomination be made unanimous.

That evening Bob Maloney called on Maurine Ostrander.

"I suppose congratulations are due," she said, demurely, after they had found seats.

He leaned back in his chair and viewed her critically.

"Yes, I suppose so. But I'm wondering to whom they are due—you or me."

"I don't see what I have to do with it," she said.

"Well, for one thing, you nominated me."

"Did I, really?" she asked, with shining eyes. "Really and truly, Bob?"

"Really and truly, Maurine. Of course I was prepared for an attempt to adjourn, but I wasn't quite ready to believe that Meyer dared back it. If you hadn't put me on to him he would have forced an adjournment and I would have lost out."

"Of course I'm sorry my brother lost," she said.

"But you're glad I won?"

"Oh, well—yes."

"That's good. By the way, I'm thinking of getting married. I can do better work for my constituents as a married man."

A blushful silence.

"If I can get the girl to see it my way."

"Doesn't she?"

"I haven't asked her yet. I wish I knew what she thought."

She had nothing to say to that.

"I expect I had better ask her. Don't you think so, Maurine?"

"I—don't—know."

"It's the best way to find out. Here goes. Maurine, I'm not worthy of you by a long, long way. But I love you, and that counts for something. Do you happen to care for me, Maurine?"

She nodded yes, and then Maloney beat time and murmured his college yell as a paean of victory. The rest is a very common story.

THE INEVITABLE.

Oh, this earth is a very disheartening sphere,
Just why 'twas set spinning was never quite clear.
But it rushes through space on the cannon-ball plan,
And we poor struggling mortals stick on if we can.
Oh, it turns on its axis to make night and day,
And at every turn there's the mischief to pay;
But in spite of its changes, its doubts and its fears,
There are laughter and song that may conquer the tears.

So here's to the earth! Both in sorrow and mirth,
We must sleep, we must wake, we must breakfast and sup with it.
Of pleasure it shows a deplorable dearth,
But it's all that we've got. So we'll have to put up with it!

The mire and the snow drift are thick on the land,
But alas, we're obliged to have some place to stand.
The wind shakes our teeth as we struggle for breath,
But with no air at all we would all choke to death.
Oh, the warmth is too hot and the cold is too chill,
But without any weather at all we'd be ill,
So let's be of cheer though these troubles won't halt,
Our conscience is clear for it isn't our fault.

Then here's to this earth, for it holds in its girth
The price, and we'll gather and drink off a cup with it.
The company's trouble is more than it's worth,
But it's all that we've got and we'll have to put up with it.

AUTO RIDING IN WINTER

Handles May Be Warmed by Electricity and the Vehicle Made Very Comfortable.

Automobilists are not very enthusiastic in the winter season because of the discomforts that attend riding. The handles of the conveyances are extremely cold and the drivers suffer acutely when the mercury stands in the neighborhood of zero. It is only those who use the machine for business purposes who will stick to it in winter. It is not a difficult matter to wrap up the body warmly enough, and the face can be protected against the biting wind by the shielding devices which have been invented, but it is not so easy to protect the hands from the cold. In spite of the covering of gloves or mittens the fingers are liable to become numbed with the cold, a state of affairs especially dangerous for the driver of a high-speed car, who is compelled to be on the alert for emergencies and act instantly when they arise.

To meet this condition of affairs a New Jersey man has invented an electrically heated handle, which the chauffeur has only to grasp tightly in his hand to derive the benefits of the radiation from the interior. The construction is such that the heat is reflected outward from the conductor, the radiator filling the central space and being completely surrounded by the conductor wires. The cover is of nonconducting material and and is perforated at frequent intervals to allow free radiation.

MACADAM ROAD BUILDING.

Cost Depends Largely on the Ease with Which Suitable Stone May Be Secured.

Among the men whose names will live as long as civilization exists is that of John L. Macadam, the road builder. Not only has his name become a part of the English language, but the kind of road which he built has been adopted by all civilized nations. The ancient Romans built stone roads, but they were very different and vastly more expensive than the macadam roads of modern times. They built a substantial foundation of rock, sometimes several feet in depth and then covered it with a pavement of large flat stones. This kind of road will outlast any other. Indeed some parts of the Appian way, the building of which was begun three centuries before Christ, are still in use, and in good repair. It remained for John L. Macadam, a modern Englishman, to prove that the great expenditure of time and money required in the building of the old Roman roads was largely wasted. He demonstrated that a smooth hard enduring road could be built of crushed stone a few inches in depth properly spread and compacted on a foundation of earth.

The main points in successful macadam road building are (1) that the foundation be properly constructed and drained; (2) that the surface of the road be slightly curved so as to shed water; (3) that the surface of the finished road be made hard and smooth and as nearly waterproof as possible. The last of these qualities is secured by spreading on the stone in layers, beginning with a layer of the largest fragments and finishing with a layer of very fine crushed stone with which some sand is often incorporated. Each layer is well compacted with a heavy roller.

Although the expense of building macadam roads is trifling compared with that of constructing a stone-paved road like that of the Roman emperor, Appius Claudius, it is still so great as to form the principal obstacle to macadamizing modern highways. The cost, of course, depends largely on the ease with which suitable stone may be secured. Where the material has to be transported by rail for a considerable distance the cost is greatly increased. Some of the Massachussetts highways have cost $8,000 to $10,000 a mile; while in some other states good macadam roads have been built for $1,500 to $3,000 per mile.

Some friends of the good roads movement hesitate to join in the demand for national aid because they are appalled by the enormous expense involved in macadamizing the entire road mileage of the country. Such persons are laboring under a mistake. The national aid bills now before congress do not propose to construct any particular kind of road. They simply propose to "improve the public roads," and provide for "investigations and experiments to determine the best kinds of road material and the best methods of road building." In a recent article Representative Brownlow says:

"My own individual opinion is that some of the principal thoroughfares ought to be macadamized. Well informed road experts have estimated that if one-tenth of the road mileage of the country were macadamized and the other nine-tenths were improved in other and cheaper ways, using the best local materials available, the cost of hauling the farm products of the United States to market would be reduced one-half."

If this estimate is correct, the saving to the farmers would be enormous, and would in a few years be sufficient to cover the entire expense of making the improvements. Besides lessening the cost of hauling, good roads will bring the people of the rural districts pleasures and benefits which can not be measured in money.

The Profitable Dairy Cow.

With all our wisdom and skill in breeding, no one has yet produced a cow that will make as much milk from discomfort as she will from comfort. An animal of extreme hardiness may be produced; but good, paying cows are not built on those lines. They are an elaboration of the fittest; not specimens of animal hardihood. Which do you want?—Midland Farmer.

Quick Wit of a Newspaper Reporter Won with an Angry Woman on Murder Bent.

"The nerve of newspaper men frequently keeps them from serious trouble, as well as getting them into it," remarked Representative Livingston, of Georgia, while talking to a group of friends in the cloakroom," relates the Washington Times. "As a whole they are generally a pretty clever lot and prepared for any emergency, and I suppose that they make about as few mistakes as the average run of men.

"I shall never forget an incident which happened several years ago in Atlanta, and I laugh now every time I think of it. A dashing young woman came to Atlanta and engaged the swellest suite of rooms at the Kimball, and she sported diamonds as large as walnuts and drove a four-in-hand. It was given out that the young beauty was Miss So-and-So, the cattle queen of the west, and that she had money enough to burn up a stock yard of wet cows.

"Ed Bruffey, of the Constitution, had an idea that the woman was a fake, and he soon had the wires hot with messages making inquiries about her, the result being that he got a corking good story to the effect that the woman was the rankest kind of humbug. Bruff printed the story next morning and it caused a genuine sensation, but the woman never lost her grip, driving out that afternoon with her four-in-hand.

"Late that night Bruff was in the lobby of the Kimball talking to the night clerk when the 'cattle queen' swished down the steps and, walking up to Bruff, asked if he was responsible for the story in the Constitution.

"'I have that honor,' was his reply.

"'Then, sir, I am going to kill you,' almost yelled the woman, as she drew a gun from the folds of her dress.

"This didn't alarm the little newspaper man in the least, but, lifting his hat, he quietly remarked:

"'Fire away, madam; I had rather be killed by a pretty woman any day than to die a natural death.'

"Bruff won out, for the woman laughed and retreated upstairs."

Artful Dodgers.

A Maine country doctor tells this story on himself:

He responded one night to a note left at his door by a farmer asking him to go as soon as possible to see his little boy, who was ill with a very bad cold. The doctor gave one look at the child, and asked severely:

"Don't you know that your boy is coming down with the measles?"

"Yes," replied the wife, "I knowed it."

"Then what in the world did you mean by saying he had a bad cold?" asked the doctor.

The woman hesitated a moment; then, looking at her husband, she said, hesitatingly:

"Neither me nor him knowed how to spell measles."—Office Cat.

FLYING REPTILES OF OLD.

Winged Creatures of Enormous Size Were Once More Common Than Birds.

We are apt to think of reptiles as creeping and crawling things, forgetting that there was a time when flying reptiles were more common than the birds. These reptiles, the pterodactyls, or flying-dragons, not only flew, but some of them reached a size much greater than that of any bird, for the largest birds do not fly, says St. Nicholas. The South American condor sometimes measures as much as 10½ feet from tip to tip of outstretched wings, and it is quite possible that the finest examples of the albatross may measure a little more. But the great pterodactyls which flew about the sea that in the days of old reached from the Gulf of Mexico to the Rocky mountains, measured as much as 20 feet, the width of an average city lot, across their wings.

Most of us have seen an eagle flying, and we can appreciate the size of this ancient dragon by remembering that it was nearly three times the size of an eagle. It was not, however, three times as heavy, for the body of this strange reptile was so small and its skeleton so wonderfully light that the entire animal is thought to have weighed not more than 25 pounds, or only about as much as a large condor. One of the largest bones of the wing, two feet long and two inches through, was, as Prof. Williston tells us, no thicker than a sheet of blotting paper, and the great head, with a beak over three feet long, was equally light. This great toothless beak is believed to have been used for snapping up fishes; and we can imagine this huge creature sailing swiftly over the sea, now and then swooping down to pick up a fish as deftly, for all its size, as a real swallow.

But what did Ornithostoma—this is the animal's name—do with his wings and beak when he made an occasional visit to the land? One would think they must have been very much in his way, and that the animal was as awkward on the shore as he was graceful in the air. And how did he start to fly? With such enormous wings, we think Ornithostoma must have dwelt on cliffs about the sea and launched off them as the gannets do from Bird rock. This great flying reptile lived some 6,000,000 years ago; the sea over which it flew long ago disappeared, and the mud into which its bones sank became chalk, and from the formation of these great chalk-beds the time at which Ornithostoma existed is called the cretaceous period.

Mishap of a Duchess.

While hunting a stag in the forest of Rambouillet, in France, recently the Duchess de Luynes had a strange adventure. Being hard pressed, the stag turned down a path which the duchess happened to be crossing at that moment, her horse going at a canter. It tried to jump over them, but instead caught the lady with its antlers and tossed her high into the air. The duchess and the stag fell down on the turf together, while the horse went on as if nothing had happened. A moment later the stag picked itself up and bolted off. The duchess had a wonderful escape, as she got off without a bruise.

Accommodating.

Seldom does a coroner find a human derelict so accommodating as one who was picked up unconscious in New York the other day and died in the ambulance. His pockets were searched for something by which to identify him, and, in addition to a pair of eye-glasses, a key, a piece of soap and a knife, a slip of paper was found, inscribed as follows: "I am C. Winter. I was born in 1840. I have no home. I have no occupation. In case of death don't notify anyone. I am subject to heart trouble."

EIGHT YEARS OF TORTURE.

No suffering more keen than kidney suffering. Sick kidneys make bad blood; cause weak, stiff and aching backs; cause blind, sick and dizzy headaches, lack of appetite and loss of sleep; keep you all tired out and spoil digestion.

To have perfect health, you must cure the kidneys. Read how one man was cured by Doan's Kidney Pills after eight years of torture.

Henry Soule, of Pultney St., Hammondsport, N. Y., says: "For eight years I suffered constant agony from kidney complaint. I endured the worst torture from gravel and the kidney secretions were excessive and contained sediment like brick dust. I had to get out of bed from ten to twenty times a night and the loss of sleep wore me out. Indigestion came on and the distress after eating was terrible. Doan's Kidney Pills effected a complete and lasting cure, and after the symptoms of kidney trouble were gone my stomach began to work as it should. This lasting cure, especially in a person of my age, proves the great value of Doan's Kidney Pills more convincingly than could any words of mine."

Maloney's Political Manager

By W. M'LEOD RAINE

(Copyright, 1903, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"DO YOU think Bob Maloney will get the nomination for state senator?" asked a delegate from the First.

The other politician shook his head.

"Guess not. Maloney's struck twelve o'clock. Ostrander's got a lead pipe cinch on it. You see, Bob's one of these reform fellows who don't believe in treating. That ain't politics, and Ostrander does politics seven days in the week."

"I'm not so sure about it. Young Maloney is a hustler. I'd a dashed sight rather see him get in than the other man. Ostrander is a pretty poor apology for a man, and Bob is as straight as a string."

"That may be all so, but you'll see who wins. It will be the man who knows how to play the game of politics."

Bob Maloney nodded smilingly as he passed the two men at the entrance of the convention hall.

"Think I've struck twelve, do they? Well, if I have the gong is due to sound thirteen next time. I'll show these fellows I'm not all in by a good deal. If Meyer holds the First precinct for me as he promised, Ostrander will be nominated to stay at home. I've got to win. There are no two ways about that. I told Maurine I was going to win, and I believe she is making a test of it."

She was. Maurine Ostrander sat well back in the gallery of the convention hall and watched young Maloney closely. He was apparently brightly indomitable, but she read a troubled mind behind his smiling energy. "This is my busy day," was written all over his manner. He flitted from one delegate to another while the chairman was delivering the usual opening panegyric on what his party had done and would do. Decidedly this alert young man with the good shoulders had plenty of force. She glanced from him to her brother and back again. There was no shadow of doubt in her mind as to which of them would make a better representative of the people.

A fragment of whispered talk reached her from under the eaves of the gallery.

"Notice how Ostrander jobbed young Maloney? He had four delegates from Mapleville thrown out. Claimed some irregularity. He's working hard to get Meyer to throw him some votes from the First. He'll get them, too. If Meyer hasn't been bought, I miss my guess. The plan is to adjourn the district convention till two o'clock so that Ostrander can get in his fine work during the recess."

Although the expense of building macadam roads is trifling compared with that of constructing a stone-paved road like that of the Roman emperor, Appius Claudius, it is still so great as to form the principal obstacle to macadamizing modern highways. The cost, of course, depends largely on the ease with which suitable stone may be secured. Where the material has to be transported by rail for a considerable distance the cost is greatly increased. Some of the Massachussetts highways have cost $8,000 to $10,000 a mile; while in some other states good macadam roads have been built for $1,500 to $3,000 per mile.

Some friends of the good roads movement hesitate to join in the demand for national aid because they are appalled by the enormous expense involved in macadamizing the entire road mileage of the country. Such persons are laboring under a mistake. The national aid bills now before congress do not propose to construct any particular kind of road. They simply propose to "improve the public roads," and provide for "investigations and experiments to determine the best kinds of road material and the best methods of road building." In a recent article Representative Brownlow says:

"My own individual opinion is that some of the principal thoroughfares ought to be macadamized. Well informed road experts have estimated that if one-tenth of the road mileage of the country were macadamized and the other nine-tenths were improved in other and cheaper ways, using the best local materials available, the cost of hauling the farm products of the United States to market would be reduced one-half."

If this estimate is correct, the saving to the farmers would be enormous, and would in a few years be sufficient to cover the entire expense of making the improvements. Besides lessening the cost of hauling, good roads will bring the people of the rural districts pleasures and benefits which can not be measured in money.

The Profitable Dairy Cow.

With all our wisdom and skill in breeding, no one has yet produced a cow that will make as much milk from discomfort as she will from comfort. An animal of extreme hardiness may be produced; but good, paying cows are not built on those lines. They are an elaboration of the fittest; not specimens of animal hardihood. What Is Wrong with the Picture?

Quick Wit of a Newspaper Reporter Won with an Angry Woman on Murder Bent.

"The nerve of newspaper men frequently keeps them from serious trouble, as well as getting them into it," remarked Representative Livingston, of Georgia, while talking to a group of friends in the cloakroom," relates the Washington Times. "As a whole they are generally a pretty clever lot and prepared for any emergency, and I suppose that they make about as few mistakes as the average run of men.

"I shall never forget an incident which happened several years ago in Atlanta, and I laugh now every time I think of it. A dashing young woman came to Atlanta and engaged the swellest suite of rooms at the Kimball, and she sported diamonds as large as walnuts and drove a four-in-hand. It was given out that the young beauty was Miss So-and-So, the cattle queen of the west, and that she had money enough to burn up a stock yard of wet cows.

"Ed Bruffey, of the Constitution, had an idea that the woman was a fake, and he soon had the wires hot with messages making inquiries about her, the result being that he got a corking good story to the effect that the woman was the rankest kind of humbug. Bruff printed the story next morning and it caused a genuine sensation, but the woman never lost her grip, driving out that afternoon with her four-in-hand.

"Late that night Bruff was in the lobby of the Kimball talking to the night clerk when the 'cattle queen' swished down the steps and, walking up to Bruff, asked if he was responsible for the story in the Constitution.

"'I have that honor,' was his reply.

"'Then, sir, I am going to kill you,' almost yelled the woman, as she drew a gun from the folds of her dress.

"This didn't alarm the little newspaper man in the least, but, lifting his hat, he quietly remarked:

"'Fire away, madam; I had rather be killed by a pretty woman any day than to die a natural death.'

"Bruff won out, for the woman laughed and retreated upstairs."

Artful Dodgers.

A Maine country doctor tells this story on himself:

He responded one night to a note left at his door by a farmer asking him to go as soon as possible to see his little boy, who was ill with a very bad cold. The doctor gave one look at the child, and asked severely:

"Don't you know that your boy is coming down with the measles?"

"Yes," replied the wife, "I knowed it."

"Then what in the world did you mean by saying he had a bad cold?" asked the doctor.

The woman hesitated a moment; then, looking at her husband, she said, hesitatingly:

"Neither me nor him knowed how to spell measles."—Office Cat.

FLYING REPTILES OF OLD.

Winged Creatures of Enormous Size Were Once More Common Than Birds.

We are apt to think of reptiles as creeping and crawling things, forgetting that there was a time when flying reptiles were more common than the birds. These reptiles, the pterodactyls, or flying-dragons, not only flew, but some of them reached a size much greater than that of any bird, for the largest birds do not fly, says St. Nicholas. The South American condor sometimes measures as much as 10½ feet from tip to tip of outstretched wings, and it is quite possible that the finest examples of the albatross may measure a little more. But the great pterodactyls which flew about the sea that in the days of old reached from the Gulf of Mexico to the Rocky mountains, measured as much as 20 feet, the width of an average city lot, across their wings.

Most of us have seen an eagle flying, and we can appreciate the size of this ancient dragon by remembering that it was nearly three times the size of an eagle. It was not, however, three times as heavy, for the body of this strange reptile was so small and its skeleton so wonderfully light that the entire animal is thought to have weighed not more than 25 pounds, or only about as much as a large condor. One of the largest bones of the wing, two feet long and two inches through, was, as Prof. Williston tells us, no thicker than a sheet of blotting paper, and the great head, with a beak over three feet long, was equally light. This great toothless beak is believed to have been used for snapping up fishes; and we can imagine this huge creature sailing swiftly over the sea, now and then swooping down to pick up a fish as deftly, for all its size, as a real swallow.

But what did Ornithostoma—this is the animal's name—do with his wings and beak when he made an occasional visit to the land? One would think they must have been very much in his way, and that the animal was as awkward on the shore as he was graceful in the air. And how did he start to fly? With such enormous wings, we think Ornithostoma must have dwelt on cliffs about the sea and launched off them as the gannets do from Bird rock. This great flying reptile lived some 6,000,000 years ago; the sea over which it flew long ago disappeared, and the mud into which its bones sank became chalk, and from the formation of these great chalk-beds the time at which Ornithostoma existed is called the cretaceous period.

Mishap of a Duchess.

While hunting a stag in the forest of Rambouillet, in France, recently the Duchess de Luynes had a strange adventure. Being hard pressed, the stag turned down a path which the duchess happened to be crossing at that moment, her horse going at a canter. It tried to jump over them, but instead caught the lady with its antlers and tossed her high into the air. The duchess and the stag fell down on the turf together, while the horse went on as if nothing had happened. A moment later the stag picked itself up and bolted off. The duchess had a wonderful escape, as she got off without a bruise.

Accommodating.

Seldom does a coroner find a human derelict so accommodating as one who was picked up unconscious in New York the other day and died in the ambulance. His pockets were searched for something by which to identify him, and, in addition to a pair of eye-glasses, a key, a piece of soap and a knife, a slip of paper was found, inscribed as follows: "I am C. Winter. I was born in 1840. I have no home. I have no occupation. In case of death don't notify anyone. I am subject to heart trouble."

EIGHT YEARS OF TORTURE.

No suffering more keen than kidney suffering. Sick kidneys make bad blood; cause weak, stiff and aching backs; cause blind, sick and dizzy headaches, lack of appetite and loss of sleep; keep you all tired out and spoil digestion.

To have perfect health, you must cure the kidneys. Read how one man was cured by Doan's Kidney Pills after eight years of torture.

Henry Soule, of Pultney St., Hammondsport, N. Y., says: "For eight years I suffered constant agony from kidney complaint. I endured the worst torture from gravel and the kidney secretions were excessive and contained sediment like brick dust. I had to get out of bed from ten to twenty times a night and the loss of sleep wore me out. Indigestion came on and the distress after eating was terrible. Doan's Kidney Pills effected a complete and lasting cure, and after the symptoms of kidney trouble were gone my stomach began to work as it should. This lasting cure, especially in a person of my age, proves the great value of Doan's Kidney Pills more convincingly than could any words of mine."

Politics and Crime

By MATT W. PINKERTON,
The Noted Detective.

POLITICAL corruption and dishonesty in public places are responsible for a very large proportion of the crime and criminals with which our country is cursed. He who resorts to knavery to secure an office or public position of any kind, or, having secured it, uses it for purposes of fraud and theft, is far more culpable than the unlettered, barely civilized gamin, who picks a pocket or snatches a loaf to satisfy the cravings of hunger. The transition from stuffing a ballot-box and falsifying an election return to picking a pocket and sandbagging a pedestrian is by no means a difficult one.

By this is not meant merely that political crimes and robbery of the people are widespread offenses exercised in a wholesale way. Every man, every child, even, in the land well understands that such is the case. Regarded in this light alone the evil is a monstrous one, crying aloud for immediate reform. But this is only the beginning of the trouble and the least harmful of all the baneful results of the nefarious system that underlies our entire political structure. There is no rational man in the world but exerts some influence upon certain of his species, particularly his friends and associates.

The corrupt politician has had the advantage of an education, has mingled with respectable people, understands the law and fully appreciates his relation to society. More than that, as a rule he is able to obtain a livelihood in an honest way and cannot even urge the poor excuse of hunger. But these are patent facts and their discussion is unnecessary. It is the baneful results of such political robbery to which attention is especially directed.

The aldermen in our large cities quite generally purchase, and that at a very large cost, their political power. In doing this they corrupt a large percentage of their constituents, start thousands on a course of crime. Doubtless our modern corrupt "statesmen" employ those already corrupted, but large numbers join in the criminal classes via the political route. As a rule mankind is not enamored of labor; most people are averse to hard work. Thus, the tools of aspiring politicians, being able to live at times by knavery, especially abjure all forms of regular employment and attempt to live by their wits, that is, by dishonest methods.

In this undertaking they are ably seconded by the corrupt politicians they sometimes serve, who often secure them immunity from arrest, their discharge by the magistrate or, failing these forms of relief, their pardon from the bridewell. In large cities like New York and Chicago hundreds, probably thousands, of criminals owe their liberty to the strength of their political "pull." Thus in a direct way a considerable portion of our city criminals owe their existence to political corruption.

Bad as it is, this result is trifling when compared with the secondary effects of political crimes and malfeasance in office. Local politics constitute a theme of never-ending discussion to poor and comparatively ignorant people, who know every politician, by reputation at least, and who constantly speculate as to the amount of their dishonest gains while occupying official positions. And here is where evil influence asserts itself. If an alderman, assessor, county agent for the poor, or any other official, coins money at the expense of the people—often at the expense of the starving, freezing poor—is it any wonder that his example is imitated by those really in want? The speaker has conversed with many criminals who have referred to the dishonesty of public officers as an excuse for their own offenses. The extent of this evil influence and the number of criminals chargeable to it are not fully appreciated by the public at large, or a general revolt against the professional politician and his outrageous methods would long ago have been organized.

As long as the great majority of our public servants are thieves and blackguards, so long will efforts to suppress crime and criminals prove dismal failures.

Getting Rid of Surplus Wealth

By ANDREW CARNEGIE.

It is not to the millions, or by the millions, that the greatest advances are won. It is to the individual that we owe the Divine impulse.

The distribution of wealth is the greatest problem of the age. I care not how great an invidualist a man may be, he must realize that the problem must first find solution. No man has better reason than myself to know how great are the inequalities in the distribution of wealth.

The world will make no progress, except under that law of Christ, that a man may reap as he sows. It is written that man must work out his own destiny under his own vine and fig-tree.

No revolution ever did much or any good in this world; no true evolution ever failed to do anything but good. I would not wish to be understood as putting down life as a mere pursuit of money. I think that a man who has entered any profession is working for the advancement of the race. The successful captain of industry is not of that low type who seeks the hoarding of dollars as his life work. The money which reaches beyond his wants he seeks to find use for in the bettering of others.

We hear a great deal about foreign missions. Peter Cooper founded a home mission. He first pointed the way which some day all millionaires will follow. He proclaimed that principle that surplus wealth is a sacred trust which those who have must exercise in his lifetime for the good of the community from whence it came.

Liability Act Is Needed

By JUDGE WHEELER,
Of the Connecticut Circuit Court.

EXISTING conditions in the employment of labor render ridiculous the reasoning that an employe in fact contracts with reference to the peril of the business. And public interests would be best conserved by holding the employer, with his higher intelligence, and surer means of information, and his power of selecting and discharging subordinates, responsible.

In a period of ten years probably more men have been injured, disabled, and killed in this country from neglect of co-employes than were disabled, injured and killed in the civil war. The need of having some effective legislative remedy for this injustice, continuing and increasing, is so paramount that it seems doubly unfortunate that those who are the most grievous sufferers do not conserve their strength to accomplish an end which must appeal to the sense of justice and humanity of disinterested persons.

H. I. H. PRINCE FUSHIMI.

Much interest is being manifested by the Japanese in the announcement that Prince Fushimi has been dispatched to Korea in the capacity of commander-in-chief of the imperial forces in that territory. In view of his brilliant record in the past, both as a fighter and tactician, great things are expected of him when the great clash between the Japanese and Russian troops shall occur. Prince Fushimi made many friends in the United States and in England on the occasion of his tour around the world, some 10 or 12 years ago. He stands close to the mikado, and is considered his personal representative in the army.

A DULL YEAR FOR CUPID.

Illinois Drummer Says Young Men Fight Shy of Matrimony During Leap Year.

When the Southdown drummer returned to the city the other day from his regular run over the Illinois circuit, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, it was evidence that he had run across a "new one" during the week. Being an unusually acute observer, he rarely lets anything go by him, and, therefore, the leap-year doings down in the corn belt have not gone unnoticed.

"Well, sir, it's a fact," he said in telling of the trip, "that the matrimonial business has fallen off about 50 per cent. throughout the state. I have been in half a dozen county seats during the past week, and the county clerks swear the marriage license business has dropped off in an amazing manner. Last year at this time and in other years, the business was brisk, but this, as the clerks say is leap year, and as a rule, young men prefer not to be married during leap year. They seem to have the idea that their friends will believe that the young women did the courting, and their conceit compels them to fight shy of matrimony during the year.

"If you think this leap year business doesn't have the effect of bringing about a slump in matrimony, just go with me on one of my jaunts and you'll find that leap year is the poorest of all years for Mr. Cupid and his sneaking tricks."

A Great Object Lesson.

As a conqueror of obstacles the railway is a great object lesson, says Four-Track News. The youth of the country should learn from the railway the lesson of enterprise and pluck. If, in its prescribed course, a railway encounters a deep ravine it bridges it; it spans seemingly impassable barriers with a trestle or a bridge and goes on its way. If it finds a mountain in its path it does not say: "I can never get over this!" It bores a tunnel through it and comes out on the other side. If it finds cases where trestles and tunnels do not serve its purpose it executes a loop, or inaugurates a cog road, by which it climbs the heights as if to defy every obstacle. If, in our everyday course, we surmount all obstacles with as great a determination as the railroad leaps across canyons, or bores through mountains, the word success would be more in evidence, and the word failure, that is now so overworked, would have a much needed rest.

BELL'S CURIOUS HISTORY.

State of Illinois Is Presented with an Interesting Relic of the Civil War.

A bell with a remarkable history is to be presented to the state of Illinois by St. Joseph's church, a congregation of Tazewell county. The bell will be a fitting companion in point of historical interest to the famous wooden leg of Gen. Santa Ana, captured during the Mexican war, and which now is the object of such curious interest in company with other relics, in Memorial hall, Springfield.

The prospective companion to the leg is a bell cast in Valladollid, Spain, and captured a few days before the leg and by the same Illinois soldiers. They packed the bell in a hogshead of straw and directed it to Pekin, where it arrived several months later. At that time Pekin had no railroads and its traffic with the outside world was by steamboat. The bell fell into the hands of the captain of the Prairie State. He needed a bell and mounted it upon his boat, where it sounded for several years. Then one day the Prairie State got into a race with another river steamer and blew up near the Pekin landing. A dozen people were killed and the bell blown off into the river. It rested there a couple of years until it was found by youngsters in swimming.

The next heard of the bell it was over a little frame Methodist church. After the lapse of several years the congregation built a new and larger church and the bell was sold to the St. Joseph's parish, which was erecting its first church. Now the latter parish is erecting a fine new church and the bell will go to the state.

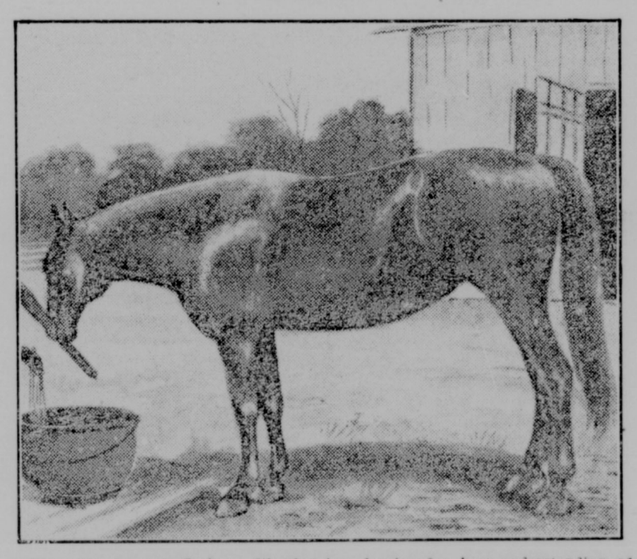
Lighthouse in a Desert.

There is at least one lighthouse in the world that is not placed on any mariner's chart. It is away out on the Arizona desert and marks the spot where a well supplies pure, fresh water to travelers. It is the only place where water may be had for 45 miles to the eastward and for at least 30 miles in any other direction. The "house" consists of a tall cottonwood pole, to the top of which a lantern is hoisted every night. The light can be seen for miles across the plain in every direction.

What a Yarn!

This cold weather story comes from Mapleton, Me., to the Lewiston Journal: Some of the old pioneers say that they used to have some very cold weather here when they first came. They tell of taking a block of ice and making a trough to water the cattle in, which would last until May; also of the tea kettle boiling over on a red hot stove and the water rolling on to the floor like shot, frozen solid.

THIS HORSE NEEDS NO GROOM.



There is a horse in Bethany, Ill., that has developed a keen understanding, as well as a keen sense of humor. By observing the things the owner has done for the horse's comfort the animal has adopted some plans of helping himself. When he is thirsty he walks to the pump, clamps his teeth upon the handle, and pumps enough water to quench his thirst. If he is in one lot and wishes to get in another, he unlocks the gate with his teeth in the same manner that he pumps water, and he unties the halter rope when he tires of standing. The animal will not drink water that has been standing long, but insists on pumping fresh water.

PAUL DWIGHT MOODY

HAS JUST MADE BOW TO PUBLIC AS BIBLE INSTRUCTOR.

Youngest Son of Late Evangelist Speaks Well Before Large Audiences—In Love with His Mother's Companion.

Paul Dwight Moody, 24 years old, the youngest son of the late Dwight Lyman Moody, the evangelist, made his bow a day or two ago, for the first time, so far as the public is concerned, as an instructor in the Bible.

Mr. Moody was graduated from Yale in 1901, and since then has taken a two years' course at a Scotch theological school, having branches at Edinburg and Glasgow, Scotland, spending one year at each

According to the Boston Globe, he came home last June, and from that time until September he was engaged in editorial work on the Northfield Echoes, a paper covering the Moody conferences and having a circulation of about 4,000. In September he became one of the faculty of the Mt. Hermon school for boys, teaching English and especially the study of the Bible.

This work takes him from East Northfield to Mt. Hermon four days a week and four hours each day, not including the time spent in traveling the six miles back and forth between the two schools.

He likes teaching, in fact, just now he says that he is ready to spend his life at it. There is a special reason for this. When Mr. Moody came back from Scotland last June he found a very charming young woman, Miss May Hull, acting as companion to his mother. Miss Hull was graduated from the Moody seminary for girls in 1900, and then she was for two years at the Pratt institute at Brooklyn. Mrs. D. L. Moody wanted a companion. She did not specially remember Miss Hull in her Northfield days, but she was found eligible, and went to East Northfield. The not uncommon result followed that the young people fell in love, and their engagement has recently been announced.

Mr. Moody was asked the other day if the date of the marriage had been fixed, and he replied very frankly that it had not, but he wished it was fixed.

Notwithstanding that he is only just out of the theological school, Mr. Moody thinks that he has first and last already made 50 addresses in public. He is inclined to think that one of the most notable was at Denver. He does not enjoy speaking in public. He has passed the period of stage fright, but somehow or other public speaking goes against the grain.

PAUL DWIGHT MOODY.

In spite of this apparent dislike, he will be heard probably more and more by the public. There are calls already for him in a variety of places as an instructor of the Bible. His theological school training was specially for this work. He likes teaching the boys and they like him.

Paul Dwight Moody is very much like his father in certain respects. He is perhaps half a head taller, but he has not yet the breadth and weight physically of the father. The great Moody frame is there, however. Then, again, the son is growing a beard, which will increase the resemblance.

The voice is largely the same. There is no imitation, but there is an inherited tone, look, gesture, manner and general delivery.

The listener who was familiar with the platform utterances of the father might close his eyes and well think that he was hearing the voice of Dwight L. Moody, so far as voice is concerned, and he might open his eyes and think that Dwight L. Moody was speaking with his youth renewed.

There would be one radical difference, however. Unquestionably the young man is vastly more tolerant of so-called liberal thought than was the father. The young man is conservative and still liberal. The father, even in the last year of his life, would instantly have repudiated many of the ideas which the young man boldly advances and maintains.

In other words, the son began where the father left off. He says very frankly there are things in the Scotch phase of theology that are too strong for him. Perhaps he does not say this in just so many words.

He speaks very largely without reference to his notes and at times with great rapidity. This is a defect just now, because it is difficult for the average person to key his mental processes to such a strenuous pace.

BELIEVES IN BOLD DASHES.

Admiral Makaroff, Now in Command of Port Arthur Fleet, Has Ideas of His Own.

Rear Admiral Makaroff, who has taken command of the crippled Port Arthur fleet, succeeding Stark, has ideas that run counter to those generally accepted by naval experts and strategists. One of his pet aversions is armor. The admiral is ever outspoken in his criticism of the heavy battleship, which he always contended placed too many eggs in a single basket and shows his partiality for a fleet composed of a large number of swift, unarmored cruisers armed with heavy guns and attended by an unlimited number of torpedo boats.

He was born in Kamschatka, where as a mere boy, he was picked up by a Russian naval officer, whose fancy was caught by the brightness and ambition of the lad. Taken to St. Petersburg by his protector, he embraced eagerly a chance of entering the imperial navy. But he did this at the very bottom, beginning as a cabin boy and working his way steadily upward.

His career was so rapid, in spite of the handicap under which he started, that even at the present time he is one of the youngest among the men of authority in the navy. He distinguished himself several times during the Turko-Russian war.

REAR ADMIRAL MAKAROFF.
(In Command of the Russian Warship at Port Arthur.)

At the end of the war he took command of Russia's Mediterranean squadron. At succeeding periods he commanded the Black Sea fleet and the oriental squadron. He was called home in 1896 to become commander in chief of the Baltic fleet, which is the main branch of the czar's navy. Before returning to Russia he made an extended trip through this country, visiting all the navy yards and gathering much valuable knowledge, which he since then has put to good use at Kronstadt.

It was in 1898 that the idea occurred to him to build an ice breaker more powerful than any theretofore constructed and thus to obviate the greatest shortcoming of Kronstadt as a naval base.

Encouraged by his success in the Baltic Admiral Makaroff planned in 1901 to make his way to the pole on board the Ermak. The expedition was fitted out at Newcastle, the czar having appropriated $750,000 for the experiment. The Ermak started in the early part of the summer, but did not reach as far north as Nansen's Fram had done. In August Admiral Makaroff returned home admitting that no boat constructed by man could force a way through the polar pack.

Twelve years ago Mr. Burkett was a schoolteacher in the little town of Leigh, Neb. He is now 34 years old and has been a member of the legislature and for three terms has been in congress. He graduated from Tabor college, at Tabor, Ia., in 1890, and was admitted to the bar in 1895.

AN IMPORTANT QUESTION.

The bill to submit an amendment to the Constitution of this State to a vote of the people for the purpose of restricting the right of suffrage, which passed the Senate and House of Delegates sometime ago, has not and will not be submitted to the Governor for his approval. It is claimed by the friends of the measure that the Governer's signature to the bill is unnecessary, although that is a new interpretation of the organic law on the subject. Heretofore bills passed to submit amendments to the constitution to the decision of the people, at the ballot-box, have gone to the Governor in the ordinary course of business and he has signed them. It is said that while Mr. Bernard Carter, one of the ablest lawyers in this State, is of opinion that the signature of the Governor is not required to such a measure to make it effective, Attorney General Bryan holds a decidedly contrary view in the matter. There is, therefore, some danger that the courts, if properly appealed to, may decide that the bill is ineffective.

There is, without doubt, room for a difference of opinion on the subject. The constitution provides that the Governor shall have power to veto every bill which shall have passed the House of Delegates and Senate, but that such bill may be passed over his veto by three-fifths of all the members elected to each House. In the case of amendments to the constitution, however, it requires the vote of "three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses" to pass bills submitting such amendments to a vote of the people. Whether that requirement is sufficient to take such bills out of the category of "every bill which shall have passed the House of Delegates and Senate," is a very nice legal question, and outside of the judiciary of the State is apt to be interpreted according to the prejudices of those who may consider it. Its ultimate decision may, however, be safely left to the Court of Appeals and, if that should be against the legality of the measure, minus the Governor's signature, its friends will only have themselves to blame for the result.

Governor Warfield is opposed to the disfranchising amendment in the shape in which it has been passed. He doesn't believe that the ordinary register of voters is capable of passing upon the sufficiency of the constitutional knowledge of an applicant for registration, and he is credited with believing that a colored man who has capacity and industry to acquire a certain amount of property should not be deprived of a voice in selecting officers of a government which he will be taxed to support. These views were too liberal for the ultraists of the Democratic party and hence the Governor was entirely ignored in the measure agreed upon. He is, without question better than his party.

Sending the bill, containing the disfranchising amendment, directly to the clerk of the Court of Appeals, without submitting it to the Executive for his approval or rejection, was a scheme of the party bosses to withhold from that functionary an opportunity to express his views, officially, concerning it. But the scheme has been defeated by Governor Warfield, who, on Wednesday, sent a special message to the Senate, protesting against the interpretation which with held from him a prerogative that, he holds, is guaranteed by the constitution. If he shall continue of that opinion he must refuse the publication of the amendment, as the constitution requires, and in that case the initative to compel such action must be taken by friends of the measure, by applying for a mandamus to compel obedience to the action of the legislature. Those who believe that the bill is ineffective, without the Governor's signature, will not be under the necessity of applying for an injunction to prevent its publication, if he shall continue of the same mind as he holds in his message to the Senate.

The Governor, however, does not confine his message to this feature of the case, but expresses his views of the character of the Poe amendment, adopted by the General Assembly, in no uncertain fashion. On this point he says:

"I have not changed my views on this question since I became Governor, but have become more earnestly in favor of an amendment which will accomplish the results so generally desired. The amendment proposed by the bill passed does not, in my judgment, do this. The educational requirement therein is not conservative or defiuite, but is vague and uncertain, and is liable to cause grave abuses through the prejudices, the whims and the partisan zeal of the registration officers. Any educational requirement or qualification adopted should be defined in precise terms in the amendment, and thus be placed beyond the power of any election officer to do injustice by partisan or unfair action.

"The fundemental right of a citizen to exercise the privileges of suffrage should not depend upon the opinion of any set of election officials as to the reasonableness of his intrepretation of any clause of the Constitution. Another class of persons should be given the right of suffrage—those who have a material interest in the welfare of the commonwealth, who pay taxes and thus aid in defraying the expenses of the state and local governments, and whose thrift means so much for the prosperity of the State.

"The man who, by his industry, frugality and business judgment, accumulates property and acquires his home should have a voice in the management of public affairs. He can be counted upon as a good, law-abiding citizen.

"This property right to registerwill encourage thrift, industry and the making of good citizens, and will hold out to the uneducated who now have no property and who could not qualify as voters under the amendment proposed ahope of future enfranchisement."

Certainly, Governor Warfield has taken a stand on this branch of the subject in which he should be upheld by the support of all fair-minded citizens, without regard to party affiliation.

KENDALL.

L. M. Raybeck and D. H. Shank who reside in Confluence, Pa., went home Saturday to vote at the Somerset county primary election.

Mrs. Harry Krug, who visited at her former home at Oil City, Pa., returned here Thursday last.

Dr. A. J. Mason, of Friendsville, was seen on our streets last Saturday.

Rev. D. H. Friend, of Friendsville, preached to the wicked of this burg last Sunday.

A new locomotive for use of the Yough Manor Lumber Co., will be here this week from the shops at Corry, Penna. It bears the name of "S. A. Kendall" who is president of the Company, and if the locomotive will become as popular with Mr. Veley the engineer, as Mr. Kendall is with his employes, there will be causes for congratulation all around.

DEER PARK.

Fishing seems to be the principal occupation at present.

Miss Josie Griffin was an Oakland caller last Wednesday and Thursday.

Miss Osa Fisher was in town last Saturday.

Miss Grace Walter entertained a number of her friends last Monday evening.

Mr. Jos. Lashorn is still on the sick list.

Miss Stella George, of Barton, spent a few days last week with her sister Miss Emma, at this place.

Miss Kate Griffin and sister, Mrs Mike Garrett, were Oakland callers last Saturday.

SCHOOL BOARD MEETING.

Normal School Principals Elected and Free Scholarships Awarded.

The Board of School Commissioners for this county met in regular session on last Friday with the full membership present, when routine business was transacted and Normal School principals appointed as follows:

Grantsville, J. C. Breahm, of Brentsville, Va., who has been principal of the Grantsville public school for several weeks; Accident, J. I. Sollars, of Oakland, Friendsville, Ira Culp, of District No. 8; Oakland, H. A. Loraditch.

Free scholarship were awarded in the Frostburg Normal School as follows: William Bishoff and H. W. Browning.

The selection of the principals of the several normal schools meet with favor by the normal scholars and the general public.

AARON'S RUN.

The public school at this place closed on Saturday, the 2nd inst., after one of the most successful terms ever taught here. The teacher, Miss Margaret Browning, coming amongst us in the midst of opposition and adversity on almost every hand, will now carry with her to her home the love and admiration of both parents and children, and all who come in contact with her. The high regard in which she was held by pupils was thoroughly demonstrated by the many handsome presents bestowed upon her. In the afternoon a beautiful treat was given the school which gladdened the hearts of the little folks, after which the eveniug was spent in recitations, select reading, speeches and a general good time, there being quiet a numder of visitors present.

Quite a number of young folks spent Easter night at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Fazenbaker and were entertained with music and singing.

ONE PRESENT.

SUNNYSIDE.

'Squire Harvey, of Gorman, was a pleasant visitor at this place one day last week.

The young people of this community are anxious for Prof. Jesse Shaffer to reorganize his class in vocal music at this place.

Miss Ethel Hutson was visiting her sister at Hutton last week.

There will be an entertainment held at this place about the 15th inst. for the amusement of everybody.

Stewart Ridder, of near Bayard, has recently moved upon his farm near here.

Mr. C. W. Willoughby, of London, England, is doing artistic work in this neighborhood.

Yantz Lee, the leading farmer in this part of our county, is engaged hauling hay to Oakland. Yantz's hay is of the best grade and he gets the best prices for it.

Mrs. J. G. Brenninger is visiting, for an indefinite time, her daughter, Mrs J. T. Loar, of Bittinger.

Howard Hutson's actions are strange to say the least. It is believed that his mind is about Kearney.

The people of this place will soon have the services of another telephone line, being the third line constructed through this place.

Merchant P. P. Gortner and son, of Gortner, made a flying trip South on Friday last.

Peter Brenninger made a flying trip to Bittinger last week, returning home on Saturday.

Charity parties are becoming popular in this community.

FRIENDSVILLE.

The ugly weather is again replaced with warmth and sunshine.

Moving is the order of the day.

A. N. Miller, of Hazelton, W. Va., recently returned from an extended trip to Minnesota. Mr. Miller was favorably impressed with the Northwest.

J. A. Speicher, of Accident, is here on business.

Judge Kendall, of Myersdale, Pa., was here a day or two last week.

J. S. Gnagey, principal of the Accident school, was here on Friday.

E. L. Hamlin, who has resided here for several years, will in the near future move to Swallow Falls.

The public school will close here next Friday. We have had a very successful school term.

We are credibly informed that a normal has been appointed for this place with Prof. Culp as principal. The Board, as we are informed, expects to have manual training in connection with normal work. We think the plan a good one.

Easter services was held here in both the M. E. and Lutheran churches. The programs were well arranged and rendered in a pleasing manner. The children who always play an important part in such services showed careful training and certainly did perform their parts well. The floral decorations were very pretty. What may be said in commendation of the one will equally apply to the other. What we need to be cautious about now days, that we do not make all show and pretense and lose real sight of Easter day observance.

LOCH LYNN HEIGHTS.

We ask that the city government clean up the town so that it will at least have the name of being somewhat like other towns and villages in this section. Loch Lynn Heights is a very beautiful little village, or could be if placed in the proper sanitary condition.

In one place there are the remains of two dead canines lying exposed to view and upon the property of the ex-Mayor. Look about and a visitor is struck with the condition of the buildings in the town, many of which are a disgrace to humanity. Many of the citizens throw slops into the streets which is a clear violation of the law. Our Board of Health officer should be notified of this condition and a stop put to the practice.

What would some of our summer people think should they drop in upon us and note the condition matters are now in? and then the question follows why is it that our town does not progress? The answer is plain upon its face, for with the small pox, and other diseases rampant why should it.

Our Mayor and Council have not met in session for more than six months and this has resulted in allowing everything to run down at the heel. Our board walks are in frightful condition.

An appropriation of $100 has been levied by the County Commissioners for the purpose of working the streets. Has this money been put to the use for which it was intended? To judge from the condition of the thoroughfares the answer must be no.

We suggest that a statement be made and published so that the citizens and tax payers may be made aware of the receipts and disbursements of the town. We do not think this unreasonable, but is just.

A CITIZEN

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

The gang of thieves who have been committing indiscriminate thefts in this neighborhhod during the past winter, have been scented, and on last Wednesday morning quite a lively skirmish took place near here, in which knives, pistols, shot guns and cuss words figured largely, when Constable Stahl of Gratsville, backed by a half score of the village braves, came upon one of the outlaw leaders accommpanied by two associates, who were found to have stolen goods in their possession, which they had attempted to haul to a new rendezvou under cover of the darkness of the previous night. The constable had a warrant for one of the men, but while at some distance from the officer's party, his confederates gave him a signal and he wheeled his horse and fled. Mr. Luther Ralston, a hero of the Spanish-American war, who was one officer Stahl's party, hastily mounted and started in pursuit, calling for others to follow. He soon came up with his man, but at that moment the robber leaped from his horse and ran into the woods and escaped. Mr. Ralston's companions refusing to follow, he gave up the chase at this point. The other supposed accomplices of the robber were taken before Squire Ralston, but in the absence of proof of their guilt they were dismissed. Ex-Deputy Sheriff S. O. Wiley led a searching party since, and recent investigatiens have brought to light proofs that have made it nessary to issue other warrants, and it is hoped that the arrests will be made soon.

Mr. G. W. Engle, of Baltimore spent last Friday, Saturday and part of Sunday with his family here, going to the city again on Sunday.

Grandmother Ruckle and grandson, F. M. Bittinger, were visiting relatives hear Avilton last Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Mahlon Brenneman, who spent a few months here this winter, returned to Musser county, W. Va., on last Monday, where he will take up his old position.

Mr. Musser, of the Cove, was in this section repairing phones one day last week.

Mrs. Brendinger, of Sunnyside, is visiting her daughter, Mrs. T. J. Lohr.

The last but not the least item on this week's record, is a little daughter at the home of T. J. Lohr, arrived March 31st.

DIED.

PULLMAN—At the Oakland Sanitarium, yesterday morning of cancer of the stomach after a prolonged illness, Mrs. A. R. Pullman, of near Rowlesburg, West Va. Mrs. Pullman was brought to Oakland about six weeks ago but her malady had reached such a stage that nothing could be done to effect a cure. Her remains were taken to Rowlesburg this morning. She was aged about 63 years. Her sister, Mrs. John Peters, formerly of Oakland, accompanied the remains to the above place.

WHITE.—At his residence in Oakland, this morning at 6.00 o'clock, after an illness of several weeks, Rowan White, in his 93rd year. Deceased leaves a wife and eleven children, six sons and five daughters. A more extended notice of the life of this old and well known citizen will be given next week.

Looted by Thieves.

A gang of professional burglars Wednesday night dynamited the safe of the Kingwood post office, which is located in the Journal building, and secured, besides private papers belonging to the Journal Company and of Postmaster Whetzel, $200 in cash and $200 worth of stamps.

The men left town without leaving a single trace, and later in the night they worked the combination on the safe at the postoffice at Tunenlton and secured $40 in stamps and coin. They then boarded freight train and escaped.

Traders' Bank Reorganized.

The Traders National Bank of Clarksburg, which was closed some time ago on account of financial difficulties, has been reorganized and will resume business. The stockholders held a meeting and increased the capital stock from $85,000 to $200,000, increased the board of directors from six to eleven members, and elected the following officers: President, W. Brent Maxwell; vice-president, Paul M. Robinson; cashier, Scott W. White. The bank will be reopened as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made with the Comptroller of the Currency.

Young Plants

Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.

And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.

Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.

Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow—Scott's Emulsion seems to find it and set the matter right.

THE ACCIDENT NORMAL SCHOOL.

J. I. SOLLARS, Principal.

This School will open for a term of ten weeks, beginning on Monday, April 18th, 1904.

Accident, with its healthful situation and highly moral surroundings, is an ideal spot for the location of a Normal.
We shall endeavor to make the school interesting.
Board can be secured at Accident at a very low figure.
The tuition for the term will be $5 and $6, paid in advance or satisfactory arrangements.
For further information address the Principal.

5-2t J. I. SOLLARS, OAKLAND.

OAKLAND NORMAL SCHOOL

WILL OPEN MONDAY, APRIL 18, 1904.

It will be our aim, as heretofore, to make this one of the best, if not the best, school in the county. The Lecture Course which heretofore met with such favor will be continued. The best talent has been secured. This was, as some expressed it, "A new departure," and those who were with us adjudged it the feature of the school.
Board in Oakland is very reasonable. This, with the healthy almosphere and pleasant surroundings, makes it a very desirable place for those who wish to become educated.

Tuition for the Term will be $5 and $6, paid in advance, or other satisfactory arrangements. No deviation.

Every effort will be made to make the school a success. For further information apply to.

Preaching service in the Presbyterain church next Sabbath evening at 7.30. A cordial invitation is given to all to attend.

W. H. MILLER, Pastor.

Mr. Fred T. Martin has had plans prepared for a residence which he will erect on the site now occupied by the Edwards house on Oak street which he purchased about a year ago. The plans are modern in every respect and the erection of the building will materially increase the value of all property in the immediate neighborhood.

Rev. L. E. Goodwin, recently of the Church of England, who was elected Rector of the Parish of the Protestant Episcopal church in this county, reached Oakland Tuesday night and will conduct his first service in St. Matthew's church, Oakland, on Sunday morning, April 10th.

Many citizens of Oakland are making improvements to their dwellings and property in general at this time. Mr. D. E. Offutt is having a handsome porch erected to the front of his residence and will add another story to the structure. Mr. John T. Mitchell is also improving his residence by having a new porch built and the erection of large bay windows on the south side.

Attention is directed to the advertisement of Mr. H. L. Daugherty, who will onen on next Saturday his store located in the First National Bank building. His stock is all brand new and direct from the manufacturers, consisting of shoes, trunks, traveling cases, gentlemen's furnishings, etc. He extends a cordial invitation to the public to call and make their purchases.

Mr. L. A. Rudisill, of the Park, who has recently embarked in the loan, insurance and real estate business, uses the columns of this paper to-day in advertising his business. He offers some very desirable pieces of real estate for sale, besides representing some of the best life, accident, health and fire insurance companies in the world. Write him for anything in real estate or insnrance and he will no doubt be able to please you.

Rev. Dr. J. L. B. Jones, recently of Terra Alta, but now stationed at Cameron, W. Va., is in Oakland as the guest of Rev. and Mrs. R. B. Ward. Dr. Jones as well as Mr. Ward, was elected at the recent session of the West Virginia Conference of the M. E. church delegates to the General Conference which meets at Los Angeles, Cal., in May, for which city they will depart on the 22nd inst.

By advertisement which appears in another column of this paper today it will be seen that Mr. Chas. Liller has purchased of his brother Clyde the latter's barber shop located in the Nelson building on Alder street and that a consolidation of the two places has been made. About May 1st Mr. Liller will receive from the manufacturers new furniture and fixtures of the latest designs for his tonsorial rooms which will be located in the Ravenscroft building on Second street.

A. D. Naylor & Co. are now prepared to furnish anything in the vehicle or implement line at the lowest prices, having received this season six car loads of vehicles and farm wagons and also one car of implements. 3t.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. A. Tower celebrated the fifth aniversary of their wedding Tuesday evening of this week by entertaining many of their friends.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Knights of St. John of Oakland, will hold a festival in Offutt's Hall on Tuesday evening, April 12th. The proceeds will be devoted to reducing the debt on the new Catholic church. Tickets of admission 10 cents, which includes a chance in a set of silver tableware.

A lady bootblack, probably the first ever visiting Oakland, was here Tuesday and yesterday and as a result many gentlemen had the novel experience of having their shoes shined by her. There was a method in her madness, however, as the submissive male was informed that she charged a quarter for the shine but nothing whatever for a bottle of polish which accompanied it.

Public Sale of Personal Property.

I will offer at public sale at my farm near Schell, W. Va, on the 14th day of April, the following property: 3 cows, 3 two-year old heifers, 2 yearling steers, 23 head of sheep, 2 hogs, mowing machine, horse rake, farm wagon, plows, harrow, household furniture and other articles too numerous to mention. A credit of 6 months will be given on all sums of five dollars or over, by purchaser giving note with approved security and bearing interest from day of sale; under five dollars, cash on day of sale.

4 JOSEPHUS HARVEY.

Notice.

I have purchased the fixtures in the barber shop of Clyde C. Liller on Alder street and consolidated the two places. On May 1st I will receive entire new furniture of the latest designs and move my place of business from its present location to a room on the first floor of the Ravenscroft building on Second street.

The patronage of the public is invited.

CHAS. LILLER.

TO SECURE PIPE ORGAN

For St. Paul's M. E. Church in Oakland.

Some of the musically inclined members of St. Paul's M. E. Church in Oakland have taken it upon themselves to raise something like two thousand dollars with which to purchase and instal in the church a pipe organ of standard make.

Nearly eight hundred dollars has been pledged by the members of the church for this purpose which is sufficient to warrant those interested in going on with the solicitin of the fund.

A letter has been written Mr. Andrew Carnegie asking him to make a donation and it is confidently believed that he will accede to the request.

Injured at a Saw Mill.

Josiah Hochstaler, employed on the Ravenscroft saw mill about four miles from Accident, was seriously injured Tuesday morning by his left hand coming in contact with the edger on the mill, which produced injuries to such an extent that amputation was made necessary. The operation was performed by Dr. Henry W. McComas, of Oakland, assisted by Drs. Boyer and Ravenscroft, of Accident.

New Goods.

We have just opened a new and complete line of suitings, seersuckers, India linens, albatross, spot crepe, pongees, covert cloth, silks, etc; a beautiful line of white goods for waists waist sets, crepe paper, writing paper, ace collars. A complete line of clothing, shirts, ties shoes snd hats for men and boys at prices to suit everbody. TOWNSHEND & SON

Normal Schools.

Elsewhere in these columns announcements will be noticed of the opening of Normal Schools at Oakland, Accident and Grantsville.

The Oakland will be under the management of Prof. H. A. Loraditch, who has had charge of the manual training department of the Oakland school during the present term. He is well qualified for the position in the Normal and anticipates a good attendance.

Mr. Sollars, who will have charge of the Accident school, is a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Sollars, of near Oakland. He is a graduate of one of Maryland's leading educational institutions and has been assistant principal of the Oakland public schools for two years past. Mr. Sollars is energetic and his record as an instructor will compare favorably with those who have spent many years at the profession.

The Grantsville school will have as its principal Mr. J. C Breahm, of Brentsville, Va. Mr. Breahm was elected principal of the public school at Grantsville upon the resignation of Prof. Bender and has given perfect satisfaction to the pupils as well as the public.

Bank Statements.

We publish today statements showing the condition of the First National Banks of Oakland and Friendeville at the close of business March 28th, 1904. Both of these institutions are in a prosperous condition.

We also publish the detailed statement of the Lonaconing Savings Bank, located at Lonaconing, Allegany county. With a capital stock of $20,000 this institution shows a surplus of $30,000 and undivided profits exceeding $20,000. Its deposits are heavy, amounting as they do to more than a half million of dollars, which places it at the front rank of Western Maryland banks. The president is Mr. David Sloan while the directors are the leading and influential business men of Lonaconing.

For Sale.

A cottage at Mountain Lake Park, Md.; 12 rooms, kitchen and attic; is used as a boarding house, and has good patronage; splendid location, near Auditorium. Also, 10 acres of good land one-half mile south of Mt. Lake Park, all cleared except 1½ acres. For further particulars address or call on F. P. ARNOLD, Mt. Lake Park, Garrett county, Md. 49-26t

The March Number Book of the Royal Blue A Souvenir of the Great Fire.

The entire March edition of the "Book of the Royal Blue," published by the Passenger Department of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, has been issued as a memento of the disastrous fire of Feburbary 7th.

It is dedicated to the future greater Baltimore which will restore the restore the seventyfive business blocks destroyed.

A short concise story of the fire is given, followed by some thirty views of the ruins before the walls were torn down. A full page map of the city shows the location of the burned district.

The magazine is issued as a matter of history, and will be preserved as such. With very few exceptions the burned district now is but a pile of broken bricks without any semblance to buildings.

A limited edition of the popular magazine has been issued and copies may be obtained on immediate application to D. B. Martin, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, enclosing 10 cents in postage to include the cost of mailing.

TO THE APPLE.

Thy rounded form and ruddy cheek,
Thy full proportions' homely grace—
What sturdy health they seem to speak,
How beams with cheerful smiles thy face!

Oh, let the orange flaunt her gold,
The peach her bloom seductive show,
The grape display her purple bold,
The cherry prank in gaudy glow--

I'd give them all away for thee,
Pomona's pride, New England's joy;
Thy devotee I'll ever be
To latest days, as when a boy.

Symbol thou art of sanity,
A soul serene, a temperate life;
In thee we find no vanity,
No idle pomp, no foolish strife.

Who would have health and length of days,
Who would look back on years well spent,
Oh, let him join in this thy praise
And learn the secret of content.

JACK WILSON—TRUST BREAKER

By EDWIN J. WEBSTER

(Copyright, 1903, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

PERHAPS the young men of Abbeyville, relying on the fact that they had known the girls of that pretty little village since childhood, had grown somewhat careless and inattentive. Possibly the girls of Abbeyville were too particular and demanded more than was their due—though an unprejudiced observer would have said this would have been almost impossible in the case of such attractive girls. Whatever may have been the right of the case originally, the girls of Abbeyville, under the leadership of Laura Hopkins, decided that they had not been treated in a satisfactory manner. Something must be done to cause the young men of Abbeyville to repent and to remorsefully regard and regret their lost opportunities. Clearly an offensive and defensive league of the prettiest girls in Abbeyville would quickly bring about this much-to-be-desired result. And this was the reason for the formation of the Abbeyville Bachelor Girls' trust.

Laura Hopkins, as the leading spirit in the movement, was chosen president of the new trust. Laura had just quarreled with the man who thought her as near perfection as a girl can be—which in his opinion was very, very near—and in whom she had taken more than a sisterly interest. Perhaps this was the reason why she plunged into the work of forming the Bachelor Girls' trust in such an eager, not to say vindictive manner, heedless of the fact that all the evils claimed by the opponents of man-made trusts would be small compared with those which would be wrought by this new one if it should become firmly established throughout the country.

"We can have a club as well as the men," declared Laura, in sterner tones than one would have expected from so pretty a girl. "We can have our own dances, little parties all by ourselves, and all kinds of fun. We will show the men of Abbeyville that they are not one little bit necessary to our scheme of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

They did. From the first the Bachelor Girls' trust had a career of triumph compared with which the careers of man-made oil, coal, steel, rubber and other trusts were checkered. The trust had scarcely been started ere its victims were anxious to capitulate. They pleaded that manufacturers and producers who were crushed by other trusts were at least allowed to take stock in them. But the Abbeyville Bachelor Girls' trust was differently managed. It would hear of no compromise. Its victims must be crushed and thoroughly punished for their previous neglect of the fair members of the trust. Soon the poor victims were ready to listen to any terms. And then, just when the trust seemed to have everything in its own hands, when a complete and unconditional victory seemed assured, the trust was ruined, and ruined by the treachery of Nettie Williams, one of its prettiest and most prominent members.

Nettie had originally regarded the trust project with much favor. But with the advent of Jack Wilson in the village of Abbeyville things had gradually changed. Jack was a distant cousin of hers. She had met him at a college commencement two years before. She had watched him plunge through the Yale line in the big football game. Even before Jack decided to pursue his profession in Abbeyville it must be confessed that he had occupied a larger place in Nettie's thoughts and day dreams than was safe for such an ardent member of a Bachelor Girls' trust.

While Jack was deciding on the situation for his office and apartments he stayed at the Williams residence. One must be civil to a cousin, even if he is a distant one and you are a prominent member of a Bachelor Girls' trust. So Nettie accepted many invitations to walk and ride with her big, athletic-looking cousin. Jack Wilson was not a believer in procrastination. When he wanted anything he wanted it very badly and very quickly. And one evening, as they were returning from a drive, he asked Nettie a question, a question she had been longing, yet half afraid to have him ask. And then Nettie suddenly remembered her half-forgotten duty, her solemn, but unheeded vow as a member of the Abbeyville Bachelor Girls' trust.

Fortunately Jack Wilson was a lawyer, and still more fortunately, as he assured Nettie, he had made a special study of the anti-trust laws. He pointed out the danger Nettie had run in joining a combination which was so plainly illegal. The Sherman law, the laws to prevent the restraint of traffic, innumerable state and federal laws explicitly pronounced such a trust as that of the Bachelor Girls to be illegal, as striking at the dearest rights and privileges of free-born American citizens which had been guaranteed them by the constitution. Nettie in terror crept closer to Jack and slipped her hand in his. Would she be arrested, cast into a jail, perhaps sent to prison for life for her flagrant disobedience of the Sherman, the interstate commerce and other formidable-sounding laws? But Jack assured her that he would look after her legal rights. Only—otherwise all his efforts in her behalf would be null and void—he must first collect his fees. But as bad luck would have it, and Jack was collecting the aforesaid fees in spite of Nellie's slight resistance, the buggy swept out of the shadows into the glare of an electric light. There on the crosswalk, under the light, were three devoted and loyel members of the Bachelor Girls' trust.

The next meeting of the trust was the most stormy in the course of its existence. Nettie was denounced as a traitor to the cause and the trust. She was charged with rank disloyalty. In vain did she plead that she had simply been seeking legal advice for the benefit of the trust. The denunciations continued. At last Nettie lost her temper. Worms, if trampled upon, will turn; and if worms why not pretty girls? Nettie rose in her wrath and threw a bombshell into the meeting by announcing that Laura Hopkins, the president and founder of the trust, had set an example of disloyalty, that she had made up her quarrel with the man who had thought her as near perfect as a girl might be, that, so far from discouraging him, she had by her conduct helped confirm him in this belief. The faltering members of the trust turned to Laura in impatient expectance of an indignant denial from her lips. But alas, the blushes and embarrassment of Laura proved that the president and founder of the Abbeyville Bachelor Girls' trust had set the example of disloyalty.

With treachery within and temptation without the trust was plainly doomed to failure. Nothing was left except to formally disband. No resolution of censure was upon Nettie. Instead she left the meeting in triumph, arm in arm with the late president. The young men of Abbeyville, however, warned by the danger which they had so narrowly escaped by the downfall of the trust, were discreet in their triumph and individually and collectively tried to prove that the need for such an offensive and defensive alliance had passed. The result was that none of the fair founders of the trust seemed to regret its untimely end. And Nettie was least of all regretful.

"When you put up your office sign," she said, shyly, to Jack, "it ought to read: 'Jack Wilson, Attorney and Trust Breaker.'"

But Jack modestly demurred taking all the credit.

"I was only a humble instrument," he said, softly, trying to look into Nettie's eyes. "The really responsible party was an old and determined enemy of bachelor girls' trusts—a little fellow by the name of Cupid."

JAPANESE ROYAL WEDDING.

Marriage of Crown Prince of the Flowery Kingdom—Tokio Gay with Floral Arches.

The royal wedding of the crown prince of Japan, some four years ago, was celebrated with national rejoicing, writes Florence Eldridge in her article on "Yoshihito, Crown Prince of Japan," in Pearson's. The city of Tokio was transformed into a veritable fair ground with arches of flowers, festivals, numerous processions and congratulatory emblems. A new postage stamp was issued to commemorate the happy day. Thousands of people thronged the streets and gathered to see the imperial procession pass, standing respectfully with heads reverently bowed when the cortege appeared.

The costumes worn by the imperial bride and bridegroom during the ceremony were fashioned after the court dresses of centuries ago. The dress of the crown prince was a flowing robe of satin, with silken breeches seven feet in length, that trailed on the ground behind him as he walked, an outer coat of crepe, embroidered on sleeves, back and breast with his crest. With this he wore a cap of black, varnished material, bound by a fillet of gold, with a long streamer off stiff wire ribbon hanging from the back; this cap was kept in place by a light-colored silk cord which, passing once over the top of the head, was brought down and tied under the chin.

The Yankee Scored.

A London paper, speaking of the "American invasion," relates that an enterprising Yankee came over to England and decided to open a shop in Birmingham. He obtained premises next door to a man who also kept a shop of the same description, but was not very pushing in his business methods. The methods of the Yankee, however caused the older trader to wake up, and, with the spirit of originality strong upon him, he affixed a notice over his shop with the words: "Established 50 years," painted in large letters. Next day the Yankee replied to this, with a notice over his own store to this effect: "Established yesterday, no old stock."

Proverb Defined.

When one meets the tipping problem face to face, says the New Orleans Times-Democrat, he understands what is meant by the saw: "All things come to him who waits."

TEMPERANCE NOTES

WE ARE WINNING BIT BY BIT.

A Recitation by John Anderson.

Why should our feet grow weary or our hands refuse to toil?
Although there's much to make us sad, there's more to make us smile.
Embannered foes surround us still, but these we shall outwit:
We know, and that should cheer us on, we're winning bit by bit.

Never o'erlook those lessons that are written for our good;
They are printed on the paths we tread, and published on the wood.
The spring from bud to blossom moves before the fruits are fit:
We know, and that should cheer us on, we're winning bit by bit.

See how the sun comes slipping out along the eastern sky—
An instantaneous blaze of light would blast the strongest eye.
So streak and beam come sailing forth, each bright and brighter yet:
We know, and that should cheer us on, we're winning bit by bit.

How grandly art from age to age unfolds that loving lore—
From hieroglyphics to talking leaves and telegrams we soar;
From pack-steed on to royal mail and iron horse we flit:
We know, and that should cheer us on, we're winning bit by bit.

The tyrant Drink still keeps the field, and leads a mighty host;
But here and there his ancient guards are flying from their post;
And while his friends diminish fast, his foes are closer knit:
We know it, and that should cheer us on, we're winning bit by bit.

When right and might in battle meet, the conflict may be long;
But can we doubt whose lips shall sing the grand triumphant song?
Truth's diamond sword in Freedom's hand has ne'er been worsted yet:
We know, and that should cheer us on, we're winning bit by bit.
—John Anderson, in National Advocate.

HE KNEW HOW TO SAY NO.

It Saved One Young Man from the Sad Fate of His Bibulous Companions.

Five boys were together on the play ground of a schoolhouse. They had grown tired of the game in which they had been engaged and were seated on the grass near the schoolhouse door.

"Let's go to the fishing pond," said Joe Hartman. "We can be back before books."

"So we can," said Billy Benson, rising. "I'm with you—I'm always ready for a swim. I know we can be back before books, but it won't hurt much if we do lose a little time. I don't care for losing a little time."

"Maybe the teacher will whip us if we are not back by one o'clock." This came from John Jennings. "He doesn't like it when we're past one o'clock coming in. And he punished Ralph Rankin for being too late one day."

"Oh, you're a scary boy—you're always afraid of getting whipped. Come along and don't be a baby. We can be back in time for books."

"Yes, I'll go," said John. He didn't have firmness to say no.

Another boy, Edwin Harris, was asked if he would go and he readily assented.

Then Joe Hartman asked the fifth boy if he would go with them to "the swimming place," as it was often called.

"No," promptly replied Henry Dale. "I'll not go."

"And why not, Mr. Dale?" asked Joe somewhat imperiously.

"Because I promised my mother I would not."

This was Henry's answer and it was followed by a live burst of laughter from the other boys. Joe, however, was the first to lead in the laughter.

"Then you must be tied to your mother's apron string," said Joe, derisively. "I thought you could be a man in spite of your mother."

"We need not stop now to discuss the matter of manhood," said Henry. "I have told my mother that I would not go again from school to that place, and I intend to be as good as my word. If you all intend to go you can go right along. You need not wait for me."

"But," added one of the boys in derision, "we'd like to have you along to take care of us."

"Yes," added another, "and we'd feel safer if we had a real good mother's boy along."

These derisive remarks, however, were lost on Henry. He turned away and went to another part of the play ground.

The boys were absent when "books" was called by the teacher and they were punished.

Nine years had passed and Henry was engaged in a mercantile house in the city. He had been in this position for three months. He liked the business and his employer was beginning to feel that he had employed a young man of integrity—a young man who could be trusted. No great temptation, however, had appeared to turn the young man from his course.

He had made the acquaintance of some young men who were somewhat reckless and these young men whom we shall designate as Tom, Dick and Harry, came to him one evening at his boarding place with the intention of "breaking him in," as they called it.

"We want you to go with us and see the sights," said Tom.

"And," added Dick, "we'll not let you get into any trouble. We merely want to show you city life as it is."

"And," continued Harry, "you can then walk understandingly. You don't want to be called a greenhorn. We want you to be smart. We want you to see some of the wickedness of the world so that you can understand where you are at. We want to 'break you in,' so to speak. We don't want you to be considered a greeny. You have been here long enough to learn something about city life and we want you now to commence to learn. We'll show you around and we'll see that you don't get into any trouble."

Henry was willing to go. He didn't know just how these young men stood. They had been friendly, had treated him well, and those who had spoken of them said nothing derogatory to their character.

Henry went with them, and when they had walked and talked for awhile Dick proposed that they go into a saloon and have a drink.

"I don't drink," said Henry.

"But it won't hurt you to take a soft drink."

"I don't drink," said Henry, "neither hard nor soft."

"Oh," said Harry, "don't be a dunce; come and take a drink. We want you to be like other people."

"Now," said Henry, as he straightened himself manfully, "you have my answer. I don't drink. If you want to drink I will not detain you. I know the way to my boarding house. You can go your way, I can go mine. I would not take a drink of intoxicating liquor if by doing so I could gain the whole world. I'm what you might denominate a sot fellow. I promised my mother that I would never taste intoxicating liquor, and I will not."

A loud laugh from the pretended friends was the answer to this.

"But," said Tom, returning to the attack, "We don't ask you to drink anything intoxicating. It was soft drinks we were talking about."

"I class them all as intoxicating drinks," said Henry. "Good night. I am going home."

Another shout of laughter followed him, but he cared not. He had unexpectedly found out the kind of friends they were and he was thankful.

Ten years have gone into the cycles of the past. Henry has a prominent position in a large mercantile house in the city of N—. Tom went into the by-paths of the wicked and was accidentally killed while under the influence of intoxicating liquor. Dick is an outcast and Harry is considered a cipher.

"As ye sow so shall ye also reap."—H. Elliott McBride, in United Presbyterian.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

When drink comes in at the door prosperity flies out of the window.—National Advocate.

Let us have faith that right makes might; and in that faith, let us to th end dare to do our duty as we understand it.—Lincoln.

The perpetuity of this government will depend upon the moral and religious training of the youth.—George Washington's farewell address.

A movement is being started among the liquor men for a great building at Washington that shall be headquarters for the trade. A charter has been secured and the stock in the company has been fixed at a par value of $100 a share.

Notice was recently served on 70 saloonkeepers of Appleton, Wis., by the Sunday reform committee consisting of clergymen and laymen, that evidence will be collected against all saloons found to be open on Sunday. Many of the saloons heeded the warning, but it is believed that some of the more objectionable ones will fight.—Union Signal.

The papers tell of a soldier in the Philippines who discourses upon a new cure for drunkenness among soldiers. "We have," he says, "a lot of native soldiers enlisted here. When one of the white boys gets drunk the captain puts a native soldier over him, and the native puts on lots of airs while marching him around. It grinds the boys so they wouldn't get drunk if they could.

Different Classes of Inebriates.

Among the ordinary inebriates which come under treatment in the institutions there are several quite distinct classes: One the imbecile and delusional class; another the occasional inebriates, who seem to be both imbecile and paretic in their mental conditions; the third, the habitual and constant drinkers, who are, like the first class, egotistical and delusional about their own strength. Another class may be properly called criminal inebriates, who when under the influence of spirits have all the instincts and impulses of a criminal. They are clearly insane. The accidental inebriates is a class by themselves, and seem to depend entirely on the surroundings. The recurrent inebriates, in which the paroxysm of drink returns at stated intervals, are allied to the epileptoid family of diseases. Nearly all of these classes are neurotics from heredity; some direct from inebriate parents, others indirect from other forms of neurosis.—Journal of Inebriety.

Miss Nettie Blackmore, Minneapolis, tells how any young woman may be permanently cured of monthly pains by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"YOUNG WOMEN:—I had frequent headaches of a severe nature, dark spots before my eyes, and at my menstrual periods I suffered untold agony. A member of the lodge advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, but I only scorned good advice and felt that my case was hopeless, but she kept at me until I bought a bottle and started taking it. I soon had the best reason in the world to change my opinion of the medicine, as each day my health improved, and finally I was entirely without pain at my menstruation periods. I am most grateful."—NETTIE BLACKMORE, 28 Central Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

Painful Periods

are quickly and permanently overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The above letter is only one of hundreds of thousands which prove this statement to be a fact. Menstruation is a severe strain on a woman's vitality,—if it is painful something is wrong. Don't take narcotics to deaden the pain, but remove the cause—perhaps it is caused by irregularity or womb displacements, or the development of a tumor. Whatever it is, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is guaranteed to cure it.

If there is anything about your case about which you would like special advice, write freely to Mrs. Pinkham. She will treat your letter as strictly confidential. She can surely help you, for no person in America can speak from a wider experience in treating female ills. She has helped hundreds of thousands of women back to health. Her address is Lynn, Mass., and her advice is free. You are very foolish if you do not accept her kind invitation.

Details of Another Case.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Ignorance and carelessness is the cause of most of the sufferings of women. I believe that if we properly understood the laws of health we would all be well, but if the sick women only knew the truth about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, they would be saved much suffering and would soon be cured.

"I used it for five months for a local difficulty which had troubled me for years, and for which I had spent hundreds of dollars in the vain endeavor to rectify. My life forces were being sapped, and I was daily losing my vitality.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me completely, and I am now enjoying the best of health, and am most grateful, and only too pleased to endorse such a great remedy."—MISS JENNIE L. EDWARDS, 604 H St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Pinkham, whose address is Lynn, Mass., will answer cheerfully and without cost all letters addressed to her by sick women.

WESTERN CANADA HAS AN EXCELLENT CLIMATE.

The Saskatchewan Valley Very Highly Favored.

An interesting feature of Western Canada is its climate. Those who have made a study of it speak highly of it. The Canadian Government Agents are sending out an Atlas, and at the same time giving valuable information concerning railway rates, etc., to those interested in the country. As has been said, the climate is excellent. The elevation of this part of Canada is about 1,800 feet above the sea, about twice that of the average for Minnesota. It is a very desirable altitude. The country has a very equable climate, taking the seasons through. The winters are bright and the summers are pleasantly warm. R. F. Stupart, director of the meteorological service for Canada, says:

"The salient features of the climate "of the Canadian northwest territories "are a clear, bracing atmosphere dur-"ing the greater part of the year, and "a medium rainfall and snowfall. The "mean temperature for July at Winni-"peg is 66, and Prince Albert 62. The "former temperature is higher than at "any part of England, and the latter "is very similar to that found in many "parts of the southern countries."

At Prince Albert the average daily maximum in July is 76 and the minimum 48. Owing to this high day temperature with much sunshine, the crops come to maturity quickly.

Moisture is ample in the Saskatchewan valley, being about 18 inches annually. It is notable that about 75 per cent. of the moisture falls during the crop months. Thus, Western Canada gets as much moisture when it is needed and with several hours more sunshine daily than land further south gets during the growing season, it is not difficult to understand why crops mature quickly and yield bountifully.

Winter ends quickly, sowing is done during April and sometimes in March. Harvest comes in August, about the middle. Cyclones, blizzards, dust and sand storms are unknown.

Evening It Up.

Towne—Hear what Sniffkins did when the collection plate came 'round to him in church last Sunday?

Browne—No. Dropped a button in, I suppose.

"Not even that. He leaned over and whispered: 'I paid the pastor's fare in the car yesterday morning. We'll call it square.'"—Philadelphia Press.

CUTICURA OINTMENT

The World's Greatest Skin Cure and Sweetest Emollient—Positively Unrivalled.

Cuticura Ointment is beyond question the most successful curative for torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp, including loss of hair, ever compounded, in proof of which a single anointing with it, preceded by a hot bath with Cuticura Soap, and followed in the severer cases by a dose of Cuticura Resolvent Pills, is often sufficient to afford immediate relief in the most distressing forms of itching, burning and scaly humors, permits rest and sleep, and points to a speedy cure when all else fails. It is especially so in the treatment of infants and children, speedily soothing and healing the most distressing cases.

Geographical Changes.

"I don't see any use in having wars in this advanced age," remarked Mrs. Suburba, turning up the lamp.

"If you were a mapmaker,' replied Mr. Suburba, glancing up from the new atlas on his knees, "you probably would."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

TREAD POWER FOR CHURN.

There Are Neither Belts, Cogs Nor Anything Else to Get This Device Out of Order.

A light tread power for churning, turning grindstone, etc., is made by mounting a disk wheel nearly horizontally, the axle being inclined so one portion will be higher than the other. The dog, sheep or calf used for motive power is tied at one side, headed toward the higher part. As the animal walks, the wheel turns because of the animal's weight, and communicates motion to the pulley or small friction wheel beneath. There are no belts, no cogs. The weight of the animal bears the part of the large inclined wheel upon the smaller wheel beneath and causes it to revolve.

A discarded wagon wheel might be used as the framework of the large wheel, nailing boards on the upper surface for the animal to walk on, or a frame is easily made, and if somewhat larger than a wagon wheel—say six feet or seven feet in diameter—the circle will be larger and the animal will find the walking more direct. The under wheel may be six or eight inches in diameter. The power is increased by giving the large wheel more pitch, and diminished by setting it more nearly level.—Orange Judd Farmer.

WIRE FOR TOMATO PLANTS.

Superior in Every Respect to Old Barrel Hoops, Wooden Frames or Flimsy Stakes.

I am done with old barrel hoops and wooden frames and stakes and everything of that sort as a support for tomato vines, for I have found something so much better in the wire netting that can now be bought so cheaply. I tried it last year with such gratifying results that I shall never use anything else. I set five stakes in the ground about seven feet apart in the row of tomato plants. To these stakes, about a foot from the ground, I nailed wire netting four and a half feet high. As the plants grew and sent out branches I tied them to the wire with strips of old cotton cloth, which is better than cord, for it does not cut into the vines. About once a week I tied the vines up in this way and by the end of July they had completely covered the trellis and were hanging full of tomatoes, every one of which got a touch of sunshine some time in the day and none of which were on the ground. It is as easy to pick tomatoes trained in this way as it is to pick grapes, and you have no idea how pretty they look, particularly after a rain. In the fall it is quite easy to cover the vines with old quilts and shawls by throwing them over the trellis on frosty nights. When the vines were all dead I cut them away, dug up the posts, rolled up the wire without loosening it from the posts, and put it all away in an outbuilding for use next year. It will last for years to come, and has already paid for itself. I trained sweet peas in the same way to netting about three feet wide and was greatly pleased with the result. I tell this as a hint to flower growers, living in cities who cannot get brush for this purpose and who have found it very difficult to train sweet peas to cords of any kind.—Woman's Farm Journal.

RULES FOR RUNNING DAIRY.

If You Follow Them You Will Avoid Many Annoyances That Now Beset You.

The rules of the Vermont Dairy association contains the following: The milker should be clean, and his clothes likewise. Brush the udder just before milking and wipe with a clean cloth or sponge. Milk quietly, quickly and thoroughly. Throw away into the gutter the first few streams from each teat. This milk is very watery, of very little value and is quite apt to injure the remainder of the milk. Remove the milk promptly from the stable to a clean, dry room, where the air is pure and sweet. Drain the milk through a clean flannel cloth, or through two or three thicknesses of cheesecloth. Aerate and cool the milk as soon as it is strained. The cooler it is the more souring is retarded. If covers are left off the cans, cover with cloths or mosquito netting. Never mix fresh milk with that which has been cooled, nor close a can containing warm milk, nor allow it to freeze. Under no circumstances should anything be added to milk to prevent it souring. Such doings violate the laws of both God and man. The chemicals which are used for this purpose are slow poisons. Cleanliness and cold are the only preservatives needed. In hot weather jacket the cans with a clean, wet blanket or canvas when moved in a wagon. Musty, sour food, dusty litter or fodder should be out of the way at milking time.

Cow manure is a valuable fertilizer, but adds no richness to the milk.

SETTING THE FRUIT TREES.

How an Orchard of Any Kind May Be Made to Look Attractive as Well as Thrifty.

Young orchards should be set so the trees may be in exact rows. It requires little more work than the slipshod methods too often used. An orchard in which the trees are accurately set is a joy forever, while one in which they are set in a haphazard fashion is an eyesore.

The contention that sighting the trees themselves will not give perfectly straight rows is also sound. I can scarcely conceive of the ordinary farm hand, or even an extraordinary one, getting under a "light tripod" and digging a hole for a tree without moving the tripod. It might be possible if the tripod were so large as to give ample room for the operation of digging. In such a case it would be too unweildy to move easily.

Lowering a weight down by the side of the trunk to ascertain when the tree is in the right place is likely to prove somewhat tedious if there are any branches on the tree to interfere. The accompanying diagram shows what has proved to be a most satisfactory device for getting the tree exactly where the stake originally stood. It consists of a board perhaps six feet long with a hole in either end and a deep notch in the middle.

The land in which the trees are to be planted is first laid off in rows with a small stake where each tree is to stand. The board just described is placed on the ground so that the notch fits over the stake. A small stake is driven through each of the holes in the ends of the board. The board is removed and the hole dug for the tree. While this is being done the measuring board may be used to set the guide stakes for other holes.

When everything is ready to set the tree, put the board back in place again, place the tree in the hole so that it fits in the notch, and fill in the soil. The result will be that the tree stands just where the original stake did.

If planting is being done on a large scale, there may be a half dozen or more of the measuring boards. If they are all of the same dimensions it will make no difference whether or not the same one is used in setting the tree that was used when the guide stakes were set.—F. C. Sears, in Orange Judd Farmer.

ATTRACTIVE FARM LAWNS.

There Is No Reason Why Every Door Yard in the Land Should Not Be Beautified.

Nothing so beautifies a dwelling as to be set in the center of a well kept lawn. There is no reason why the farmer and his family should not enjoy the possession of an attractive door yard, since every facility is at hand for grading, planting and keeping a pretty lawn. The dwelling should, if possible, be located on a slightly elevated knoll, but often the site has already been selected and the building erected in which case it may be necessary to grade to the desired elevation. One can not endure a low sloppy door yard, hence the ground immediately around the house should be higher than at the outer edge of the yard. Early spring is the best time to sow the grass seed. Kentucky blue grass is a general favorite for lawns. This should be very thickly sown to produce a mat the first season. If, however, one succeeds in getting a fair, even stand, he need have no concern regarding the lack of density as this grass thickens up from year to year. In arranging the lawn, have very few shrubs or trees in the center. There should be planted at the outer edge, preferably at the rear and sides of the building. Do not obscure the view from the roadway. If there are unsightly buildings a screen of vines run on a wire trellis will be found effectual in hiding them from the occupants of the dwelling as well as from passers-by. A very pretty effect may be had by planting a few beds of profuse bloomers of different colors very near the house, at the ends or side of the porch or around the bay window. Provision may be made to have these beds in bloom from early spring to late autumn, by using bulbs for early spring blooming, annuals for summer, and chrysanthemums, cosmos and other autumn blooming plants. Their beauty is enhanced by the greenery about them.—C. B. Barrett, in Epitomist.

Bacterial Content of Cheese.

In a report from the Ontario Experiment station on a study of the bacterial content of cheese are presented figures that indicate the amount of work these little organisms do in the predigesting of this food product. According to this report the number of bacteria present are usually largest when the cheese is but a day or two old. The products developed by the germs, being detrimental to their own existence, cause them gradually to deminish in number. The number of germs found in one sample only two days old was 17,854,447,500 per ounce of cheese.

THROUGH HIS "ALFALFAS."

Speech Became Entangled and Lost Its Way in the Foliage on Speaker's Face.

At the live stock show recently held in Chicago Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson was one of the speakers at a mass meeting of cattle men. Behind him on the same platform, relates the New York Herald, somewhat screened from observation, sat Norman J. Colman, the first man to hold the portfolio of agriculture.

Secretary Wilson made a happy speech, and because of his popularity with the western ruralist he was the shining, central figure of the gathering. When he had finished talking lusty lungs and sunburned hands gave him noisy approbation. The applause had not ceased when a Nebraska farmer, with whiskers like Senator Peffer's, arose in the back of the hall and said:

"Gentlemen, we are all mighty glad to hear Secretary Wilson and are ready to do him honor, but let us not forget the other great men we have with us. We have on the same platform to-night the alfalfa and omega of agriculture"—

It was as far as the speaker ever got. His few remaining words were lost in the shrieks of laughter.

SHE SOWED LIVER PILLS.

But It Is Not at All Likely That She Waited for Them to Take Root.

There is a woman in Phoenix, Ariz., who has the correct idea all right, but, whether it will work out remains for the future to disclose, states the Republican of that town.

Recently her husband bought a small ranch, and with him she has been much interested in planning improvements, especially in the growing line, with which to adorn the place.

The other day beds were prepared for sweet peas, and the lady of the house was busily engaged in assorting her seeds and carrying the little packets out of doors, where their contents were transferred to the beds in regular order. As each variety was planted, the name was placed on a small marker, as is the custom with gardeners.

In a particularly choice location the contents of a packet were laboriously dropped, one by one, until the row was filled and the earth nicely smoothed over it. When the lady picked up the packet to properly write the marker she discovered that she had carefully planted her mother's package of liver pills.

For Growing Girls.

West Pembroke, Me., March 21.—Mrs. A. L. Smith, of this place, says that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the best remedy for growing girls. Mrs. Smith emphasizes her recommendation by the following experience:

"My daughter was thirteen years old last November and it is now two years since she was first taken with Crazy Spells that would last a week and would then pass off. In a month she would have the spells again. At these times she would eat very little and was very yellow, even the whites of her eyes would be yellow.

"The doctors gave us no encouragement, they all said they could not help her. After taking one box of Dodd's Kidney Pills, she has not had one bad spell. Of course, we continued the treatment until she had used in all about a dozen boxes, and we still give them to her occasionally, when she is not feeling well. Dodd's Kidney Pills are certainly the best medicine for growing girls.

Mothers should heed the advice of Mrs. Smith, for by so doing they may save their daughters much pain and sickness and ensure a healthy happy future for them.

THE OLD FOLKS AT HOME

Are Never Without Peruna in the House for Catarrhal Diseases.

MR. AND MRS. J. O. ATKINSON, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

UNDER date of January 10, 1897, Dr. Hartman received the following letter:

"My wife had been suffering from a complication of diseases for the past 25 years.

"Her case had baffled the skill of some of the most noted physicians. One of her worst troubles was chronic constipation of several years' standing.

"She also was passing through that most critical period in the life of a woman—change of life. In June, 1895, I wrote to you about her case. You advised a course of Peruna and Manalin, which we at once commenced, and have to say it completely cured her. She firmly believes that she would have been dead only for these wonderful remedies.

"About the same time I wrote you about my own case of catarrh, which had been of 25 years' standing. At times I was almost past going. I commenced to use Peruna according to your instructions and continued its use for about a year, and it has completely cured me.

"Your remedies do all that you claim for them, and even more. Catarrh cannot exist where Peruna is taken according to directions. Success to you and your remedies."

John O. Atkinson.

In a letter dated January 1, 1900, Mr. Atkinson says, after five years' experience with Peruna:

"I will ever continue to speak a good word for Peruna. In my rounds as a traveling man I am a walking advertisement for Peruna and have induced many people during the past year to use Peruna with the most satisfactory results. I am still cured of catarrh."

John O. Atkinson,
Box 272, Independence, Mo.

When old age comes on, catarrhal diseases come also. Systemic catarrh is almost universal in old people.

This explains why Peruna has become so indispensable to old people. Peruna is their safe-guard. Peruna is the only remedy yet devised that meets these cases exactly.

Such cases cannot be treated locally; nothing but an effective systemic remedy could cure them. This is exactly what Peruna is.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

Peter Confesses the Christ

It is not a mere incidental note that Jesus is here described as praying. He prayed before ever he chose his apostles. He prays now before he reveals the, to them, inscrutable and repugnant doctrine of His Cross.

The apostles' belief in the Messiah ship of Jesus had been a natural growth. They may haveseeninHimat first the son of Joseph only—the one divinely endowed, a prophet and miraclewoker. Now, though they have never yet expressed it categorically, after eighteen months' intimate companionship with Him, they believe Him the Son of God.

As a background of their own confession. He draws from them the current opinion concerning Himself. It is favorable, high, and kind; but crude, confused, erroneous. Upon this murky base Peter's immortal credo stands forth like a clear-cut medallion "Thou are the Christ of God!" That confession is epochal in the history of thecollege of apostles. It is its advancement to higher grade.

Now Jesus sets before these sacred undergraduates the most difficult lesson of the whole curriculum—one calculated to dish their enthusiasm, and shock and dumfound them. Previous intimations seem to have made at best but superficial and passing impressions. Only the regal portraitures of the Messiah, found in the psalter and prophets, had caught their ambitious eyes. They were thoroughly inoculatd with the current Hebrew passion for a Messiah who should be a temporal deliverer and a restorer of Solomonic splendors.

Now the Master reveals to them a Messiah without form and comeliness; a beautiless root out of dry ground, undesirable; a Shiloh on his way, not to a coronation, but to a cross—one who should wear a crown indeed, but one of thorns; an anointed one on his way to the capital, but only there to be rejected and to suffer.

Do you wonder heart and flesh failed these novices at such a revelation? They strongly needed the Savior's prayers just offered in their behalf. Faint idea had they of a victory that could come through love and suffering, sacrifice and death. It was incomprehensible to them. Peter only voiced the doubt of all now, as a moment before he had voiced their faith. The Messiah's death meant irretrevaberuin to them. The Wonderworker who had given life to others could certainly put such an ignominious fate far from him if he would but use his power.

It is an evidence of our Lord's true humanity that Peter's emphatic protest was real temptation to him. Jesus' flesh revolted at such a fate as strongly as Peter's flesh did. The flesh of both could only be offset by a zeal of the spirit.

What Jesus wanted at this crucial moment was disciples who should not be ashamed of this new conception of the Messiahship; disciples willing to forego their wildest dreams of political independence and power; willing to let their cherished hopes of a worldly monarchy die; willing to take the Via Dolorosa instead of the regal highway. This, too, not to be an occasional affair, but their very life. To carry the cross always; to die daily an hourly self-effacement,—this was the essential of the kingdom of Jesus.

See the Master's sweet patience with His dazed pupils. He knew that flesh and blood can not attain such an altitude at a single bound. He spends the next eighteen months in training the twelve to the unworldly idea of His kindom; inuring them to the sight of Him formal rejection by the highest court of the nation, and the "many things" He must needs suffer, even His bloody agony and death.

One blessed word of comfort He gives them straightway. The kinghom of of a truth is very unlike what they had expectee; but some of them present shall not taste death before they see it. And they shall be satisfied.

The Teacher's Lantern

In his last year, Jesus turned from the multitude and concentrated His energies upon His disciples. His ministry to the throng had proved a failure. His pearls of word and deed hadfallen beforea brutish people. To perpetuate His Church after His departure, He turns to trim and square and polish His apostles—as the foundation-stone that are to bear aloft the superstructure. With this in view, He led them to Decapolis and Tyre and Sidon and Caesarea-Philippi, localities where He was comparatively unknown. In such places His courses of private instruction would be least interrupted by public demands.

* * * * *

Philip's Caesarea was in what has aptly been called "the Switzerland of Palestine." There was the ever-startling contrast between Arctic white and tropic emerald. As they walked amid tbe oleanders and beside the gushing fountain, source of the Jordan, they could lift their eyes to snowclad Hermon and Lebanon. It was a schoolroom worthy at once of teacher and taught.

It was this glorious sanctuary of nature which first rang with the simplest, sublimest credo of all the ages, as the "mouth of the apostles" cried, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." In that word, Peter burst the shell of an hereditary and universal misconception of the nature of the Messiah. He first spread the wings of a true Messianic faith, and soared above the temporal ideas of throne, army, and conquest.

* * * * *

At the sound of this confession, Jesus was in a transport of joy. It repaid Him for all the toil, humiliation, and sacrifice of His ministry. But while joyously setting the seal of approval on Peter's creed. He also vows its supernatural source. It came not from flesh and blood. It originated not in Himself, nor in some human teacher. It was a revelation of the Father in heaven.

* * * * *

But what is the meaning of this crucial affirmation? We can not join with those who say that Jesus addressed Peter only as the spokesman of the apostles, and that what He said to Peter applied equally to all; nor with those who say that Peter's confession, not Peter's self, was the rock on which Jesus built His Church. These are current interpretations it is true.

* * * * *

But would it not be better just to take the language as it stands, and admit that Jesus built His Church upon the man Peter? But he is such a man as Jesus describes,—a man with a revelation; a revelation that did not originate in himself or in a fellow, but one that came from God; a revelation received with faith and acknowledged with joy. It is the man as a confessor that forms the basis of the Church. The confession apart, be it never so orthodox, is a dead thing; but the confession on the lips and in the character is the livest thing in the world.

Well says the apostle, "No man can say that Jesus is the Christ except God be with him." Of course, any one could say the words by rote and parrot-like; but no one can say them as they should be said, in a manner pleasing to God, with right emotions, with faith and love and loyalty, until he has become a new creature. In point of time, Peter was the first to make confession in this manner. He was laid, therefore, to use an oft-repeated figure of the New Testament, as the first living stone upon the chief corner-stone. So every one who says that Jesus is the Christ—not by revelation of flesh and blood, but of the Spirit which has made Him a new creature—becomes at once a living stone in that spiritual temple whose walls are salvation and whose gates are praise.

The gates of Hades, the insatiable jaws, soon or late, close upon all this world contains. The powerful, the beautiful, the wise, all alike, sink down in death. Institutions, arts, sciences literatures, governments, the remorseless doors of oblivion close upon them. But one thing survives the universal wreck. Jesus says: "My Church . . . the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." One thing, and that the best the earth contains, escapes the gaping mouth of death.

* * * * *

The positive enactments (whatsoever thou shalt bind), the abrogations (whatsoever thou shalt loose), the legislation incidental to the growth of the Church, shall be approved and confirmed in heaven.

Scarcely had Peter's superbconfession fallen from his lips before there came the injunction against blazing it abroad. Why would Jesus have his disciples taciturn and mute concerning a doctrine so transcendently important? It was evidently a matter of discretion. The apostles were not sufficiently schooled to preach it as yet; nor the people to receive it.

* * * * *

The key to that subtle profit-and-loss text that fell from Jesus' lips on this occasion is the double sense in which the term "life" is used. Whoever makes it his supreme concern to conserve the profits of the natural life shall be bankrupt spiritually; but whose discounts the bodily life for the soul shall enrich his immortal life. And in the last analysis, the soul is everything. Who can name its purchase price?

SEWERAGE FRANCHISE EXTENDED TO MAY 15

By the Town Council in Special Session Last Thursday Evening.

MR. F. T. MARTIN RETAINS RIGHT

To Install the System in Oakland, Work to Begin Under the Agreement Not Later than the Date Specified.

The special meeting of the Town Council which was called for last Thursday night to consider the granting of additional time to Mr. Fred. T. Martin to begin operations in installing a sewerage system, a franchise for which was granted him but which expired on the 1st inst., and also to consider a franchise for the same purpose asked by some local people, was held with all the members of the Council present and a number of interested spectators, besides Mr. Martin and those representing the local company.

In explaining his position in regard to the matter Mr. Martin stated that under the provisions of the franchise granted him he had contracted with a firm to furnish the material for the work, which material was being made up and would be shipped shortly. Weather conditions have been unfavorable to the work also, Mr. Martin explained, but if Council would grant an extension of time until May 15th, he would guarantee that work would be commenced and pushed rapidly to completion.

The local company, who was represented by Mr. E. H. Sincell, presented its franchise, which, in effect, provides for the same service prescribed by that of Mr. Martin. In considering the matter a majority of the Council was of the opinion that should Mr. Martin's franchise not be extended it would probably interfere with the water works project, and upon a vote being taken Messrs. Ross, Harned, Bolden and Helbig favored the extension of time, while Messrs. Dixon and Lawton opposed it.

Mr. Martin stated after the matter had been passed upon by the Council that work on both the sewerage and water works systems would be commenced as soon as weather conditions permit.

Rev. Thomas S. Long. Recently Elected Manager of Mountain Lake

TAKES MR. RUDISILL'S PLACE.

Who Resigned Early in the Winter at a Meeting of the Board of Directors. Rev. Long Is An Energetic Business Man.

Rev. Thomas S. Long, recently of Savage, Baltimore county, where he was the minister in charge of the M. E. church and a member of the Baltimore Conference, who was elected last January as Superintendent of the Mountain Lake Park Association, entered upon the active discharge of his duties as superintendent last Friday, upon which day he arrived at the Park, relieving Mr. L. A. Rudisill, who filled the position acceptably for thirteen years or more and who tendered his resignation prior to the election of Mr. Long.

Mr. Long comes to Garrett county with endorsements from many of the leading ministers and business men of his Conference and with a well-earned reputation as an energetic, painstaking and liberal mined business man. He will take up the work left off by his predecessor in office and continue along the lines so ably laid out by him for the future welfare and upbuilding of the Park as a Christian and healthful summer resort.

Mr. Long and his family have moved into the Rev. J. H. Enlow cottage, on F street, opposite the Hocking store building, where he will be found at at all times, when not in his office, for the transaction of business connected with the affairs of the Park.

Mr. Rudisill will continue to reside at the Park where he is making a success of the real estate, fire and life insurance business.

GRANTSVILLE.

This town not being reported or heard from for some time, and as spring has made its appearance, we think it time for letting others know that we are still living.

The sugar season is almost at an end it seems. Quite a lot of the sweet stuff was made in this part of the county this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Miller were very much surprised the day before Easter by the marriage of their daughter Nancy to Mr. Nathan Fike, of Eglon, W. Va. We certainly congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Miller and extend our best wishes to the young couple. May they have a long and happy life.

Rev. B. F. Hilbish of the M. E. church, is conducting a series of protracted meetings at this writing. The meetings are fairly well attended, and we hope will end with good results.

Mr. J. O. Getty, cashier of the First National Bank, has purchased a fine and desirable house and lot of Joel H. Miller of this town. Mr. Getty expects to occupy the new location as soon as vacated by Mr. Miller.

Mr. U. M. Stanton, one of our hustlers, is engaged in lumber business quite extensively, beside many other vocations he is filling.

The firm of J. J. and C. A. Bender has been dissolved, C. A., having sold his interest to C. D. Hershberger. The business hereafter will be conducted by the firm of J. J. Bender & Hershberger.

H. H. Baker was visiting his grand father and uncle Messrs. Henry and Jeremiah Yost, Sunday.

Jonas and Effie, son and daughter of Daniel Baker, have gone to Huntington, Pa. where they are entering as students in Juniata College. We wish them success.

Clarence Foy has purchased a new buggy.

Prof. J. C. Beahm, of Brentsville, Va., will conduct a Normal school here this spring. Prof. Beahm comes here well liked by all of the town, having closed the public school term, making many warm friends. We think any one centemplating going to normal school should stop, think, and consider, and we are sure he will come to Grantsville.

Misses Rebecca and, Nellie Bevans have returned from an extended visit to Frostburg, Lonaconing and other cities.

Miss May Broadwater was seen on our streets last week.

Rev. Bedford, of Sinclair, W. Va., accompanied by his son Joseph, were seen in our town some days ago.

Mr. D. L. Stanton of Davis, W. Va., made a flying trip to this town the last of last week.

Perry Bowser and daughter Anna Bell, were business callers in town Saturday.

Farmers of this vicinity are getting ready to hustle their spring work.

THE FADED TINTYPE.

Beneath the weight of many years his aged back was bent.
But from his gentle big blue eyes there shone a light that lent
A radiance to his old face, and as a seat he took
He glanced about him with a smile—then sought his pocketbook.
And every one who gazed his way
Wished that his carfare they might pay
For that one cheery look.

His clothes, though old and worn, were clean and patched with loving care.
His trembling hands in home-made gloves; the well-combed fringe of hair
Beneath his almost furless cap—all told of some one who Loved this old man as much as when life's partnership was new.
A moment more and he unwound
The string with which his purse was bound
And brought his wealth to view.

A scrap of cloth, a pencil small, a key, and next a dime—
And then he stopped—in happy thoughts he seemed lost for a time;
A faded tintype, that was all—a sweet old woman's face,
And yet he kissed it softly ere he put it back in place,
And then we knew what made his life
So happy—just a faithful wife
Gave his old age its grace.

Miss Tabitha Crane's Valentine

By CAROLINE FRANCES LITTLE

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

MISS TABITHA CRANE'S house stood back from the street, and on each side of the narrow, straight walk were round flowerbeds, surrounded by low borders of box. The beds were covered with snow now, for it was February.

She stood by the window watching a sleigh full of young people, that was just leaving the gate. Her niece, with her fiancee, were of the party, and they were going to Amesbury for an oyster supper.

"Yes, it was 25 years ago," said Miss Tabitha, for she had a way of talking to herself, "a quarter of a century since Dan took me to Amesbury, and then sent me a valentine the next day. I thought he would speak then, but he never did."

Going to an old-fashioned desk, she let down the outside cover and opened a little secret drawer. From it she took out a faded valentine with two flaming hearts on it, pierced through with an arrow. Beneath it were these lines:

"The rose are red,
The violet's blue;
Sugar is sweet,
And so are you."

On the inside, beneath a quaint picture of a pair of lovers, were these words:

"If you love me
As I love you,
No knife can cut
Our love in two."

With a sigh she laid away this relic of her unfinished romance, and turning to the open fire piled on more wood. Her neighbors used air-tight stoves, but she clung to the open fires, such as her mother and grandmother had used before her. Musing before the bright flame, she recalled what she had heard her niece saying recently to her lover:

"No, auntie never had an affair of the heart, so I think considering it she is very indulgent to me."

As lonely Miss Tabitha sat there and watched the burning hickory logs, an idea came to her.

"I suppose," she said, "that Dorothy thinks me an old maid. Well, I suppose I am, but I would like to make them think I have a romance. Yes, I will do it. I'll send myself a valentine, and when she brings up the mail tomorrow she'll think that I have a lover as well as herself."

Here her training asserted itself, and asked, "Would it be strictly truthful?" For there is no more rigorous accuser than the conscience of a New England woman.

"Only this once," she said to her invisible monitor, "I don't like the young folks to look upon me as a well preserved fossil." She hastily put on her beaver coat, and a bonnet much too large for her, which she drew down close over the soft, brown hair, which as yet showed no trace of gray. Dorothy often wished auntie would not wear such old-time garments. Locking the door behind her she went down to the village.

The assortment of valentines was much larger than in the olden days, and she could find none with the rhymes of her carefully preserved treasure; but she chose a very pretty one, and hurried home with it. Old Mrs. Wiggins, who sold the valentine had looked very curiously over her glasses, until Miss Tabitha felt so guilty that she fairly blushed. When once home she hastened to direct it, her hand trembling as she wrote; for her thoughts were back in her younger days when she had supposed her name would be "Mrs. Daniel Upton." She heard a noise and hastily finishing her work, she put away the pen and ink, and started for the post office. She dropped the missive into the letter box and returned home. As soon as she was seated before the fire, the foolishness of the little farce which she had intended to enact before her niece seemed vividly apparent.

"What shall I say if she asks who sent it to me?" she queried, almost in agony. She even thought of going back to the office and asking for it, but what excuse could she make to the postmaster for having directed a letter to herself? There seemed no way out of the dilemma.

Valentine's day passed slowly by. Dorothy brought up the mail during the morning. It consisted of "The Dexeter News Letter" and "The Christian Herald." Miss Tabitha felt uneasy. Where could her letter be? Could the postmaster have seen through her silly ruse, and refused to deliver it? The more she thought of it the more worried she became.

* * * * * * *

Daniel Upton, or the squire, as he was called, sat before his cozy Franklin stove in the library. He was a comfortable old bachelor of 50 years or more. He wore a flowered dressing-gown, and as he read his paper, he warmed his slippered feet on the fender. "The Boston Journal" had some verses on St. Valentine's day, and as they caught his eye his mind reverted to a period of 25 years ago.

"I wonder why Tabby never answered my proposal?" he thought. "Possibly I ought to have spoken right out, but of course she knew what I meant when I sent that valentine."

A tap at the door roused him from his reverie, and his man John appeared with the mail. There were the usual letters and papers that comprise a lawyer's correspondence, but one envelope caught his eye. Embossed flowers adorned the corners, and on the plain circle left for the address he read:

"Mrs. Daniel Upton."

He knew the writing, for he had transacted business for Miss Tabitha several times after her father's death. He opened it and held in his hand the long delayed answer to his proposal of 25 years ago—a modern valentine!

"It took her all this time to make up her mind," he exclaimed aloud, as he read some lines beginning:

"Oh, come with me and be my love."

He rose and going to the pier glass surveyed himself. His mustache was decidedly gray, and his hair quite so.

"Woman's folly!" he ejaculated. "Why did she need to wait until we were both past middle age before being willing to marry?" It never occurred to this bachelor that he had never given Miss Tabitha the opportunity to accept or refuse him.

He hurried through his routine business for the day, and that afternoon ordered an early tea, for he was determined to go down there at once and settle matters.

THE VERSES CAUGHT HIS EYE.

* * * * * * *

As the evening drew on and the second mail was brought up to Miss Crane's, and yet the missing valentine did not materialize, she began to feel almost reckless.

Dorothy was to have a few friends in that night, and Miss Tabitha said defiantly to herself: "I'll dress to-night to look as young as any of them."

Instead of wearing her hair plainly parted, and done in a hard knob at the back of her head, she brushed her hair up, and made a massive coil on the top, arranging it in front in a graceful pompadour, low on the forehead, as Dorothy wore hers. The improvement was startling even to herself. She put on her one black silk, the waist of which her niece had insisted on remodelling that winter, by adding black velvet and a little white chiffon. Remembering that Dorothy had said that coral was in vogue, she dived into the depths of a cedar-wood chest, and brought out an exquisite pin and bracelet. She then went down to the living room, and going to her table of plants, cut off some scarlet geraniums and fastened them in her hair and belt.

Half an hour before the guests were expected there was a knock at the door and Miss Tabitha opened it herself. There stood Squire Upton in a long, heavy ulster, his throat being well wrapped up in a silk muffler, for he had arrived at an age when twinges of rheumatism warned him to be careful of the night air.

"Tabby," he said tremulously, as he looked at her with admiration, "you knew that I'd come at once, after waiting 25 years for an answer to my valentine."

"I'm very glad to see you, Dan," she said, wonderingly, as it dawned upon her that she must have directed the tender missive to him instead of herself.

The two faithful lovers seated themselves on the haircloth sofa in the parlor, and seemed to lose sight of the quarter of a century which had elapsed since that period when they had popped corn, roasted chestnuts and gone to the singing school together.

Paying the Fiddler.

A prominent Frenchman who, according to the New York Tribune, has given much study to the subject says that were his country to be drawn into a great war in present conditions it must be prepared to meet an expenditure of 30,000,000 francs a day. So stupendous is the absolutely unavoidable outlay when a mighty nation in these days becomes involved in a conflict of the largest proportions that taxpayers are affrighted and appalled at the mere thought of the thunder of the guns.

A SONG OF SATURDAYS.

Sing a song of Saturdays,
Band of fifty-two,
Joining hands about the year,
What a merry crew!
How they make the hours dance!
How they shout with glee!
Yes, the happy Saturday
Is the day for me.

Sing a song of Saturdays,
Pearls upon a chain,
Hung about the New Year's neck
When she comes again.
All among the other beads,
Pink or blue or gray,
How you love the shining gleam
Of a Saturday!

Sing a song of Saturdays,
Roses in a wreath;
Fifty-two so big and bright—
Who would look beneath?
Other days may be as green,
Others bloom as fair,
Yet a single Saturday
We could never spare.

Sing a song of Saturdays,
Rests along the road;
Here we halt to take a breath,
Ease the weary load.
Ho! Another mile-stone passed
Toward the goal we seek.
Then, refreshed, we travel on
For another week.

NIGHT WITH HUNGRY LION.

Well-Known Traveler Tells of Thrilling Adventure He Once Had in Central Africa.

Lions, it seems, take to man-eating only as a means of self-defense, or when they become too old to be a match for the wild prey, the flavor of which they so much prefer. Old hunters declare that they never knew a lion really to "stalk" a man; that, as a rule, they rather "turn up their noses" at civilized flesh, and are more or less easily diverted from the scent. In "Days and Nights by the Desert" Parker Gilmore tells of a trick he once played on one of these animals.

"I was hunting ostriches," he says. "At a bend in the ravine the bird disappeared, and I was about to follow it, when, by the merest chance, I looked behind me, and to my surprise and horror saw that a largelion was not over 70 yards behind me, and evidently stalking me as carefully as I had been stalking the bird.

"If I could have gained a tree I should certainly have climbed it in a hurry; but no tree was near. To make a run for it would have brought the lion upon me at once. I kept steadily along the edge of the ravine till I came to a place that promised shelter; it was a drop of four feet to a ledge about 30 inches wide, and afterward a perpendicular descent of 50 or 60 feet, terminating in a quantity of broken bowlders and jagged stones.

"With as little appearance of alarm as I could assume, I sat down on the edge of the precipice, ever and anon taking a careful glance behind to see where my foe was. About 20 rods behind me were a few ragged bushes. Behind these the lion had taken shelter, and was keeping a careful survey upon my every movement. Darkness was rapidly coming on, when I slipped from my seat and dropped down to the ledge. Instantly I slipped off my coat and hung it on the muzzle of my musket, and shoved it up over the upper ledge where I had so lately been sitting.

"Scarcely was this done when my coat was torn away and my gun hurled to the bottom of the gully. But they did not go alone. No; my assailant was with them, and there he remained all night, grumbling over his disappointment at not having me for supper.

"A colder night I never passed, but I had to make the best of it. In the morning I found my assailant had smashed his fore leg in his fall. The musket was not much injured, and I soon ended his suffering."

AN ALBATROSS CAKE WALK

Aquatic Birds Perform Curious Antics on the Sandy Beach of a Pacific Ocean Island.

Sailors visiting the island of Laysan, in the Hawaiian group, are greatly amused by the curious antics of the Laysan albatross, or gony. These birds sometimes perform, in pairs, a kind of dance, or, as the sailors call it, "cake-walk." Two albatrosses approach one another, nodding and making profound bows, cross their bills, produce snapping and groaning sounds, rise on their toes, puff out their breasts, and finally part with more nodding and bowing, only to come together again and repeat the performance. Occasionally three engage at once in this singular amusement. The spectators are always impressed with the extreme "politeness" of the birds.—Youth's Companion.

FUN FOR THE YOUNGSTERS

How They Can Make a Kaleidoscope Which Produces Really Beautiful Results.

Leave two small strips of looking glass with their long sides against one another at an angle of 60 degrees, and join them with the help of a small piece of linen and glue. The third side of the triangle is formed by a strip of black cardboard of the same length and width as the pieces of looking glass. When these three pieces are glued together (see Fig. 1) a paper tube a trifle longer than the strips of looking glass has to be made, wide enough to admit the triangle of looking glass. Close one end of the tube with paper and make an opening in the center to look through; while on the other end of the tube you insert a round piece of common window glass and fasten it. Strew all sorts of small objects, such as fine gravel, pieces of colored glass, etc., on this round piece of glass and place a second round piece of glass over it in such a way that the small bodies have sufficient space to move freely. After everything is in order and well dried look through the opening on the other end of the tube and you will see the beautiful patterns. Every time the kaleidoscope is turned the figures vary in form and the results are beautiful.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

LOADS OF MIDWINTER FUN.

Buffalo Boys Have Invented a "Jumping Jack" That Catches Fish While They Skate.

The problem of how to keep warm and enjoy yourself while engaged in the ancient pastime of fishing through a hole in the ice has been solved in a very ingenious manner, as the accompanying sketch indicates. Several bright American boys skating on the lake at Buffalo are believed to have originated the idea of the "jumping-jack" fisherman, as it is called.

The northern boy used to sit over a hole in the ice and wait for the fish to bite, but that became too slow and, besides, it detracted from his pleasure at skating. So his inventive genius set itself to work, and the "jumping-jack" was the result. The string which has to be pulled to make the "jumping-jack's" joints move is tied securely to the fishing line. The hook is baited and lowered into the water through a hole in the ice. The "jumping-jack" is fastened to a small stand placed at the edge of the hole and then the boy goes skating, occasionally casting a glance at his "jumping-jack."

When the hungry and unsuspicious fish comes along and swallows the bait the "jumping-jack" waves his arms and legs frantically, and also a small flag fastened to one arm. Then the youngster stops skating long enough to pull in the fish and bait the hook for another catch.

A simpler signal is called the "tie-up" pole. This is made with two short, light sticks tied together at right angles in the way shown in the sketch. To one of the poles a flag is fastened. When the fish is not biting the flag lies flat on the ice, but as soon as a fish has gulped down the hook or even taken a nibble at the bait, that fact is signaled by the flag. As soon as the flagpole stands upright wafting its bright-colored flag to the breezes it is time for the fisherman to haul in his line.—N. Y. Journal.

This Dog Died of Grief.

A bulldog owned by Edgar Cave, Liberty, Mo., a deputy sheriff who is in Kansas as a witness in the Dewey murder case, died of grief. Whenever Cave had heretofore been absent more than a day the dog plainly showed his uneasiness. His master's absence this time was too long for him, however.

Disappointed Young Miss.

A small miss who had but recently mastered her catechism confessed her disappointment with it thus: "Now, I obey the fifth commandment and honor my papa and mamma, yet my days are not a bit longer in the land, for I'm put to bed every night at seven o'clock just the same."

Might Have Been Worse.

"John!" whispered Mrs. Swackhammer, hoarsely. "John, wake up! In the basement—hear them—they're—they're working in the basement——"

"Wh-wh-wat!" gasped Swack. He dived under the pillow and clutched his pocketbook. "What is it?"

"B-b-burglars!" chattered poor Mrs. Swackhammer. "Don't you hear them ——"

"Aw, rats!" said Swack as he lay down and prepared for sleep again. "You scared me nearly to death. I thought it was plumbers."—San Francisco Bulletin.

A Wonderful Discovery.

Broadland, S. Dak., March 28.—Quite a sensation has been created here by the publication of the story of G. W. Gray, who after a special treatment for three months was prostrate and helpless and given up to die with Bright's Disease. Bright's Disease has always been considered incurable, but evidently from the story told by Mr. Gray, there is a remedy which will cure it, even in the most advanced stages. This is what he says:

"I was helpless as a little babe. My wife and I searched everything and read everything we could find about Bright's Disease, hoping that I would be able to find a remedy. After many failures my wife insisted that I should try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I praise God for the day when I decided to do so, for this remedy met every phase of my case and in a short time I was able to get out of bed, and after a few weeks' treatment I was a strong, well man. Dodd's Kidney Pills saved my life."

A remedy that will cure Bright's Disease will cure any lesser Kidney Disease. Dodd's Kidney Pills are certainly the most wonderful discovery which modern medical research has given to the world.

A prominent Southern lady, Mrs. Blanchard, of Nashville, Tenn., tells how she was cured of backache, dizziness, painful and irregular periods by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—Gratitude compels me to acknowledge the great merit of your Vegetable Compound. I have suffered for four years with irregular and painful menstruation, also dizziness, pains in the back and lower limbs, and fitful sleep. I dreaded the time to come which would only mean suffering to me.

"Better health is all I wanted, and cure if possible. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me health and happiness in a few short months. I feel like another person now. My aches and pains have left me. Life seems new and sweet to me, and everything seems pleasant and easy.

"Six bottles brought me health, and was worth more than months under the doctor's care, which really did not benefit me at all. I am satisfied there is no medicine so good for sick women as your Vegetable Compound, and I advocate it to my lady friends in need of medical help."—MRS. B. A. The Demagogue a Menace to Labor

By HON. GEORGE B. CORTELYOU,
Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor.

The whole discussion of the industrial interests of the country must be raised to a higher plane. In the language of one of the greatest Americans, whose public services and spotless life we revere: "We know no class distinctions in this fair land of ours."

The time has come when any man who gives expression, either on the public platform or in the public press, to views that encourage this false, un-American doctrine should be branded as a demagogue and visited with the just condemnation of our citizens.

We must take this issue of industrial interests out of the domain of politics and out of the domain of class bitterness and rancor, and approach it in a spirit of open mindedness, recognizing the rights of our citizens under the law, whether they toil with the hand or with the brain. In a word, what we need to-day, gentlemen, in our discussion of labor and capital is less twaddle and more truth.

The term "labor," is in a sense a misnomer, for we are all laborers if we are what the president calls "worth our salt." When we set up two hostile camps and call one capital and the other labor we are false to all our traditions and have ignored the principles on which the republic was founded.

To go a step further, this is not a question where the right is all on one side. The man who would have you believe so either deceives himself or would deceive you. Nor is there a marked preponderance of right on the one side or the other, but there is a vast deal of misconception on both sides.

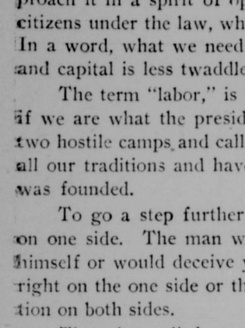
There is too little community of interest, too little by way of conciliation, a too intolerant spirit as between employer and employe. I believe in organized capital as I believe in organized labor, for, granting the right of one, you must grant the right of the other.

There has been a steady improvement in many aspects of this question. Noble agencies are at work to bring about better feeling. The National Civic federation has done much along these lines, and that he contributed in no small degree to the work of that body will, in the coming years, be told to the glory and honor of the great senator whose passing away we have recently been called upon to mourn.

The new department of commerce and labor is empowered to acquire and diffuse among the people useful information on subjects connected with labor, in the most general and comprehensive sense of the word, especially regarding its relation to capital, such as the hours of labor and the earnings of laboring men and women; the means in general of promoting their material, social, intellectual, and moral condition; the comparative cost of living, and the causes of and facts relating to all controversies and disputes between employers and employes.

Being a Good Sister

By DR. FRANK W. GUNSAULUS,
President of Armour Institute of Technology, Chicago.



It is not only a lack of moral power and nobility of nature; it is sheer poverty of intelligence and brainless misunderstanding of what is great in life when a girl, consciously or unconsciously, is untrue to the heart and hope of her mother. No political machinery, no invention of social reform, has ever been able to extract an atom of gold from the leaden heart and earthy brain of a daughter who has failed in the duties and delights of genuine friendship with her mother's life.

It takes brains, heart, conscience, womanhood, to be a good sister. Some other girl's brother, with nothing to commend him, perhaps, but a huge stick of wood which he is barely able to carry up and down the street, or a highly colored pair of gloves which he has scarcely brains enough to pull on, is likely to be of vastly more interest to you than the boy in your own home, who has shared with you your mother's prayers and your father's care, the blood and traditions and hope of your family.

There is no nobler missionary work on this planet than to give him at least a good sister. You can make no grander contribution to the world's treasure. Heart is the contribution most needed by our civilization to-day. If your brother has no more brains than to compare you, whom he sees in common duties, and associated with the drudgery of daily life, with another girl, whom he has never seen except at her best and on dress parade, that is not your fault. Be sure you give him a sublime idea of what a woman can be and ought to be in the midst of the commonplace. Every time you add to you worthiness or independence, you add to the capital of the race and the quality of your future.

Influence of the Mother

By PROF. LUTHER HALSEY GULICK, of the New York City Schools.

A METAPHYSICAL truth or falsity of a belief or practice is not a primary factor in its propagation. It is, of course, important in the present day that the belief shall be able to stand the test of reason when applied to the adult. My point is that it is not its reasonableness that secures its adoption by the child; hence the appeal to reason as a chief factor in religious instruction is a mistake. The religious and moral attitude is one that is usually established long before the reasoning faculties acquire the independent power needed for the examination of such complex subjects as either religion or morals. Belief is something that is underneath reason, which in many persons cannot either be established or removed by reason.

The foundation of religion, then, appears to be some other thing than intellectual appreciation of truth. This is fortunate, for otherwise a permanent basis for religious life is unattainable, and each successive generation must with pain and anguish tear down a part of the intellectual basis of what they thought was religion itself.

If, then, religion is not to be propagated by means that are chiefly intellectual in their nature, we need to examine the emotional basis. We find that religious people are reverent; that in the main there have been established in their early lives certain emotional reactions and associations. It is my present conviction that the sympathetic system is so influenced by the unconscious example of the mother as to tend to react thereafter to certain religious and moral stimuli in a definite way, and that this accounts for the return to the religious life of so many who have had Christian mothers and of so few who have not.

INSECTS IN SEVERE COLD.

The Lowest of Low Temperatures Does Not Kill Nor Even Injure Them in the Least.

The severest cold has no terrors for insect life. It has been shown by experiments that insects may be artificially or naturally frozen, subjected, indeed, to very low temperatures, without killing or even injuring them. Eggs, larvae and pupae, the stages in which most insects pass the winter, are perfectly immune to cold.

It is a common idea that cocoons of insects serve as a protection against cold, but this is entirely erroneous. They, like the summer webs of web worms, are a protection against birds and insect parasites, but not against cold. The cocoons of summer broods are as stout and thick as those of the generations that pass the winter. Moths, butterflies and other insects build stouter and more compact cocoons in tropical and torrid countries than they do in those climates where they are besieged by winter. There are many insects, allied to the builders of cocoons that make no such covering, the pupa or the chrysalis being left entirely exposed. And so little heat is maintained by the pupae of insects that no matter how thick the cocoons, they are always too slight to repel freezing cold.

Certain degrees of frigidity seem to have vastly different effects on different species of insects. Gnats and midges dance in the winter sunshine; butterflies, Vanessa, Grapta, and sometimes Colias, skim over the snow; wasps and bees wind their way through the leafless woods; ground beetles run quickly over the cold earth; crickets peep from beneath stones and rotting logs; while other species, the vast majority, in fact, are locked in the lethargy of hibernation. One of the commonest evidences of this hibernation is to be seen when firewood is carried into the house and placed near the warm stove. It takes only a short time to bring out a swarm of ants that were sleeping in beetle borings, their common retreat.—St. Nicholas.

New Motor Is Powerful.

The new motor of Peter Thornley, a Manchester engineer, is expected to revolutionize the use of steam. In existing engines steam is not admitted until the piston has moved some distance, but the new arrangement supplies steam at the very start, and in quantity just sufficient to finish the stroke, thus avoiding waste. The purpose is accomplished by a new rotary valve fitted to the top of twin cylinders. Two slotted discs, revolving in opposite directions permit the steam to enter the cylinder as the slots pass, and a third disc serves as cut-off for regulating speed or reversing. A model about the size of a typewriter gives 1,500 revolutions per minute, developing about 15 horse power, under a boiler presure of 200 pounds. The saving is estimated at 25 to several hundred per cent.

LOVE ON WHEELS.

BY JOHN WICKLIFFE GRAY.

Would she come to-day?

John Haworth leaned back in his invalid's chair and scanned every vehicle that appeared from the uptown horizon. He was seated in the big bay window that looked out over the trees and meadows and winding roads and paths of the park. Now and then the light June breeze wafted across the street the prattle of half a dozen children at play on the greensward nearest where the invalid sat. To the philosophic and the speculative, it was an ideal spot to study human nature as we find it on the sidewalk—the lights and shadows of the past shining dimly through the features of those who hurry by.

But the speculation of John Haworth ran in another direction. And every morning for two weeks it had been the same. Before that time he had helped to pass the tedious hours by watching the faces just below him on the street from the time they came into good view four doors north or south until they were gone, to give place to others.

There was a look of eagerness on the invalid's face as he glanced at his watch for the fifth time within the half hour. It lacked but five minutes now of the time when the Bicycle Girl, as he chose to call her, would pass through the entrance of the park almost opposite.

"I think he might take a bit more exercise, walking in the park, for instance, in the next day or so." John turned to see his mother and Dr. McRae, the family physician, enter the room. "There will be no further necessity for my services, I think. How does that sound, John?" he added, cheerily.

"Almost as good as the sight of home after two years in the Philippines, Doc. I think—" he broke off suddenly and turned his eyes to the street.

Yes, there she was. The same natty, tailor-made riding skirt and jacket; the same fluffy, dark hair that refused to be kept under the jauntiest of little caps.

The girl glanced up and—was it a bow? Or had she merely turned her head to guide her wheel into the park driveway. Who was she? he wondered, as he had scores of times before in those two weeks he had been sitting by the window slowly regaining the health that a long fever had stolen.

"I think I'll get out my bicycle in a day or so," he continued, afer the interruption.

"A good idea, but, mind you, not too much at first. Take it easy, and the exercise will be of as much benefit as double the amount of indoor labor with dumb bells," answered the doctor.

"A case of pleasure and medicine, eh, Doc?" said the invalid, with a smile.

"Yes, pleasure is half the cure, with exercise or medicine," he answered.

It was three days later that John's bicycle, the trusted servant of other days, was brought forth from the attic and, with the help of the porter, put in condition.

Ah, but it was glorious to have even a little strength to pedal, thought John, as he took his first ride through the park. He was on the bicycle path that ran down among the alders, where it wound in and out like a snake, crossed a little bridge and then wormed its way around the hill. It needed only a companion to make the day and his enjoyment perfect. And naturally he reverted to the Bicycle Girl who crossed into the park every morning.

He had not seen her since that day when Dr. McRae was in the room, and now, three days after, in desperation and growing fear that he would not see her again, he had come out alone.

Suddenly, out of a by-path, the girl of his thoughts darted. There was a simultaneous twist of front wheels away from each other to avoid a collision. In a moment they were contemplating each other, with a foot of each on the ground and their handle bars touching.

There was a simultaneous laugh.

"Pardon me," he said, removing his cap.

"There's nothing to pardon," she said, smilingly, as both wheels were righted. John knew instinctively that she would smile like that.

"I see I have bent several spokes," said Joan. "I suppose I might as well straighten them now," he added.

John took out his kit, only to find his wrench missing.

"May I borrow your wrench?" he asked.

"Certainly, Mr. Haworth," she answered.

"You know my name?" he exclaimed, delighted as well as surprised at the turn of affairs.

"Yes, I was at college with your sister. And I want to thank you for a beautiful silk shawl you sent me, though we have never met. I am Josephine Randall." A scarcely perceptible color mounted to her cheek as she extended her hand. John remembered, now, the shawl he had placed in the homeward-bound box of curios for his sister's chum, Miss Randall, who was frequently mentioned in the letters he had received on the other side of the world.

"Both myself and the shawl are honored," he exclaimed, with warmth.

"We would have met before perhaps, had your sister been at home," Miss Randall went on.

"Now that we have met, may not we finish the ride together?" he asked, wistfully.

And thereaftre the invalid soldier pined no more for a companion awheel. Two bicycles instead of one crossed the street to the park every morning.

HAPPY WOMEN.

Days of misery, nights of unrest,

She finds relief and cure?
No reasonwhy any reader

Should suffer in the face of evidence like this:

Mrs. Almira A. Jackson, of East Front St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "For twenty years I never knew what it was to have good health. Every physician consulted said I had liver trouble but their medicines did me no good. Just before I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was almost paralyzed. I could hardly stand on my feet because of the numbness and lack of circulation. Had a knife been thrust into my kidneys the pain could not have been more intense. My sleep was disturbed by visions of distorted figures. The kidney secretions were annoyingly irregular and I was tortured with thirst and always bloated. I used seven boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. The bloating subsided until I weighed one hundred pounds less, could sleep like a child and was relieved of the pain and the irregularity of the kidney action. My circulation is good and I feel better in every way."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Jackson will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

THE Morgantown Post published at Morgantown, West Va., of which Mr. George C. Sturgiss is owner and over which Mr. A. G. Sturgiss, of Oakland, exercises a surpervising eye since his location in the above town for the winter months, issued on last Friday a morning edition which will be continued hereafter, thus replacing the afternoon edition of the same paper. The columns teem with interesting news and from appearances the paper has a paying advertising patronage.

THE Morgantown New Dominion, W. Va., has installed a Linotype machine and enlarged from a nine column four-page paper to a seven-column eight-page publication. Other improvements are also noticed which make it one of the leading weeklies of that section. May it continue to prosper.

THE State tax rate for the next fiscal year will be 22½ cents and for 1906 23¾ cents as against 17 cents at the present time. The increase was made necessary by large appropriations for public schools and other purpose than usual. While the increased school appropriation cannot be adversely criticised, but is rather to be commended, liberality in some other directions was almost prodigal. It is to be remarked, too that some other means of raising money, for the purposes to which appropiations were made, than by saddling property with an increase of more that 30 per cent, in the direct tax, might have been devised. The State of Pennsylvania, which maintains a liberal sshool systam, has no direct tax at all and a few years ago the promise was held out that Maryland would soon be in the same condition. Instead, now comes a heavy increase in direct taxation upon the farms, the homes, the personal effects of the people. Democratic partisan government is not an unmixed blessing under any circumstances, but when it has to be paid for in this fashion by property owners it becomes doubly unsatisfactory.

DELIRIUM RIDING DEMOCRACY.

John Henry Keen's Scathing Arrainment of Machine Made Politicians.

John Henry Keene in writing to the Baltimore News, says: "Apparently, Democracy has reached its zenith. Henceforth it must yield to the impulsion of the resistless force of outraged public sentement.

"Unless its Annapolis record be amended swiftly, it requires no acumen to foresee Maryland summarily wheeled into the local and State columns of the Republican partv.

"Democracy's misgovernment has been carried to a point such as seems hardly compatible with the existence of a great State, administered upon a commercial basis.

"Except machine-made politicians (livied with jaundice and bursting with dropsy), able organizers and astute politicians see that triumphant Democracy is already almost taken in traps of its own setting.

"To paint in its true colors Annapolis Democracy, one ought to have the pen of Procopius. It is a hotbed of intrigue—not the intrigue of an age of semi-barbarians.

"Hideous delitium, with whip, spur and penknife, is riding Maryland Democracy for a fall, and when it falls, it falls like Lucifer, never to rise again.

"Look where you will into the Annapolis record—and made by a two-third majority—there you see the trail and zigzag movement of monster serpents, lowering their crest and hiding their sinuous folds under sinister enactments."

MARYLAND STATUTE UPHELD.

Which Provides that Persons Removing to State Must Register Their Intention of Becoming Citizens.

The Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision Monday in the case of William H. Pope against John M. C. Williams and John W. Harper, of the Board of Registry of Bethesda district, Montgomery county, sustaining the validity of the act of the Maryland Legislature making it necessary for a person going into the State with the intention of residing there to register with the clerk of the Circuit Court of the county in which he intends to take up residence and thereby indicate his intention to become a citizen a year before registering.

The case was brought to the Supreme Court on a writ of error from the Maryland Court of Appeals for a review of the judgment of that Court affirming that of the Circuit Court of Montgomery county, which had affirmed the proceedings of the Board of Registry of District No. 7, which had refused to register Pope as a legal voter on the ground of non compliance with the Maryland law making it necessary for him to register.

The act of the Maryland Legislature which the Supreme court has sustained became a statute March 29, 1902, almost three months before Pope on June 7, 1902, moved with his family from the city of Washington to Montgomery county, Maryland, and took up his residence at Otterbourne, near Chevy Chase. On September 29, 1903, he applied to be registered as a legal voter in the State, but was refused by the Board of Registry of the election district in which he resided, on the ground that he had not complied with the law requiring him to register with the clerk of the Circuit Court. Pope appeared as his own counsel when the case came up for argument in the Supreme Court, and John P. Poe of Maryland, represented Messrs. Williams and Harper. Mr. Pope admitted that he did not declare his intention of becoming a citizen, but contended that the refusal to register him was a violation of his civic rights and repugnant to the spirit of the Constitution of Maryland.

Justice Peckham, of the Supreme Court, in reading the decision declared that it was not a case of a statute of a State passed after the time when the individual had moved from one State to another. Justice Peckham said that the Maryland statute involved does not violate the Federal right of Mr. Pope. So far as it concerns him, it was one making regulations and imposing conditions for purposes of registration. Whatever other right Mr. Pope may have as a citizen of Maryland by reason of removal there to become a citizen, Justice Peckham declared it is not now in question, and so far as it appeared to the court no other right had been infringed by the statute. It was a simple matter whether the Legislature had the legal right to provide that he should be required to make a declaration of his intentions one year before registering Justice Peckham said the privilege to vote in any State was not given by the Federal Constitution or any of its amendments. It was not a privilege springing from citizenship. It may not be refused on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude, but does not follow from mere citizenship of the United States.

"In other words," explained Justice Peckham, "the privilege to vote in a State is within the jurisdiction of the State itself, to be exercised as the State may direct and upon such terms as it may deem proper, provided no discrimination is made between individuals in violation of the Constitution."

The state might hold that persons of foreign birth might not vote until after they have become naturalized citizens, and, as had been said by Chief Justice Waite, such persons had been allowed to vote in several States upon having declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States. Some States permitted women to vote. Others refused them that privilege. The State, so far as the Constitution was concerned, might provide by its own Constitution and laws that none but native born citizens might vote, as the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon anyone, and the conditions under which that right is to be exercised are matters which the State alone can prescribe.

The Court holds, in the opinion delivered, that the reasons which may have impelled the state Legislature to enact the statute were merely for the Legislature's consideration and did not concern the court.

The Court holds that the right of a State to legislate upon the subject of the elective franchise is unassailable and subject only to the conditions stated.

"Under no conceivable state of facts," said Justice Peckham, "can a State statute in regard to voting be regarded as an infringement or discrimination of the rights of a citizen of the United States removing into the State and excluded by State legislation."

Such questions might arise if the exclusion were founded on the particular State from which a person might come; for instance, excluding a citizen of Georgia, but not excluding one of New York. In such cases it might be argued that under the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution the sitizen of Georgia was under a State statute deprived of equal protection, and Justice Peckham said that other extreme cases might be cited, but they were not involved in the present case.

So far as the Pope case is concerned, the Court holds that it is unable to see that there has been any violation of the Constitution in the provision of the intentions of the persons coming into the State before he can claim the right to be registered as a voter. The statute, so far as it prescribes conditions precedent to the exercise of the elective franchise within the State by persons coming therein to reside, is held by the Supreme Court to be neither an unlawful discrimination aginst anyone in the situation of Mr. Pope nor a denial to him of equal protection of the laws nor repugnat to any of his fundamental and inalienable rights, and therefore the opinion of the Circuit Court of Montgomery county was affirmed.

FISH PROPAGATION IN MARYLAND.

Bill in the United States Senate Interesting to Garrett Countians.

AIMS TO ESTABLISH A HATCHERY

In this County—Has Been Favorably Reported by Committee on Fisheries—Like Bill Already Passed by Lower House.

Senator McComas and Representative Pearre who are always looking out for the interests of their constituents in this section of the District, are gratified with the action of the Committee on Fisheries in the Senate which body on Monday reported favorably upon the bill establishing a fish-culture station in Maryland, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator McComas and in the House by Col. Pearre some months ago. In the Lower House favorable action upon the measure had been taken and in the Senate nothing could be done unti the report of the committee above referred to had been received.

The bill contemplates the establishment of a fish hatchery in this section or Maryland and carries with it an appropriation of $25,000. The report of the committee follows:

"The Committee on Fisheries, to which was referred the bill approriating $25,000, for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in Maryland, including purchase of site, etc., the site to be selected by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, report as follows:

"There are now two stations in Maryland—one at Battery Island and the other at Bryan's Point—each being in charge of a custodian at a salary of $360 per annum. These stations are used principally for the gathering of spawn and, to some extent, for the propagation of shad.

"The station proposed to be established by the bill is for propagating bass, trout and other fish for inland waters, and the adaptability of Maryland waters for the propagatin of fish for inland waters is well known. Numerous demands are constanly being made upon the fish Commission for black bass, trout and other fish for stocking inland waters, and the only stations from which such supply is now obtained are located in Virginia and Tennessee. The Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries strongly recommends the passage of the bill, and his letter, addressed to the chairman of the committee, wherein he favors its passage, is attached to and made a part of this report. Under the provisions of the bill the Commissioner is empowered to select the site.

"The committee recommends that the bill pass."

HOWARD E. HINEBAUGH KILLED.

In a Railroad Accident Near Pittsburg Last Sunday Night.

Howard E. Hinebaugh, aged about thirty years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Hinebaugh, of near Oakland, met with an accident while in the discharge of his duties as a freight brakeman on the Pittsburg Division of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Sunday night, which resulted in his death an hour later.

The accident took place at Elmwood, west of Pittsburg, when the train upon which the unfortunate man was employed, became stalled on a grade and another west-bound freight dashed into it. Hinebaugh was in the caboose of the stalled train and was crushed about the chest.

His remains were brought here Tuesday night by his brother Henry, who went to Pittsburg for the purpose of bringing the body home, and a delegation of the trainmen's organization of which the deceased was a member.

The funeral took place from St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church in Oakland yesterday afternoon, the services being conducted by Rev. E. Manges, the pastor. The interment was made in the Oakland cemetery. The floral tributes were very beautiful, being furnished by the family and by the Brotherhood of Trainmen, members of which acted as pallbearers.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. J. W. Fahey, of Grafton, W. Va., was a caller at this placed last Thursday. He was looking at houses for a friend in New Jersey.

Mr. Milton Echard is putting a porch on the south side of his house, and is also painting the house.

Miss Jennie Murphy, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. P. B. Gough, has gone to Swanton to spend a few weeks. She rented Parkivew cottage for the summer.

Mrs. Wm. Hocking is packing their household goods to ship to Wheeling, where they expect to make their home.

Mr. Jene Cummerford, of Fairmont, W. Va. spent last Friday at this place. The family expect to occupy their cottage early next month.

The family of Manager Long, Thursday last, moved into the Enlow cottage Mr. Long has entered upon the duties of his new work.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson, of Parkersburg, spent Monday at this place hunting a cottage for their summer vacation.

The demand for cottages is very encouraging and indicates a prosperous season.

Mr. Car Frame, of Fairmont, is spending a few days in this vicinity, looking after coal lands.

Mr. Frank Arnold is plastering the new cottage erected last fall by Mr. C. M. Rathbun.

The Allegany House will be in charge of Mrs. Flowers, who so successfully conducted it last summer. The halls and many of the rooms are being papered. The house will be made cheerful, inviting.

Mr. Forward has moved into Hotel Chautauqua and Mr. Rothruck into the house vacated last week by Mr. Callis.

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

According to the prophecies of some of the old sugar makers in this section, the sugar season is over. Some are even so confident of the fact as to have already hauled in and stored their keelers, but as the sap has not yet risen it is possible that some sugar will be made yet, although an average crop has been made up to this time.

Dr. S. D. Stroup, wife and little daughter of Friendsville, have been guests of Mr. Stroup's parents at this place for some days past.

A small force of men have begun work on the Lutheran parsonage. It is hoped the building will be pushed to completion.

Mrs. Simon Brenneman has been spending a few days with her mother, Mrs. Klotz, who has been ailing for some weeks.

Miss Lizzie Welsh returned home last Sunday, after a visit of a few days at the home of Mr. C. E. Ellithorpe.

Mr. Thomas Gilpin was visiting in this section last Sabbath.

Mrs. Mahala Ellithorpe, wife of Merchant C. E. Ellithorpe, has been indisposed for some days.

Mr. Alvin Slabach was calling upon his sister, Mrs. Peter G. Stark, on Sunday.

A gang of foreigners are camping near here, and are employed grading for a proposed extension of the Casselman Valley railroad.

One of the thieves under warrant for arrest has been seen going about armed with a shot gun, apparently in open defiance of the law.

Mr. Lewis Burkey has sold his farm near this place, and will shortly remove to one near Deer Park, recently purchased by him.

MARYLAND LAW IS VERY COSTLY.

Legislature, Just Adjourned, most Extravagant Since the Civil War.

THE EXPENSES REACH $200.000.

Most of the Legislation Was of a Partisan Nature—No Laws of General Importance Enacted.

When midnight arrived Monday night of last week the most extravagant legislature since the civil war adjourned sine die. Its last act was the presentation of costly presents to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate.

Great excitement occurred during the day over the passage of the Haman bill for the leasing of the alleged barren bottoms of the bay for the purpose of oyster cultivation. This bill was bitterly opposed by Representatives of the tidewater counties, and when finally passed it had been amended to exempt most of the counties where oysters grow and its friends say its value as an industrial measure was destroyed.

The session has been chiefly noted for the fact that it will exceed all records for extravagance, the expenses having gone up to $200,000, which is at least $60,000 in excess of all its predecessors.

The Democratic party has been in complete control of both branches of the Assembly, and while it has enacted a considerable amount of legislation promised in its platform, yet the session has not been entirely satisfactory to the state leaders from the fact that a serious difference has arisen between the legislature and Governor Warfield over the question of the regulation of the election franchise.

The most important election bill passed was the constitutional amendment, containing the grandfather clause, and requiring those desiring to vote to give a reasonable explanation to whatever clause of the Constitution the election judges may read to them. This amendment does not meet with the approval of Governor Warfield and Attorney-General W. S. Bryan is fighting it openly. The amendment must be approved by a majority of the voters before it becomes a law, and with the party divided on the question of its desirability, its chances at the polls do not seem bright. It is claimed that the bill places too much arbitrary power in the hands of the election officials.

An election bill designed to do away with the four-judge system and substitute therefor three election judges, was withdrawn after having been introduced, as it was understood that Governor Warfield would not sign it. Another election bill, doing away with the party designation after the names of the candidates in several of the counties in the "Black Belt" and in the mining districts, was passed. These bills have yet to secure the approval of the governor.

Some contention exists about the necessity of the governor's signature to the constitutional amendment. He will not sign it and those who think his signature is not necessary may resort to the courts to compel him to put the amendment before the people. Other important legislation was as follows:

A "Jim Crow" law for passenger trains and steamboats; measures favorable to the Wabash railroad; the repeal of the tax on the income derived from mortgages in Baltimore city and a few of the counties, and legislation growing out of the great fire in Baltimore.

Young Plants

Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.

And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.

Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.

Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow—Scott's Emulsion seems to find it and set the matter right.

FOR SALE

Or for Rent for Summer of 1904

At Deer Park, Maryland, Main Line B. & O. R R., to St. Louis, 2500 Feet Above Tidewater, a Country Place of about 185 Acres.

"GLAMORGAN."

Thoroughly equipped as a farm and bounded by three county roads, insuring convenience and privacy. It is well adapted to public use such as a sanatorium or to private residences, five sites with beautiful views and appurtenant acres, being reached by its three miles of private pleasure drives through the woods.

The dwelling house was built from plans by Hewitt Bros., of Philadelphia. The plumbing is by Ogelsby, of the same city. It has recently been put in complete order and repainted, and is replete with the modern appliances of a gentleman's residence. It is within ten minutes' walk of postoffice and railroad station and within one mile of the Deer Park Hotel. Its general plan is as follows:

Wide porches surround three faces, terminated, on a level, with billiard room.

I. FIRST FLOOR. Parlor, hall with main stair case, library, dining room and lavatory.

II. BACK BUILDING. Stair case to cellar, in which are furnace, gas machine (supplied by outside gasometer), wine closet, pantry (hot and cold water), back stairs to second story back building. Laundry—3 stationary tubs, hot and cold water in each; ironing stove, fire hose on reel and special boiler. Kitchen, with range, sink and all applicances. Back porch, ten feet from which is ice house practically inexhaustible in summer; servants' bath room, etc.

I. SECOND FLOOR. Two communicating chambers, with bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; total, four chambers with three bath rooms.

II. BACK BUILDING, 2nd FLOOR. Four chambers, two closets, bath room with W. C. adjoining.

THIRD FLOOR. Two chambers, two large lofts.

Every room has gas fixture and eight rooms have open fire-places in addition to furnace registers.

The water supply is unexceptionable, its every source being from springs rising within the confines of the place and all having passed analytical examination. Two tanks (each in contact with outside air) having a combined capacity of 14,500 gallons, a wind mill a horse power and an overshot wheel supplying the motor. Three dams (likewise spring water) contribute the ice supply and two of them are stocked with fish. The out buildings are a barn with stalls for six horses and eight carriages, with ample storage for hay, straw and oats and having a coachman's room, a tenant's house of five rooms, a large cow and sheep stable and numerous sheds, etc.

This property is without incumbrance and possession can be given in May, 1904.

OAKLAND NORMAL SCHOOL

WILL OPEN MONDAY, APRIL 18, 1904.

It will be our aim, as heretofore, to make this one of the best, if not the best, school in the county. The Lecture Course which heretofore met with such favor will be continued. The best talent has been secured. This was, as some expressed it, "A new departure," and those who were with us adjudged it the feature of the school.
Board in Oakland is very reasonable. This, with the healthy almosphere and pleasant surroundings, makes it a very desirable place for those who wish to become educated.

Tuition for the Term will be $5 and $6, paid in advance, or other satisfactory arrangements. No deviation.

Every effort will be made to make the school a success. For further information apply to.

Bid of $15,000 for the Property Rejected by Receivers and Sale Withdrawn.

Tuesday morning, upon the order of United States District Judge Morris, of Baltimore, the receivers of the Commonwealth Tanning Company, Messrs. Fred. A. Thayer and Edward H. Sincell, offered the proparty at public auction on the premises at Hatton.

Representatives of the United States Leather Company and Messrs. Swift & Co., Chicago, were upon the ground and bid upon the property. The highest bid offered, $15,000, was considered inadequate for the property, and the receivers withdrew the sale.

The property may be sold at private sale later or may again be advertised and put up at public auction.

Drs. Selby & Bixler are now located in their new offices on the second floor of the First National Bank building where they are prepared to do dental work in all its branches. New furniture of the latest and most approved pattern has been installed in the operating room of their suite.

Mrs. Thornton Sliger, of Piedmont, arrived here Saturday afternoon to visit her son Mr. R. E. Sliger, cashier of the First National Bank. Mrs. Sliger is just recovering from a severe attack of typhoid fever and hopes to recuperate her impaired health by her visit to the mountains.

Among the Friendsville visitors to Oakland this week we noticed Messrs. Wm. H. H. Friend, W. W. Savage, W. W. Frazee and Commissioner Taylor Friend. The latter arrived here Saturday evening in order to be present Monday morning at the convening of the Commissioners' Court.

The mind accepts the natural, not the calendar, division of the year, and lifts itself up to higher and more hopeful achievement with the annual rebirth. That is the reason why business is better now, and things are generally picking up. They are going to continue in the same course. But not wholly, by any means, because it is spring. They gain because the bottom of things has been touched, and the processes of deflation have been completed, and the Cape of Bad Hope rounded. It is clear sailing now!

MEXICAN WAR SURVIVOR DEAD.

George Washington Gould, Veteran of Two Wars, Passed Away.

George Washington Gould, the sole survivor of the Mexican War in this county and also a veteran of the War of 1861, died at the home of John B. Friend, near Beckman, a few days ago, aged about 75 years.

The deceased was at the fall of the City of Mexico when General Scott invested it having participated in the assault upon the fortresses surrounding the city and was one among those who scaled the heights to Chapultepec.

When hostilities broke out in this country he joined the Union forces and served throughout the war.

His funeral took place on Sunday, the interment being made near Beckman.

DEATH OF ROWAN WHITE.

He Was the Oldest Citizen of Oakland and Leaves a Large Family.

Mr. Rowan White, the oldest citizen of Oakland, passed peacefully away last Thursday morning at 6.30 o'clock at his home on Oak street, after an illness due to old age extending over several weeks.

Mr. White was born near Uniontown, Pa., June 20th, 1811, and moved with his parents to a farm near Kingwood, West Va., when quite young. His father dying soon afterward he engaged in the business of hauling over the Northwestern turnpike, making the trips from Baltimore to Wheeling quite frequently. On April 9th, 1846, he was married to Miss Margaret S. Waltz, daughter of the late William Waltz, of Oakland. The marriage ceremony was performed near the Red House where Mrs. White's mother then resided. In 1859 he came to Oakland and embarked in hotel business which he conducted until some time during the early '80' when his hotel was destroyed by fire.

Mr. White was postmaster in Oakland from 1860 until about 1876.

His sons who survive are Messrs. John, James, George D, Thomas and Charles, of Oakland, and Perry, of Bayard. He also leaves four daughters, they being Misses Sarah and Bert of Oakland, Mrs. Delia Slabach, of near Gortner, and Mrs. Jennie White, of Kingwood. Besides these sons and daugters he is survived by his wife.

The funeral took place on Saturday being conducted from his late home by Revs. Scott, Davis and Miller. The pallbearers were his grandsons.

Three Faces

By GEORGE E. PICKETT

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

THE Verney mansion was abloom with flowers. Roses glowed in gold and silver vases in parlor and hall and vines trailed up the long stairways.

In an upper room the heiress to the magnificent mansion and the broad acres surrounding it, arrayed in bridal robe, was submitting to the final touches of skilful hands and listening to the chatter of her maids.

"I am her maid of honor," said the tall, dark girl who was arranging her veil. "She must give me her bouquet, else where are the privileges of my position?"

"That is not fair," replied a maiden, whose golden curls fell in riotous mass over the tiny slipper she was fitting to the foot of the bride. "You have highest place and will be the most observed and admired. She must throw her bouquet fairly and let chance select the fortunate one."

"If you do not go away now and give some attention to your own adornment you will not be ready to go down with me and there will be no fortunate one to receive my flowers. Had I known you were going to quarrel like this I would not have allowed you to send my dressing maid away so you might practice the art of costumery at my expense. Go off now, every one of you."

Putting them out and shutting the door, she came back to the center of the room and stood looking about her. She was taking leave of that room, the sanctum of her maiden life, and of all the beautiful things in it which had been her pride and joy in the happy days she had spent there. Tears came to her eyes as she thought that those days were going away from her forever. She would leave everything in the room just as it had always been and come back to it sometimes, but it would never be the same. It would belong only to her little episodes then; never again to her life.

She knelt and said a prayer for the happiness of that coming life—for its true happiness. Not that it might be free from the thorns that are the lot of all who tread well the path of life, but that two might walk hand in hand and bring a blessing each to the other that would heal every wound and light the darkness of the road until it should merge into the shining way. She remembered in her petition, too, the little life that was being given to her care, for Alan Warrington had once had a lovely young wife, who had died and left a little boy to comfort him for her loss.

She stood by the window and looked out at the rippling river in the distance and away over to the horizon where the dreams of her childhood had taken form in the days gone by. She heard carriages driving up to the door. She could hear them bowl around the curve and turn into the drive. There the heavy, arching trees hid them from view. Some one came running down the winding road. She observed him idly, scarcely conscious of his presence. He came on up the pathway to the door.

How still the house was. The murmur of moving forms and light voices had suddenly been stilled. It was the hush of expectation, she thought. Alan would soon be there. It had been a disappointment to him that he could not have had one sweet hour with her to close the old life before they had entered on the new. He was stationed at a fort in the west with his regiment and weddings were not included in military duties; especially when there was an excitement on the border. So he was to arrive just before the hour set for the ceremony.

Something was coming down the road, moving slowly. As it came nearer she saw four men carrying a stretcher covered over with a dark cloth. Why was so gloomy a thing coming now?

After a long time her mother came in, all the light gone out of her face. Ginevra held out her hands.

"You need not tell me," she said in a voice softer than a whisper, yet more insistent than a thunder-tone. "Alan is dead and you have come to tell me. I will go to meet him. He cannot come to me."

She walked steadily out of the room and down the stairs, her white robe trailing in a silvery billow on the floor. Her mother followed and tried to detain her, but she broke away from the detaining arms. She crossed the vacant room at the foot of the stairs and opened the door opposite. On a couch within lay the still form and beside it stood her father, a physician and two of the guests. They stepped forward to intercept her, but fell back in awe of her stillness and the majestic air with which she waved them away. She stood upright and looked for an instant at the white face on the crimson cushion. She turned and walked with the same stately step and moveless face back to her room, the maid of honor following her, weeping and clasping her hands.

A cab came rapidly up the drive. A young man with arm in a sling hastily entered the hall.

"Alan!" exclaimed Mr. Verney. "Where—why—how did you come?"

"Did you think I should not come? I was near thinking so myself. If ever man was pardonable for being late at his own wedding I am. But I am here at last; rather damaged, but with life enough to be happy. It was a terrible wreck and I was fortunate in being one of the slightly hurt, but it kept me waiting until my arm was patched up."

"But who is—there is another man—I can't understand it at all. Some one was brought here because the hospital was full and it was hoped that his life would be saved if he had immediate care. He died as they carried him over the threshold and when we looked—it was your face."

Mr. Verney opened the little door and together they went in.

"It was as if I were looking at myself when life had gone. I wonder who he is. These accidental resemblances are very strange. I have never seen the man. Poor fellow! How sad that he should have come here to-day. Ginevra! I hope she has not seen. We will never tell her of what has happened. Let me go to her."

When Alan entered the room where the bride sat in her white robes she arose and bowed, graciously extending her hand.

"You are welcome," she said in a voice whose low music was sadder than sobs. "I await my bridegroom. When he comes he will give you welcome to our wedding feast."

"Sweetheart! Do you not know me?"

She drew back in offended dignity.

"It is not fitting that a stranger should call me by that name. You jest, sir. If you have come to do honor to our nuptials you should not speak light words."

She sank back into her chair, lifting her gaze upward and waiting with a smile of happy expectation on her lips. All the answer she gave to his entreaties was a gentle: "I await my bridegroom's coming."

The days and the weeks and the months went by and drifted into years and still the maiden waited for the lover whom her dazed mind could not recognize, though he watched over her with a tender care until hope was gone and he knew that his presence could never bring anything of pleasure to her heart. Then he went away.

The years passed on and the maiden waited in radiant expectation and time dimmed not the springtide bloom of her loveliness. She was ever the fair and loving child-woman, waiting for her bridal.

* * * * * *

Lieut. Alan Warrington had returned from the Philippines and was stationed at Fort Milford. Life at an inland fort, with its routine drills and dress parades, may be more comfortable than long hikes over tropical islands, but it leaves something to be desired in the way of variety. Lieut. Warrington found no outlet for his changeful tempers and roving tendencies except in long walks and rides about the country. Home-coming meant less to him than to most island exiles. He was the only child of his father, for whom he had been named. In his absence his father had died and there was no tie of kindred left to bind him to his country.

Sometimes in his walks he passed a knoll, sloping to the south, on which stood a large house built of cream-colored stone, contrasting vividly with the green of the line of trees beyond and the pale turquoise of the sky.

In passing he had seen a beautiful girl at the gate, always with an older woman at her side, who seemed to be less a companion than an attendant. He had noted the girl's waving amber hair and the brown of her great eyes and the fairness of her delicately pink cheeks.

One morning he was riding along the road thinking of the beautiful maiden and wondering who she was and why she looked out upon the world with such wandering, restless eyes. As he drew near the great house he saw her come alone down the garden path, glancing back now and then as if in fear that some one would steal upon her solitude. When she reached the gate she stood for a moment, looking longingly out. Then she raised the latch with a swift movement and ran out into the road. She lifted her arms high above her head and laughed in a clear musical tone.

As Alan watched her poised gracefully, swinging her arms like slender wind-swept boughs, he heard the sudden harsh jangle of bells. Down the road came two automobiles racing at their utmost speed. She did not seem to hear the warning, though the foremost machine had almost leaped upon her.

Alan dashed forward, seized her by the arm and drew her from the track, the automobile touching her swaying garments as it flew by. She uttered a sharp cry and passed her hand over her eyes as if to push aside a veil. A look of terror came into her face and then gave way to an expression of dawning consciousness, as of one who wakes from a long sleep. She looked up and saw in the face of his son the Alan Warrington of her youth.

"I am so glad you have come, Alan. I new you would, but the waiting seemed an eternity. The train was late, they told me."

"Yes," he said, with a puzzled expression.

Then there came the memory of the old story he had heard long ago of the girl who had waited for his father through the years which had brought death to the faithful lover, but had left the maiden still the fair, loving bride, unconscious of and untouched by the passage of years. The love of the bridegroom of years agone leaped suddenly into the heart of his son and he seemed always to have known the deep eyes into which he looked and to have had no life till she came with a love for which his heart had waited through the years.

The moment of awakening had come and she met Alan Warrington as he had stood before her in the days that were to her as the present. The time between was as naught. It had left no mark on face or heart. She was still the bride who had waited through an eventful day for her first Alan Warrington.

To him, too, it was the realization of a beautiful dream as he lifted her hand to his lips and whispered in his heart:

"My Ginevra!"

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Miss Kara Smart Meets with a Serious Accident at Hands of Drunken Japanese.

(We are permitted to quote the following extracts from a personal letter to Miss Smart's mother.—Editors of the Union Signal.)

Tokyo, Japan.—The other evening, as I was coming home, after a day's absence traveling over the same road I have traveled hundreds of times, my jinrikisha man turned abruptly and darted off the road into the big canal along which the road runs. It was done so quickly I had no time to jump to save myself nor to stop the man.

Almost the first thing I knew I saw him dropping into that awful black hole, then saw one wheel go over (we went sideways fortunately) the stone wall lining side of canal, and then I was hurled into a gulf of pitch darkness and knew nothing more until I struck the water some fifteen feet distant. Down, down I went, for it was high tide forunately (or I'd have had a broken head or neck most likely), and as the cold water rushed in mouth, ears, nose, there came to me like a flash father's instructions of many years ago: "Keep your mouth shut, hold your breath, keep your arms down, and you'll come to the top and float until some one can rescue you," and I immediately proceeded to follow instructions to the letter. Result: I went down to the bottom, then, still holding my breath, turned over and came up to the top, right side up with care, and I floated. Looked about for the jinrikisha man and saw none, but while I was wondering what I could do next, how I could get out of that awful place when I didn't know any Japanese word for "help" and I couldn't swim nor climb up a perpendicular stone wall ten feet or more high in case I could get to it—directly I saw his head and shoulders come above water near the edge. I called to him and he turned as if shot (suppose he thought I was done for), paddled out to me, and grasping the bottom of my skirt, towed me in until I got near enough to catch his shoulders, which I grasped, and righted myself, standing by his side, while he held on to me and I to him, the water to our armpits as I remember.

Then we both yelled, "Help! help!" in our own language, and soon we heard voices and then three Japs' heads peeked over the canal wall and peered down onto us. By dint of the man with me boosting, my scrambling and those three men pulling on one wrist which they could just reach with the combined efforts of us all to get together, I was at last hauled out more dead than alive, and lifted to my feet only to tumble down again, for my strength went from me then, as Samson's must have done when he lost his hair.

After finding out about my baggage, two of those men took me, one on each side, and started me for the house, five blocks away. I went a few rods and then discovered my knee (left) was hurt, and a deathly faintness seized me. I started to fall, but the men held me firmly between them, saying most kindly: "Mo scotia, mo scotia" (meaning a little more—a little more). I begged them in Japanese to put me in another purunia and hurry me home, but they only said: "Scota matte, scotta matte!" (a little wait, a little wait) and dragged me along half falling, stumbling, plunging, half fainting. They got me home, looking like a drowned rat, and I had just strength enough left to arouse the household and toppled onto a chair in the hall, but I didn't faint. Oh, no! I knew I mustn't; if I did, then the worst would be to pay, so I held onto my will power and exerted it as best I could, while four women and two strong men undressed and carried me up to my room and put me to bed; then I had a nervous chill that was almost equal to an earthquake, and in the midst of it the doctor came and told me—"not to be so nervous." He ordered whisky post haste! I refused to take it—told him there were better remedies. He said No! I said, Yes! and stuck to it, and he got something else, though I had little need of it when it reached me, for my will had brought me out.

This was five days ago, and I'm still confined to room and couch, though am getting so I can move about a little.

I got off with a sprained knee, a wrenched back, numerous bruises and a shocked nervous system, which was not bad, considering.

How did it happen? Oh, the man was full of sake, of course! I guess I'll never get over the fun it has caused among my friends, some of whom call me "a good sailor," "a temperance comet," etc.

The largest newspaper of Japan reported it, giving all details, and the Japanese temperance leaders (while deeply chagrined that one of their people should have laid me out), are very happy over the outcome. They say: "It's the best thing you've done yet!" That whereas I have heretofore reached thousands, now I have reached millions, for that paper goes all over the Empire, and there's a first class temperance lecture in it as well as plenty of good advertising.

The police swooped down on that poor "kurumaya" (jinrikisha man) at once and would have made it interesting for him (for it's pretty serious business to hurt a "foreigner"), but in the midst of my suffering I begged the head of the police, who had come to see me, not to punish or do anything with the man, and while he made no promises to me then and waited two days to see how seriously I was hurt, he eventually let him go and gave him back his license. Such gratitude as the poor fellow and all his associates exhibited! His poor wife came to see me yesterday and brought me a lot of nice oranges. She was completely upset over it. The head man from the jinrikisha stand has been to call several times, and I've been almost overwhelmed with calls and attention from friends and from those also whom I never before met, both foreigners and Japanese. My accident has evidently waked people up somewhat. Books magazines, flowers and fruit, besides many notes of sympathy, have been bestowed upon me, and still they come.

This is the third narrow escape I have had in three months, though the other two were not such close shaves, and I'm as careful as I can be and do not needlessly run into danger, but you know this is not yet a civilized country, and even if it were—well, they have a few accidents in civilized countries, too, I notice.

Mr. Nemoto, vice-president of the National Temperance League, informed me that the temperance societies never could have afforded to pay for the amount of space devoted by the newspapers to our cause just now, and he's happy over it.

The doctor says I must keep quiet for a few weeks, and I shall be all right. The hardest thing to replace will, I fear, be my clothing, for I went in all over—hat, coat and all, and they are somewhat the worse for such close contact with water and mud. Oh, well, it will all come out some way in course of time.

Drunken Fish.

Bridgeport fishermen were astonished and puzzled yesterday by the remarkable spectacle of intoxicated fish. One fisherman said he thought all the fish had gone crazy. They wiggled and waggled about in the strangest manner. Search for the cause of the spectacular actions of the fish brought to light the fact that Deputy Sheriff Doolan had emptied about 30 casks of red wine into a sewer which feeds into the harbor. The wine was seized by the police in an illicit still.—National Advocate.

MRS. DENISON'S TRAVELS.

President of General Federation of Women's Clubs Has Established a Unique Record.

Mrs. Demies T. S. Denison, president of the General Federation of Women's clubs, is at present at her home in West One Hundred and Third street, Manhattan, resting between journeys. And she probably needs the rest. For three months she was as continually on the road as a commercial traveler. In those three months she traveled more than most women do in a lifetime, and all without going outside of the United States. She crossed the Mississippi six times, got almost out to the coast twice and kept engagements in Louisiana and Texas, and engagements in Michigan and the Dakotas. She visited 22 states in all, traveled about 30,000 miles, talked to not far from 100,000 women and came home fresh as a daisy and having gained weight during her travels.

That is something of a record even for these strenuous days, and now she has started off again to Florida first and then to Arkansas and Tennessee and possibly to one or two other places. All this, of course, on federation business. Who takes the place of president to that enormous aggregation of women must make up her mind to put her own private and personal affairs entirely in the background for two years. And even that Mrs. Denison has not done, inasmuch as her mother has been very ill—a situation which she did not foresee when she took the presidency—and she has been drawn hither and yon by a divided duty, and, succeeded in neglecting neither. But poor Mr. Denison! He has been practically wifeless for the past year, between his wife's mother and his wife's clubs. However, he brought it on himself, so far as the clubs are concerned, for it was he who urged and encouraged his wife to go into club life and cheered her through her first moments of stage fright and was so proud and pleased at the general recognition of her brilliancy and graciousness and ability that she couldn't help being pleased and proud with him.

MRS. D. T. S. DENISON.

Speaking of her travels—and even as she spoke Mrs. Denison was dressed and ready to go to a big local club reception as "guest of honor"—she said to a Brooklyn Eagle reporter: "I had a perfectly delightful trip in every way. It seemed to me that each town outdid the last I had visited in its welcome. And those western club women! They are such forceful, brainy, practical creatures. They don't seem to waste so much time on unimportant details, but get right down to the meat of the matter. I suppose that in our eastern cities our various reforms and charities and public works are so well organized, so crystallized that there is not so much for the clubs to do. But out west the women's clubs are an active living public force, doing things that ought to be done, accomplishing things that need accomplishing. And their hospitality is not mere civility; their politeness seems to be a deep seated courtesy that springs from real kindness.

"I think any one who had been on my recent trip with me would have realized the uses of women's clubs. Possibly occasionally they would have realized their abuses, too. But in the main they do stimulate and develop. And the club woman is not necessarily a masculine, domineering, unwomanly creature. She can overdo it, of course, and sometimes clubs seem to become an obsession with women. But those are the women who are naturally ill-balanced; if it wasn't clubs it would be something else. Of course, a whole lot of them take themselves with tremendous seriousness and are awfully funny.

"This southern trip of mine is probably the last one I shall take as president of the general federation. My term ends in the spring."

Stuffing for Green Peppers.

Corned beef hash is said to make an excellent stuffing for green peppers. Of course no one would make hash on purpose to stuff peppers with, but hash is often left over. A housewife of an experimental frame of mind who had hash left over filled some peppers with it, poured around them a brown gravy of butter, flour and water and baked them. She says there is no doubt of the success of that experiment.

UNIQUE PHOTOGRAPH FANS.

A Novelty from Germany Which Is Destined to Become Quite Popular in This Country.

Of the making of fans there appears to be practically no end in these days, and novelty and artistic results are the dual aims of the designer and manufacturer of these essential possessions of maid and matron. The Frenchman and the American are exceedingly adept as fan designers and constructors, but the newest idea in this line comes from the land of the Teuton. It is the photograph fan, of which a picture is here shown. The framework is of thin silk and tortoise shell, the mount elaborately decorated in gold. In orchid design silk is appliqued on the foundation fabric, with the petals so arranged as to leave space for the painted portraits of the owner's dear friends. In place of the painted picture a tiny photograph may be inserted if desired, and if cleverly done the effect is good, although the painted miniature adds to the picturesque and artistic effect of the fan. The college girl, the debutante and the young girl in general is likely to approve of such a fan, as it can be made to serve a decorative as well as useful purpose and hold the place of honor as a photo frame.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HINTS FOR YOUNG MOTHERS

Caring for the Baby Is Robbed of Many Trials by Adopting a Rational System.

Young mothers usually know very little about the care of babies, and this lack of knowledge is apt to make the task seem a very difficult one. Let his clothes be soft, warm and comfortable. We often fail to realize how much more sensitive he is to changes of temperature than we are, and are not careful enough to guard against them. The room in which he stays should be kept as near the same temperature as possible, and well ventilated, but avoid keeping him in a draft or he will be apt to have the colic. A healthy baby, that has not been taught bad habits, will be happy and contented in his crib the greater part of the day, allowing the mother time to attend to other duties, or to rest. He does not need to be held in your arms all the time, and he never needs to be carried about to amuse him. Few mothers are strong enough for that task, and they should never begin it. A great deal of worry and many cross spells might be saved if the mother would begin by having regular hours for feeding and bathing the baby. The bath should never be neglected, for so much of his comfort depends upon it that he will be restless and cross without it. Have the room warm and the water just warm enough for comfort. Get the bath tub in place, with towels and clean clothes hung on a chair before the fire, so they will be at hand when needed. Bathe him quickly, and wipe him dry with a very soft linen towel. Dust him under the arms and any other places that seem in danger of chafing with a powder composed of ten parts talcum powder and one part boracic acid, thoroughly mixed by sifting together two or three times. This is very soothing and healing, and when prepared at home it is inexpensive, and one can be sure to have it pure. Slip his clothes on and fasten them with as little turning and twisting as possible, and if he is not hungry he will fall into a quiet, refreshing sleep.

When babies are teething they need special care to keep them well. They should have plenty of simple and nutritious food that is easily digested. The gums become swollen and the mouth feverish. Give them a drink of water occasionally and see how eagerly they take it. Any tendency toward diarrhoea should be checked at once. If home remedies fail call a physician without delay.—St. Louis Republic.

They Like to Be Ugly.

As if nature had not been unkind enough, the Thibetan woman heightens her ugliness by smearing her face with a horrible black ointment to keep her skin from cracking in the dry wind. Her dress is not different from her husband's. Her crowning glory is her hair. Plastered down with butter from the part to the ears, it goes off behind into a sunburst of small braids to which is fastened a great fan-shaped headdress falling to the hem of her garments. It is of spreading strips of red and blue cloth joined horizontally by iron bands and ornamented with countless coral and malachite beads, silver coins, and tiny bells. The one poetic thing about a Thibetan lady is the sound of her gong—a soft, melodious tinkle, belying the grotesqueness of her face.

WAR REMINISCENCES

CAMPAIGNING IN MISSOURI.

Reminiscences of a Veteran Who Belonged to Well-Known Iowa First "Greyhounds."

I was a soldier in Missouri, a member of company C, First Iowa, known as the "Iowa Greyhounds." I can never forget, says a writer in the American Tribune, the long marches, night and day, the hardships and desperate fighting that characterized campaigning in Missouri.

It has been said that the first enlistment represents largely the scum. I think that statement is true. The cream is the scum of the milk. That is the kind of scum that characterized the personnel of the First Iowa, with a few exceptions. I have in mind one young man just from college who paid ten dollars to another volunteer for his place in the ranks. We had a glee club, composed of Eugene Ware, present pension commissioner; Kilmartin, the noted fifer; Charley Fowler, and other musical and poetic members of the scum of society.

The march from Boonville, crossing the Osage river, en route, was long and arduous—the Greyhounds in advance, followed by the First Missouri, First and Second Kansas, Totten's and DuBois' batteries. The Missouri miles were long—the longest I ever traveled. I never could tell just how far we had advanced. From the early start in the morning to the finish late at night was about the length of a Missouri mile.

One day in the latter part of July, 1861, a German friend, whom I was visiting in Sigel's camp at Pond Springs, solemnly requested me to accompany him outside of the encampment. Stopping beside a newly-made grave, he said, in accents soft and tender: "Dis is his time. He fights mit Sigel no more. He is dedt alretty once."

The story of Wilson's creek is history. I shall add very little to the story here. Capt. Mason, of company C, was killed. I have never seen anything so white as his face, pale in death. I can see it now. Our gallant first sergeant held up the beautiful silk flag, golden fringed, and the Greyhounds stayed with it. Some of them are there yet, awaiting the final reveille. The forenoon was hot; so was the fight. Some careless Johnny spilled melted lead on my leg, and while I was examining the damage to my anatomy, the sergeant, Jim Grant, a soldier of four enlistments, Mexican service included, stood above me waving the flag. Mopping his face with the other hand, he looked down and said: "It's pretty —— hot, ain't it?" Being still mad at the careless reb aforesaid, I curtly exclaimed: "Yes, it is p. d. h!"

Totten, whose battery had done effective work, remarked that the Iowa boys were all right, and permitted a number of the wounded, among them little Bob Armstrong, to ride back to Springfield on his limber.

Do the boys remember the big colonel of one of Sigel's regiments? A man of his immense physique must have supreme courage to go fooling around where six-pound shells are out for business.

How the wounded endured the march back to Springfield and from there to Rolla and St. Louis passes my comprehension. A comrade of company H, shot through the body, died by my side, on the night of our arrival at the arsenal in St. Louis. We certainly were hard to kill. The pension commisioner declares that only one man was discharged from the regiment for disability. I know that Commissioner Ware himself reenlisted, joining the Sixteenth Iowa.

A Brave Soldier Boy.

A young soldier of the Sixty-ninth New York, in a desperately-wounded condition, was taken on to Washington a few days after the fight. His father got word of the boy's situation and hurried to Washington, reaching there a few days after his son was brought to the hospital. The hospital surgeon was just in the act of removing a bullet from the back of the wounded youth's shoulder, the sufferer lying with his face downward on the pallet. "Ah, my poor boy!" cried the father, "I am sorry to see you thus, but I would rather see you dead than to know you were shot in the back." The young soldier turned over, bared his right breast, revealing a red bullet hole in front of the arm-pit, and then gasped with a brave glint in his fine gray eyes: "Father, there's where the ball went in."—American Tribune.

THEY FACED BOTH WAYS.

Trouble Finding Out How Some Prominent Men Stood at Opening of Civil War.

At an informal meeting of several members of the Missouri Society of New York, at which the situation in the far east was discussed, says the Sun, this story was told by an ex-confederate:

"There is one advantage which each nation has," he said. "I reckon every Russian is for Russia, and every Jap will be for Japan.

"The trouble in this country on the eve of the civil war was to find out how prominent men in some sections stood. Many persons waited to see how these certain prominent men were going to jump.

"One of the most conspicuous cases of uncertainty in my state was the late Col. James N. Burnes, then of Platte county, afterward a millionaire, and later a congressman of more than average ability. He was an orator, a man of culture and a perfect Chesterfield in his manner.

"He had married into one of the most exclusive families of the Platte purchase. Mrs. Burnes was as brilliant in her sphere as her husband in his.

"A few months before actual hostilities, when many were wavering, a meeting was held at the county seat of old Platte, to settle the question of union or secession. Several men whose names later became a part of the history of the conflict were present.

"The trend of opinion was soon found to be all one way—for secession. Col. Burnes was the last speaker. When he had finished everybody present actually believed that one southerner could lick six Yankees, and everybody expected to see Burnes raise and equip a regiment.

"He had told the meeting that he was not only willing to spend all of his money in behalf of the cause, but he pledged all of his wife's property as well. Both were rich.

"The war came and Platte county furnished more than her quota of volunteers, but James Burnes was not among those who went out to die. On the contrary a sort of dumb ague came upon the brilliant young lawyer, and for awhile his whereabouts was unknown.

"Not long after, when the union troops were in possession of the county, and meetings were held to induce those who had not gone out for the southern cause to rally round the flag, Col. Burnes showed up at one of these gatherings, at which union soldiers were on guard. The chairman of the meeting was a union captain. Col. Burnes was the principal speaker, and the way he expatiated on treason and the crime of secession was a caution.

"A short time after, a debate on the issues of the day took place in St. Joseph, the disputants being Judge Silas Woodson, afterward governor of the state, and Col. Burnes. Both were candidates for congress from that district.

"Woodson was a constitutional union man, which meant, in Missouri, the union with the negro left in slavery. He had, however, been accused at the start of being too much union. In his speech he referred to Burnes' offer to help the south with his and his wife's fortunes, and then quoted from Burnes' union speech.

"Burnes replied that it was better to start wrong and then get right, than to start right and then go wrong. The sentiment of the meeting was about equally divided, and the speakers suggested that the crowd go into the courthouse yard, where a rope would be stretched, the Burnes following taking one side, the Woodson contingent taking the other.

"The following paired off, and the two sides were about equal. But the Burnes crowd were expert with the rope, and, throwing it over the Woodson crowd, pulled them over. A free fight ensued.

"It took nearly a year for some people in that section to know what side they were on, but after that the hatred became so intense that there was no middle of the road, and it stayed that way for 15 years."

A person present, not a Missourian, told a more singular case than that of Col. Burnes.

"I was living in Illinois," he said, "when the draft was ordered. I was the only son and my father did not fancy my going to war. My father, consequently, hired a substitute, paying him $200. Before the war was over we learned that the substitute had originally enlisted as a confederate and had deserted. He fought in the union army two years afterward."

FOR LIFTING BIG WEIGHTS.

A Contrivance Which Is Easily Made at Home and Strong Enough to Do Heavy Work.

The illustration shows what I term my little Sampson, a contrivance for lifting heavy weights. By studying the figures carefully, any handy man can make the woodwork, while the iron parts can be left with the blacksmith.

No. 1 should be just 6 feet high. Planks for side pieces are 2x8. Blocks at the ends are 3x3x8 and firmly secured by four ⅜ bolts 8 inches long. Now comes the important part. The two rows of holes as shown must be exact. Lay off planks with two straight lines just 4 inches apart. Now lay square on the plank so that small blade will cross the two long lines, and mark the entire length in 1½-inch spaces, or just the width of the square blade. Now provide yourself with a 1⅛-inch bit, and bore straight through at every other junction of sectional lines; this being finished, we will start on the other line and bore on the cross lines we skipped before, thus leaving the holes at an angle, as shown in cut. There should be 20 holes in each row. The next will be two steel pins, (c) measuring 12 inches long and 1 inch in diameter. They should be slightly pointed at one end and flattened at the other as shown in No. 3.

For No. 2, the main iron should be ⅝ inch thick and 4 inches wide and 24 inches long; 4 inches wide from point and extending back 8 inches, where it should be made just 3 inches wide. On the lower edge at b is shown two pin saddles, which should be just 4½ inches from center to center. Upper hole for clevis pin is 1¾ inches back of front saddle. Clevis is made of ¾ inch and pin of ½-inch best iron. Clevis is 9 inches long. Main hook is 21 inches long and is made of steel ½ inch thick by 1½ inches wide, and point should be liberally reinforced.

We are now ready for the lever. This is made of 3x3 stuff and is 7 feet long. Measure off 2 feet and commence tapering and rounding the remaing 5 feet, leaving small end 2 inches in diameter. Now cut mortise in square end ⅝ inch wide, and back 16 inches. Around square end place a snug-fitting collar (a), made of iron ¼x1 inch. Now drive large iron in mortise and bolt, as shown in No. 2. In No. 1, c shows pins properly set for work. Our machine is now finished. All of the wood used in it should be of the toughest kind procurable. Mine is made of rock elm. The machine works equally well in pulling stumps.—Orange Judd Farmer.

WHEAT BREEDING HIS FAD.

Interesting Tests Conducted by J. N. Harper of the Kentucky Experiment Station.

An experiment which, if it proves a success, will be of the greatest value to the whole United States, is now being conducted at the Kentucky experiment station. J. N. Harper, of the station, is using in the raising of wheat the same principle that is applied in breeding and improving horses and cattle, and talks interestingly of his experiment.

"The successful cattle breeder," said Mr. Harper, "selects his individuals with the greatest care, taking into consideration many points. From those produced he again selects with equal care the best individuals, mating them, and so on ad infinitum, producing with each generation a better individual, until the perfect animal is the result. The same rule applies to the breeding of horses, sheep and hogs, and it is this sule that I am endeavoring to apply in the growing of wheat.

"After the most careful chemical analysis and examination under the microscope I have discovered the best variety of wheat and the variety richest in protein. I have also examined the wheat under the microscope and photographed cross sections of the grain."

"I will select the individual grains and plant them. Next year I will select from the grains produced the finest specimens and on the following year will plant them. In this way I hope after several years to produce a very fine quality of wheat.

"I also hope to produce a grade of wheat which will not degenerate. We get our supply of seed wheat from the western states. In a few years it degenerates and we are compelled to secure a new stock. I hope to produce not only a splendid quality of wheat, but one that will not degenerate and which under proper care will constantly improve."

The experiment is in its infancy and several years will be required to determine what its value will be. Other experiments have been made with wheat, but with methods different from that which Mr. Harper is following. Should the effort prove all that is hoped for it, it will be of the greatest value to the agricultural word.

NO APPETITE-EMACIATED-NERVOUS.

Many Women During the Spring Months Suffer From Extreme Lassitude, Loss of Appetite and Nervousness---What They Need Is Pe-ru-na, the Great Tonic.

Miss Bertha M. Rush, 5435 Kincarde treet, Pittsburg, Pa., Superintendent Junior Society of Methodist Protestant Church and leading Soprano of the choir, writes: "Words cannot describe my thankfulness to you for Peruna. I was a sufferer from systemic catarrh for years and was in a very much run-down condition. I was extremely nervous and had the most foolish fears over nothing. I was thin and emaciated.

"My physician advised me to leave this climate but as it was not convenient to do so at this time, I took the advice of a friend to use a bottle of Peruna. I took it faithfully and when the first bottle was gone I felt so much better that I bought six more and took them faithfully, after which I looked like a new woman.

"I gained in flesh, my appetite returned and all my old symptoms had disappeared. I am more than thankful to Peruna."—Miss Bertha M. Rush.

I AM TIRED.

Everybody is Tired—Spring Weather Does It—Every One Should Be Cautious.

Depression of the nervous system at the approach of spring is the cause.

General lassitude, dull, heavy sensations, continual tired feeling, with irregular appetite, and sometimes loss of sleep. Peruna meets every indication and proves itself to be perfectly adapted to all their varied peculiarities. Peruna invigorates the system, rejuvenates the feelings, restores the normal appetite and produces regular sleep.

That tired feeling which is the natural result of the depressing effect of warm weather immediately after the invigorating cold of winter, quietly disappears when Peruna is taken. Thousands are daily testifying to its priceless benefit.

Mrs. H. Kassatt, 1309 W. 13th street, Des Moines, Ia., writes: "I am happy to give my endorsement for your valuable medicine, Peruna, as I consider it a valuable medicine to take when the system is run down from overwork. About two years ago I felt that I must take a long rest as I had been unable to work for over a month and could not regain my strength. I could not sleep at night and was in a very nervous, high strung condition. I decided to try what Peruna would do to build up my strength, and am pleased to say that I began to improve very shortly, and in less than two months I was able to take up my work, and felt better than I have for years. I take it now twice a year and find that it keeps me in perfect health." Mrs. Kassatt was for over ten years the manager of a plant furnishing ladies' wear and employing hundreds of women.

Tired, Nervous Women.

There are thousands of them everywhere. A few bottles of Peruna would do them untold benefit. As a tonic and nerve invigorator it has no equal. It builds up the nerves, it gives strength to the circulation and at once restores the appetite and digestion. No feeble woman should be without Peruna.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Jesus Transfigured

Six days intervene between the confession and the transfiguration, or including the day of the credo and the night of the glorification, "about eight days," as St. Luke says. The days are left blank in the Gospels, but no doubt they were filled with teaching and preparation for the dread climax near at hand. The place was very well suited for the purpose. In this sem-heathen locality they were for once beyond intrusion of the pharisees and scribes. The terrible lesson could be taught without interruption. A whole week of divine affirmation of impending rejection, humiliation, suffering, and death! A whole week of human shrinking, protestation, fear. The teacher must give the line upon line about the gain which is loss and the loss which is gain. There must be the sharp rebuke, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" All the transcendently important and weighty instruction of the week is wrapped up in the luminous scene of the transfiguration. It was the "commencement" for this school of sorrow. The merciful kindness of it is apparent.

The setting suited the gem. The dazzling whiteness of everlasting snow; the immovable might of rocky barricade; the solemn arch of night—a more appropriate environment for the most lovely and majestic of scenes can not be imagined. Purity, power, solemnity were in the face of Nature, as she beheld her Makers' glorification.

It was a week after Peter's confession of the Messiah's Divinity and Jesus' revelation of the suffering in store for Him—a week spent in the same locality, and crowded with converse about these matters—that the Master went up at night into one of Nature's oratories on some spur of Mt. Hermon. He took with Him the three most advanced of His disciples, the dominate spirits of the college of apostles—the Rock-man and the Sons of Thunder.

Lifted towards heaven and above the possibilty of intrusion, the four bowed in prayer. Then, as afterward in Gethsemane, the Savior went apart for a season of personal communion with His father, and the apostles wrapped themselves in their outer robes and fell asleep. Possibly, in that darkest hour just before the dawn, they awakened with an intuitive apprehension of something preternatural transpiring. They saw a sight of fadeless splendor. A third of a century afterward Peter wrote of it as if it had transpired the day before.

The form of the servant in which Jesus had condescended to clothe Himself thirty-three years before was now dissolving. The fullness of the Godhead was unveiled. He shone, not like Moses with a reflected light; like the the sun, His radiance was selfderived. His seamless robe became a web and woof of electrical light. His countenance like snow on which the sun is shining, or like the sun itself in meridian. But language of earth is bankrupt in effort to describe that scene.

The etherealized body of Jesus rises, and two holy ones came from glory to meet Him in the air. The souls of the apostles, keyed up to the occasion, recognize the visetants as, the one the man of Sinai, the other, the man of Carmel—the founder and the restorer of Israel. The subject of their conversation is the same as that which Jesus had had with His diciples at the base of that very mountain—the cup He was so soon to drink, the baptism He was to be baptized with, the exode He was soon to make.

Peter, in the ecstasy of his joy, burst in upon the conversation of the immortals. The woody slopes, with their wealth of cedar boughs, suggest the improvising of hasty shelters, after the manner of the Tabernacle feast-time. He will fain prolong this scene until all Israel can be summoned to that mount, and behold Moses and Elijah, the law and the prophets, humbly paying court to the glorified Messiah. That will end all opposition. The nation will no longer be faithless or unbelieving.

The Teacher's Lantern

The transfiguration is the heavenly Amen to the earthly confession of the Divinity and Messiahship of Jesus. Hardly had that comprehensive creed framed itself on Peter's lips, and been consented to by the apostles, than they were all shaken by the revelation of the ignominious death in store for the Messiah. That ineffable scene on Hermon fixed and settled a faith that was tottering to its fall. It nerved them for Gethsemane and Calvary. It was fitting that they should see the celestial evidences of His eternal Godhead and glory on the hither side of the cross. Before they saw His visage marred, they were privileged to see it transfigured.

* * * * *

That scene had its merciful ministration for Jesus' self as well as His apostles. It was not merely scenic and pictorial; it was of substantial comfort to Him who was touched with a feeling of infirmity, and tempted.

* * * * *

It has been well said that He who for us is to enter by a voluntary death into glorification, must first learn and actually experience in regard to himself, otherwise than by the knowledge arising from faith, that the glory of light and life is already present in his humanity; that it can break forth in him, and radiate from him, even, even without his passing through death.

* * * * *

The descent from the Mount of Transfiguration was like a second descent from heaven—Jesus' earthly life in mianiture. We see whence He came, what glory He laid aside when He humbled Himself and took the form of a servant.

* * * * *

We have an example of the honor and joy of the ministering spirit sent forth to minister. What unapproachable dignity—to hold high converse with the man of Galilee, soothe and fortify Him as He approached His crucial experience.

* * * * *

These ministrants came from the grave, but from the grave conquered. Elijah experienced the "change" which those who are alive at Jesus' second coming shall undergo. Moses died, but his body was probably immediately raised alive again. So the two are samples of the paradisaic form and appearance.

* * * * *

The transfiguration scene, aside from its relation to Jesus Himself, may well be considered a revelation of the resurrection body. We see, as in a mirror, the nature and appearance of it. This transient transformation was a prelude to the permanent. It was a glimpse of what Jesus shall be like in the eternal world. And all shall finally be like him.

* * * * *

The doctrine of evolution has so far prevailed that it is now conceded that there has been an age long and successful aspiration and struggle of life from lowest and low forms to higher and highest. The resurrection body may be considered, in a sense, the last step in the ascent of man

* * * * *

The old form in which the doctrine was presented was that upon a fixed, but distant day, there should be a universal and simultaneous resurrection. The new form asertsan instantaneous clothing of the spirit in the hour of death with a new body which shall be suited to the new sphere. The bodily appearance of Moses and Elijah at the transfiguration favors this latter view. They were apparently not in any "intermediate state," certainly there was no "soul-sleeping" for them.

* * * * *

The new body with which the spirit will clothe itself is as St. Paul describes it, incorruptible, glorious, powerful, spiritual, and immortal. We may fairly believe it will in appearance be like the transfigured body of Jesus.

* * * * *

There is always a vision for the prepared and receptive mind. These men were "apart by themselves." The vision of to-day comes in the prayer-closet. It make one inspirational and masterful with his fellows.

* * * * *

Jesus and the disciples went into the mountain for the express purpose of praying. They sought further light and instruction upon this specific question of his humiliation and death to be accomplished at Jerusalem.

The Man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that dnishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

FRIENDSVILLE.

It rains and is never weary.

Farmers are busily engaged with their spring work.

A. A. Frazee, formerly a teacher of this county but now living in Pittsburg, Pa., was a business caller here last Saturday.

Henry Krug, one of the firm of A. Knabb Co., spent a day or two here last week.

N. N. Savage, of this place, is at the county seat at this writing.

William Bishoff, who was vice principal of the public school here, is now enrolled in the Frostburg Normal.

N. J. East is a delegate to the annual meeting of the Knights of Pythias which is now in session in the Monumental City.

Our enterprising Merchant J. H. Cuppet, will spend a part of this week in Baltimore and Washington.

Asa Riley and family spent Sunday with his parents near Selbysport.

Misses Mattie Riley, of Selbysport, and Zella Greffith, of Guard, came here in attendance at last day of school on Friday.

Lizzie Welch, of Hoyes, is here visiting.

Miss Bessye Moon is visiting friends at Morgantown, W. Va.,

Samuel Hook, who was born and reared near Friendsville, but whose present home is in Kansas, is here visiting his many old friends. Thirty years or more have elapsed since Mr. Hook went west. Friendsville as he remembers it, had one store and only a few dwellings. As he expresses it, "many changes have taken place."

Joseph Graham, formerly a resident here, was killed near Out Crop, Pa.

C. V. Guard, who has been engaged in an extensive mercantile business here for several years, sold his entire stock to D. K. Harring. Mr. Harring will take charge in a few days. We wish him success in his new undertaking.

An election will be held here April 26, to decide certain measures pertaining to the town. If you are a real estate owner you will be allowed one vote.

Arrangements have been made for the erecting of a Lutheran parsonage.

It will be built near the church. Its completion will be expected by Sept. 1.

Normal will begin April 18. It is to be hoped that a good, live Normal will be had here this year. It should be the purpose of the teachers of Garrett to know more each year. There is room at the top; you will get there by applying yourself.

Mrs. L. Hardie entertained several ladies of the town one evening last week. They report a good time.

Appeal Session.

The Mayor and Town Council will sit as a board of appeals from the assessment of property for corporation taxes Monday next at the Council chamber. All who have grievances should appear.

MR. ELKINS FOR VICE PRESIDENT

A Solid Delegation Will Go to Chicago In His Interest.

Senator Fairbanks is not to have a walkover for the Vice-Presidential nomination. West Virginia has a favorite son whose claims she will urge, and Senator Elkins will have a solid and enthusiastic delegation at the Chicago convention working for his interests.

"We are in earnest," said Congressman Gaines, of West Virginia, "in advocating Senator Elkins' nomination, and every Republican in the state would be delighted to see it brought about. Not only will the delegates be for him, but will be instructed to support him."

"Would Senator Elkins' nomination strengthen the ticket as much as that or a man from Indiana of the Middle West?"

"We believe that no better nomination for second place could be made than Senator Elkins. He is big enough for Presidential timber and ought to have been the nominee of his party for first place long ago. A man who is big enough for first place ought to be put on the ticket for second place, and Senator Elkins is that man. His statesmanship is of the highest order. He has the the undisputed friendship of all classes in the party, and especially of the great business interests of the United States. He is a big brainy man in every sense of the word, and his nomination would give as much strength to the Republican ticket as would that of a local man from any of the close states of the Middle West. In fact, he would make the ticket complete in every way."

NEW LOCAL LAWS.

The Friendsville Charter and the License Question.

In this paper today we publish three laws which were passed at the recent session of the state Legislature.

The Friendsville law provides for many things, the most important being that of submitting to vote of the property owners within the corporate limits whether or not liquor shall be sold at hotels capable of accommodating comfortably fifteen or more guests. Under the present law no liquor can be lawfully sold within the limits of the District in which Friendsville is located. Should the "wet" ticket win on Tuesday next, at which time under the special act incorporating the town, the election to determine the question must be voted upon, liquor can be sold only within the corporate limits at hotels coming within the requirements of the laws as above specified.

Grange Meetings.

The Oakland Grange will meet in Naylor's Hall every Tuesday evening at eight o'clock, commencing with April 26th. All members are requested to be present at the first meeting; also all interested, especially the farmers and their wives. The Grange will be ready to receive new members. We need to get better acquainted and consult together, for "in union there is strength."

H. P. WEBER Master.

The Deer Park Grange will meet in the band room in Deer Park on Monday evening, April 25th. All members are requested to be present and also those who wish to become members.

COUNTY TAX RATE FIXED AT 94 CENTS.

An Increase Over Last Year of Four Cents on the $100.

ROADS AND SCHOOLS FARE WELL.

Smallpox Expenses In Part Responsible for the Increased Rate—Assessable Basis is $8,047,580.

The Board of County Commissioners adjourned last Thursday afternoon upon the completion and signing of the levy made by that body during the few days previous to meet current expenses of the county government for the current year.

Owing to some increased expenses and some additional ones over which no one had control, notably that of the smallpox item amounting to nearly five thousand dollars, it was impossible to keep the expenses down to their normal base and in consequence the tax payers will be called upon to contribute an additional amount this year, aggregating several thousand dollars, but the increase is so slight that it will hardly be noticeable, amounting to four cents on each hundred dollars of assessable property.

According to the assessment books the taxable basis of the county amounts $8,047,580 and the levy just completed carriers appropriations for all expenses of the county for the present year amounting in the aggregate to $75,647.25. Of this amount the schools will receive $19,000, and the general road fund amounts to $11-445. The items of new roads and special roads carry respectively $123.-25 and $3,390, making a total of nearly $15,000 for the maintenance of highways within the county.

The state tax rate, fixed by the Legislature, has been increased to 22½ cents on the $100, thus making the total rate for state and county purposes $1.16½ on the $100.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Dr. Laughlin has made some very pleasing improvements on the drug store lot.

Mrs. H. R. B. Gracie, of Cumberland, was registered at the Assembly House last Saturday.

Mr. E. Z. Tower was at the Park last Friday in the interests of his coal mine. He is building up a trade in coal at this place.

Mrs. Ruth Havermale, of Berkley Springs, W. Va., spent last Frinay at this place.

Mr. Charles Weimer is having his mother's lots plowed, and seeded in grass. He is also enclosing the lots with a fence.

Mr. George M. Sisk and Mr. Edward. Sembower went to Gormania on last Monday having secured work for the summer at that place.

Wesley Rudisill returned home Thursday on No. 55 from a visit to Altoona, Pa., and Cumberland

We had two attacks of winter last week; real cold weather, accompanied with snow. The kind of weather that gladdens the souls of the coal merchant.

Mr. Upton Cuppett has moved from near Thayerville to the Park, and is occupying the cottage he purchased from Mr. C. Michael.

E. R. Winchell, who occupied the cottage on the corner of E and Spruce streets last summer, was in the Park Monday. He and his family will occupy the same cottage this season.

L. E. Hanson, Esq., made a business call at Fairmont last Monday, and is happy over the success of his trip.

Mr. L. P. Wilson, of this place, was called to Caldwell, Ohio, last Saturday, to look after some business matters.

The April issue of the Mountain Chautauqua will be mailed this week. It is full of information about the coming season.

Mr. Earl Forward will run a baggage and express service this summer. He has purchased Sherman Howell's wagon.

Mr. S. V. G. Mattingly has a good offer for his property and expects to close the trade this week. The purchaser has made a wise selection.

Mr. L. E. Hanson moved to the King farm, near the Park where he purchased a house and an acre of ground.

Congressman Pearre's Statement About Maryland Postoffices.

INCREASED PAY FOR CLERKS.

Larger Allowances Made, At Mr. Pearre's Request, For Offices At Luke, Deer Park And Rockville.

In the testimony taken by the McCall committee at Washington which investigated "charges against members of Congress" in connection with postoffice matters is a lengthy statement from Representative George A. Pearre, of Maryland. Mr. Pearre has been in poor health, unable to be in the House for several weeks and could not appear before the committee during the investigation to testify. Writing from the Hotel Brighton, at Atlantic City, under date of April 1, he makes the following statement:

"I think the committee will find my name mentioned four times in the report of the Committee on the Post-office and Post Roads—three times in connection with allowances for clerk hire, viz., at Luke, Deer Park and Rockville, and once in connection with a lease at Brunswick, Maryland.

"An examination of the list furnished by the department of these cases will, I am sure, satisfy the committee that the allowance at Deer Park and Luke were justified and legal at the time the allowance was made. Reference to a note at the head of this list so indicates. Why these places were mentioned in the list, therefore, I am at a loss to know.

"The other case, at Rockville presents same unusual features. Rockville is about 16 miles from Washington on the Metropolitan branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. Numerous mail trains pass it daily in both directions, discharging mails frequently during every 24 hours—how often I am not prepared to say. Five star routes radiate from this postoffice, dispatching and delivering mail once each daily, with the exception of Sunday, I believe. An examination of the records, copies of which I have, will disclose the fact that increases in clerk-hire allowances were demanded by Mr. C. B. Jones, postmaster, as far back as 1897, and recommended by Hon. John McDonald, at that time member of Congress from the Sixth district of Maryland. I was first elected to Congress in November, 1898, and assumed the duties of the office on March 4, 1899.

"The records will show that in 1898, before I became a member of Congress, an increase in clerk-hire allowance was made from $300, I think, to $900 to pay the salary of an additional clerk. This increase was to, and did, take effect in April, 1899. The letter of the postmaster, C. B. Jones, recommending this increase, of record at the Postoffice Department, but not mentioned in the report, will disclose the conditions existing at that postoffice and the crying need for more help.

"In his letter he says he has to pay two clerks out of his salary. This is my recollection of the record. I have it not before me.

"As I remember, my first active connection with the matter of increased clerk hire at Rockville was upon the urgent and persistent request of Mr. P. B. V. Viers, the present postmaster and my appointee. After the Bristow investigation of the Post-office Department a horizontal reduction was made in allowances for clerk hire at third-class postoffices, and Rockville was reduced to $360 a year upon recommendation of an inspector.

"After receiving the notice from the department of the proposed reduction Mr. Viers, the postmaster, wrote me urging that I ask the department not to enforce this reduction against the Rockville postoffice, as he could not possibly get along with such a reduced force. I wired to the department from my home at Cumberland asking that the reduction be postponed at least until I could see the postoffice officials. However, the reduction was made, and upon my return to Washington last November, upon the urgent solicitation of the postmaster and his representation that great inconvenience put upon the people, I went to First Assistant Postmaster-General Wynne, a most conscientious and careful officer, and who, it is said, originated the investigation into the Postoffice Department, and urged the restoration of the clerk-hire allowance at Rockville. He replied that under the regulation of the department $300 was all that could be allowed at Rockville.

"I communicated this to the postmaster, who protested against it and said the patrons of the office were complaining bitterly of the delays in mail distribution, etc. I then went with him to see General Wynne, and after a full discussion of the matter General Wynne agreed to send out an inspector. The inspector reported that conditions were unusual at the Rockville postoffice and recommended an increase to 'at least' $900, which was ordered by General Wynne in January, 1904, after the Postoffice Department investigation and the report of Mr. Bristow. I specially refer to the report of the inspector and letters of the postmaster at Rockville to show the necessity for the increase.

"Even now a petition by citizens of Rockville, regardless of party, urges me to secure further allowance for clerk hire at that point to secure them adequate mail faciliates. I made these recommendations solely and and simply because I believe the increase were needed to furnish proper mail facilities, and for no other purpose, and with no other motive. I believe they were justified then and I believe they are justified now, both in law and morals and good public policy.

"It would therefore appear that these allowances are in no sense a violation of law, but are strictly in compliance therewith, and when done in the exercise of an honest discretion and in conformity with the needs of the service are in the line of the best public policy. It may be suggested that allowance at Rockville seem large in comparison with the postmaster's salary, but a glance at the allowances for clerk hire at first and second class postoffices, as shown in the Postmaster-General's report in comparison with postmasters' salaries, will disabuse the mind of any suspicion arising from such a comparison.

"That report shows numerous instances of second-class postmasters receiving $2,000 and $2,500, where the clerk-hire allowance is almost as great, and I think in some instances greater, than the postmaster's salary.

"Mr. Bristow, in his report, in speaking of the Rockville postoffice, refers insinuatingly to the fact that a Mr. Page was put into the postoffice at Rockville as a clerk and then transferred to the Postoffice Department. This is true, but his appointment as clerk and transfer to the department was not made upon my recommendation, but, as the record and letters on file will show, upon the recommendation of Mr. Thomas C. Noyes, city editor of the Washington Evening Star.

"So much for the increased clerk hire allowances at Luke, Deer Park and Rockville, the three places with which my name is connected.

"Now to the Brunswick lease case. I should like to have the gentleman who prepared these alleged charges against Congressmen explain to me or justify his conduct in including this case in his list. The record will show that I wrote a letter of introduction for Mr. William Schnauffer to Mr. Madden, Third Assistant Postmaster-General, simply that and nothing more, making no recommendation of anything. I did not even know what Mr. Schauffer's business was, and yet this is included as one of the instances where Congressmen have violated the law or proprieties of public life. I have no further comment to make upon this case. Its statement carries its own condemnation and savors strongly of an effort to lug Congressmen into some imputation of wrongdoing. I regret that I have imposed upon the patience of the committee for so long, but for fear that I may not be able to appear before the committee before it closes its investigation, and feeling that the committee is entitled to the courtesy of a statement from me, however desultory and incomplete, I remain."

A NEW MILLING COMPANY.

With a Capital Stock of $8,000 Organized at Friendsville.

Tuesday morning the Friendsville Milling Company to conduct a general milling business and to buy and sell grain, and to manufacture feed and flour, was organized by a number of farmers and business men of Friendsville and vicinity.

Application for the charter for the new company under the laws of the State of Maryland has been made to the Circuit Court for this county.

The corporation will have a capital stock of eight thousand dollars fully paid up and will on August 1st take charge of the Haney mill at Friendsville which has been in successful operation for a number of years, having purchased the mill and twenty eight acres of land adjoining along with two dwelling houses and a feed store from Mr. Haney and his son Fred. C., who will be retained by the new company as its secretary and general manager.

The officers of the corporation, elected at the meeting held Tuesday are as follows: President, W. W. Savage; general manager and secretary, Fred C. Haney, vice presidents, C. V. Guard and W. A. Smith; directors, S. A. Kendall, S. R. Frantz, W. A. Smith, H. R. DeWiit, G. V. Dixon, W. W. Savage, H. J. Black, H. K. Friend, W. H. H. Friend, H. J. Georg, J. H. Cuppet, L. E. Friend, J. W. McCullough, D. S. Custer, F. C. Haney, C. V. Guard, A. J. Mason H. M. Rumbaugh bnd R. C. McCandlish.

The property taken over by the new concern will be put in first class condition and with an up-to date mill at their doors the farmers of the Friendsville section should feel that they owe to it their patronage.

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

The warm spring weather is still a thing to be hoped for. With us frequent snow squalls, accompanied by some frezing waather, has been our portion within the past week.

Some sugar is still being made this week, and the sweet odor of delicious sweetness hangs heavy upon the air, frequently mingled with the sonorous voice of the lusty plowman, as he goads his patient team along the rocky hill side.

Communion services will be held in the Lutheran church at this place next Sabbath morning at ten o'clock.

The Lutheran Sunday school was reorganized here on last Sunday morning, and the following officers were elected: S. O. Wiley, Supt., Jonas Bittinger, Asst. Supt.; Miss Fannie Brenneman, Sec'y and Miss Rosa Stark treasurer.

Mrs Fannie Weitzell, of Avilton, who was visiting relatives here over Sunday, was called home at a very early hour Monday morning, by reason of the serious illness of her mother.

Mr. Leonard Shaw, of Jennings, was visiting here last Sunday, as was also Mr. Earl Stanton, from near Grantsville.

Mr. Edward Wiley and sisters, Misses Minty and Lucretia, were the guests of Miss Malinda Orendorf and brothers Sunday afternoon.

Miss Eliza Ralston is spending a few days at the home of Mr. D. J. Brenneman.

Prof. Althers, the all-around singer and painter, goes to Pocahontas Pa., where he expects to wield the brush for a few weeks.

A SUNSHINE SONG.

There's a sunshine of the heart that is stronger than the weather,
For it keeps the spirit blithe though the clouds may gather round;
There's a better feeling round us when we can all smile together,
And our troubles partly vanish when companionship is found.

There's a sunshine of the heart that invites a neighbor's trusting,
He who sings about his work is not plot-
ting any crime;
Deeds of duty are not heavy if ambition be not lusting,
And the best of life's in helping and helping all the time.

There's a sunshine of the heart that will conquer every sorrow,
To see the silver lining is to roll away the dark,
He who makes each day more joyful shall not have a sad to-morrow,
And there never was a morning but somewhere sang a lark.

Then let this heart of sunshine rule the life of every lover,
And let there be a lover in the heart of every man,
For happy is the toiler who no evil can discover,
And gladness lies in kindness in a wise and holy plan.

Let your heart of sunshine help the poor,
the sick, and needy,
Let your daily message with its light and love be free,
Shout hosannas to the runners that the reign of joy be speedy,
And the gloom of melancholy forever cease to be.

CLAYTON rose from his desk with a yawn, indicative of physical exhaustion and mental relaxation. He had written for three steady hours, without intermission, save once to hastily sign for a pressing telegram, and to glance through its contents.

There had been a steady downpour of sleet and rain since early morning and the streets outside presented a forbidding aspect; a network of muddy rivers and slushy sidewalks. Still, it was with a feeling of positive delight that Clayton drew on his mackintosh, and slammed the office door behind him.

Outside, a violent gust of wind almost took him off his feet, and hailing a passing ccupe, he was soon jolting over the cobblestones to the big, comfortable house on — avenue, he called his home.

He paid his fare without a second's delay, and ran lightly up the short flight of stone steps. A servant answered his impatient ring immediately, and Clayton hurried at once to his dressing room. When he had completed his toilet for dinner, he went into his wife's boudoir for a half hour's chat, according to custom, before the meal was served.

The room was deserted and he tapped softly on the door that joined it with her sleeping apartment. There was no response; he turned the knob and looked in. She was not there. A feeling of intense disappointment swept over him. It was the first time in the two years of their married llife that she had not been waiting for him!

He walked about the room aimlessly, staring at this and touching that with an absurd sense of unreality clinging to his mind. His head throbbed painfully from the day's strain, and his eyes commenced to burn in an altogether ridiculous and confusing fashion. For some time he stood in front of a little steel engraving on the wall, the picture of a girl and some dogs, gazing at it intently. Then he laughed, rather foolishly, he thought, and crossed the room to his wife's writing table.

There was a decidedly unusual litter of papers over it—just as though she had been suddenly interrupted, and had not waited or come back to set it to rights. A discarded sheet of paper, slightly crumpled, lay on the floor beneath it. Clayton stooped mechanically and picked it up. He had no intention whatever of prying into his wife's private papers, but something—a word—on the paper he held in his hand, sent the blood racing from his cheeks.

"My darling," he read, "I will go with you at once, to-night—if you wish it. Try as I will, I cannot see my way clear to leading this wretched sort of life a day longer. It is a hypocrisy; a lie, if you could only know—everything. Let me hear from you as soon as possible and I shall then arrange my plans accordingly. I—" Here it was torn off; probably she had thrown away this sheet, and rewritten the letter on another.

Clayton stared at the words, (undeniably in his wife's own characteristic hand) like a crazy man. The paper slipped from his nerveless fingers and fell, unheeded, to the floor. For several moments he thought rapidly. His wife's feelings were a complete revelation to him. He had been living, then, in a fool's paradise all this time, while fancying himself the happiest and most beloved of men!

Well, he would go away. There was nothing else to be done. Who the man was that had robbed him of his wife's fidelity, he could not know—had no way of knowing or finding out. At least he would not stay to hear the story of her wretchedness bandied from mouth to mouth. He would leave the house—and at once, taking the first steamer out of New York, forever afterward, would lose his old identity in a world across the ocean!

A year passed. Truly enough, Clayton had lost himself to his quondam world as surely as though the earth had swallowed him up. He lived in the closest retirement, amounting almost to hermitage, in one of the most obscure suburbs of London. Newspapers, he refused, lest some maddening allusion should find its way into their columns.

One day, he sat idly turning over the leaves of a magazine he had picked up at a little news stand. The illustrations amused him; one could easily recognize them from their total unsimilarity to the subjects they represented. He laughed a little at the idea, glancing carelessly at the long pages of printed stuff. They contained not the slightest appeal to his morose mind, and he was in the act of flinging the periodical away when something familiar caught his eyes.

"My darling," he read, "I will go with you at once, to-night—if you wish it. Try as I will, I cannot live this way a day longer. Let me hear from you as soon as possible, and I shall then arrange my plans accordingly. I shall be waiting here until eight o'clock for your answer. Hastily, Patricia."

Clayton caught his breath chockingly. What did it mean? The veins beat and throbbed furiously in his neck. With shaking fingers, he slipped back the pages and ran his eye up and down in search of the title. Here it was at last: "The End of the Quest," by U. D. C. A sudden light flashed on his brain. Una Dering Clayton, his wife! It was nothing but the letter in a story then! And for that he had been led to play the part of a deserter, a fool, a rascal. If she had only trusted him with her little secrets!

The following day, he went to Liverpool and engaged passage on the "Constantia," bound for New York. The voyage seemed interminable. Surely it was the strangest home-coming a man ever had. He wondered how she would receive him—if she would receive him, and his explanation?

It was just such a day as the one on which he had left. As Clayton stepped from the gang-plank, he recognized, with a startled heart throb, the partner of his firm. He had left that faithful friend wihout a word of explanation, either at the time or thereafter. He pushed his way rapidly through the rain-coated and umbrellaed throng, keeping his head steadily averted. But to no avail. Kenner had already got sight of him, and was pursuing him zealously.

"Clayton," he cried, extending his hand warmly.

"My dear fellow," the other returned, a bit unsteadily. And he could say no more.

"Where under the sun have you been?" Kenner went on, hooking his arm into that of his friend. "Where, why and—"

"That is a long story," replied Clayton, hurriedly. "But for God's sake, man, tell me something about my wife! Is she—is she well?"

"She is perfectly well; that is to say, as well as any miserable woman can be."

"Poor little Una. What did she think? What must she have thought of it all?"

"She has never said what she thought, Dick. But I'll tell you what I think she imagined."

"Well?" Clayton regarded him with paling lips.

"She would not believe you unfaithful; she positively refused to do that. From what I can glean—from what she says, she—" He paused, somewhat uncertain how to go on.

Clayton looked at him beseechingly. "Don't hesitate," he said, quickly.

"Well, in brief, I believe she considers that you were—must have been mentally unbalanced."

Clayton started. A shiver ran over him from head to foot. But in a moment he had controlled himself and explained everything as they walked on together through the driving rain.

"That goes to show, then, why no amount of advertising could reach you. Together, we exhausted the whole catalogue in vain."

"You will come home with me, will you not? I—I'm half afraid I haven't the strength—the courage—"

Kenner shook his head, smiling. "No," he said, "I am not coming home with you—this time. I see your heart is in the right place—if your head is not. I'll see you at the office to-morrow?"

Clayton nodded, shook hands and swung himself onto the next car. Inside of 15 minutes, he stood before the gate of his own home, trembling with a strange mixture of emotions. He hesitated just long enough to collect himself; then entered noiselessly, and tried the door. It was unlocked and yielded readily to his touch. Inside the hallway, he looked about him with eyes dazed by the very familiarity of the objects everywhere. He did not pause, but sprang up the steps, three at a time, crossing the corrider softly, to the door of his wife's boudoir. He knocked lightly; there was the sound of swift footsteps and the musical rustle of a woman's skirts. It was the half hour before dinner. Clayton remembered with a sudden sense of delinquency, that he had not dressed for the meal! The door opened quietly.

"Why Dick!" she cried joyfully, "I've been waiting for you. I knew you would come to-day; something told me. It—it is our anniversary."

Clayton opened his arms.

RARE SOUTH AMERICAN BIRD

Seems to Be a Survival of the Period When Birds Were Evolved from Reptiles.

Specimens of the hoactzin, one of the most remarkable birds in the world, are being prepared by Nelson R. Wood, of the Smithsonian institute, for the ornithological exhibit at St. Louis, says a Washington report.

The bird is one with which people of the United States are not familiar. It is a native of Brazil and Guiana. The bird seems to be a survival of the Jurasic period, when birds were being evolved from reptiles and mammals had not made their appearance.

The archaeopetryx was perhaps one of the first birds evolved from the reptiles. It was contemporaneous with the phascolotherium, amphiterium and tricondon, three diminutive marsupials, resembling the modern opossum, that also branched off from the reptiles. The archaeopetryx had a tail, which, although it bore feathers, was more like that of a lizard than that of a bird. The wings were relatively small and had three digits, each terminated with a claw. It is more than likely that this bird could not only fly, but could also walk on all fours and climb trees.

The archaeopetryx had a toothed bill. The beak of the hoactzin is denticulated along the margin. The hoactzin is about the size of a Porto Rican parrot. The eyes are surrounded by patches of bare skin, and it has bristly lashes like those of the African hornbill. The head bears a crest of feathers. In color it is olive green, with a narrow whitish bar on the wings, brown underparts and a long tail tipped with yellow. Its breastbone is unlike that of any living bird. The keel, which is highly developed in the breastbone of the best flying birds, is cut away in front so that the hoactzin flies poorly.

The absence of a keel to the breastbone and the structure of the wishbone have doubtless been the cause of the bird developing an enormous crop, which, unlike that of other birds, is muscular and seems to fill other functions than of a store house for food.

The strongest thing about the bird, however, is that the young at the time they are hatched have a thumb, tipped with a claw, and the stories that the young of the hoactzin are able not only to walk on all fours, but also climb, mounting the bush with the aid of this claw, are strictly correct.

The hoactzin builds its nest in low bushes along the banks of streams, where it feeds on the wild arum. Feeding on this plant imparts to the bird an intolerable musky smell.

W. H. Bates states in his work, "The Naturalist on the Amazon," that to him the odor of the hoactzin was like that of "musk combined with wet hides," while Deville said it smelled like a cow stable. The hoactzin is thoroughly disliked by the people of Brazil and Guiana on account of its odor, its mischievous, prying habits and harsh, grating, hissing voice.

DEER AND DOGS FRIENDS.

Instances Where the Animals Have Played and Run Together Cited by Californian.

In the town of Oroville, Cal.—now a notable gold dredging center—where I live, I very recently saw a fawn, still in its spots, unconcernedly rambling about the main street; dogs that were in no wise accustomed to it went up, smelled it, as is their canine custom and passed n. The fawn was perfectly unconcerned, relates a writer in the Hartford Times.

Two years ago there was another deer, over half grown, in the same town, which had as its companion and safeguard a large Newfoundland. These animals were often seen playing together and went downtown together at their own desire. On these trips the Newfoundland seemed, by instinct, to know that the deer was at the mercy of other dogs, and saw to it that no dog molested the deer. The family owning these two attractive animals has moved from Oroville, taking their interesting friends.

Another nearly grown doe I saw last year (adjoining the same town) standing in a little creek with some cattle. I was told that it came and went to pasturage and to milking (of course the deer was not milked) daily with the cows. In 1897 I was at Eden Valley ranch for a month. A wild, rough country in Mendocino county, Cal., environs this gem. Big and small game is abundant there. The wild cattle in the "roughs" are the most interesting feature there.

The cattle dogs, wild hog dogs, bear dogs and deer dogs are taught to attack and pursue tirelessly. The most exciting chase and fight I ever witnessed was between these dogs and a great wild bear that succeeded in ripping two out of six of the largest and best trained dogs. The bear was finally secured alive and dragged into the corral at the tail of a riata, snubbed to the horn of the saddle of the chief vaquero.

For a month I saw a male and female fawn move with perfect unconcern among these dogs, and all lap milk from the same trough (the fawn does not lap but drinks like a pig and drinks milk like a starved pig). It was laughable to see them pushing each other while gulping milk. These dogs that ran off the mother doe were first to discover her young, but did not seize them as they would have done the doe. When strange dogs passing this ranch house on the road espied the fawns in the orchard or the meadow, they naturally "went for" the fawns. I expressed apprehension, but I was told by the wife of the proprietor that the home dogs kept a sharp outlook for strange dogs and always protected the fawns. I saw evidences there of this.

I know a gentleman in Virginia whose shepherd dog chased a tame deer all about the grounds at top speed to the infinite delight of both animals. After the race deer and dog would come up to their master.

Land That a Poverty-Stricken Man Was Not Bad Enough Off to Want.

Bourke Cockran was condemning a certain popular novel, relates the New York Tribune.

"This novel," he said, "is as poor and barren as Elmo county land."

"Is Elmo county land very poor and barren?" asked one of Mr. Cockran's interlocutors.

"Is it?" said he. "Well, I should say it is. Once two strangers rode on horseback through Elmo county, and the barrenness of the land amazed them. Nothing but weeds and rocks everywhere. As they passed a farmhouse they saw an old man sitting in the garden, and they said:

"'Poor chap! Poor, poverty stricken old fellow!'

"'Gents, I hain't so poor an' poverty stricken as ye think. I don't own none o' this land.'"

In the Spring.

"For years I was in very bad health. Every spring I would get so low that I was unable to do my own work. I seemed to be worse in the spring than any other time of the year. I was very weak and miserable and had much pain in my back and head. I saw Dodd's Kidney Pills advertised last spring and began treatment of them and they have certainly done me more good than anything I have ever used.

"I was all right last spring and felt better than I have for over ten years. I am fifty years of age and am stronger to-day than I have been for many years and I give Dodd's Kidney Pills credit for the wonderful improvement."

REACH THE SPOT.

To cure an aching back,
The pains of rheumatism,
The tired-out feelings,
You must reach the spot—get at the cause.
In most cases 'tis the kidneys.
Doan's Kidney Pills are for the kidneys.

Charles Bierbach, stone contractor, living at 2625 Chestnut St., Erie, Pa., says: "For two years I had kidney trouble and there was such a severe pain through my loins and limbs that I could not stoop or straighten up without great pain, had difficulty in getting about and was unable to rest at night, arising in the morning tired and worn out. The kidney secretions were irregular and deposited a heavy sediment. Doctors treated me for rheumatism but failed to help me. I lost all confidence in medicine and began to feel as if life were not worth living. Doan's Kidney Pills, however, relieved me so quickly and so thoroughly that I gladly made a statement to that effect for publication. This was in 1898, and during the six years which have elapsed I have never known Doan's Kidney Pills to fail. They cured my wife of a severe case of backache in the same thorough manner."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Bierbach will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

Reform in Almsgiving

By PROF. CHAS. R. HENDERSON,
Head of Department of Sociology, Chicago University.

THE old ideas of almsgiving were the result of ignorance and fear. We of this later day are making discoveries that are giving us an insight into our duties to those around us, and with our science, which our foregathers did not have, we will be criminal in our negligence if we do not change our methods of relieving poverty.

We have had enough of the old-fashioned method of giving to the poor, while blind to the conditions that make them so. What we need now is to know the poor. By this is meant that we must gain a knowledge of their lives and an insight into their conditions, which will come to us only through close personal contact. Let us have no more long distance charity.

It is bad enough to be poor and hear the wolf scratching at the door without having some sanctimonious church member come to the house offering a trifle of money and telling you that the reason you are in the midst of sickness and suffering is that your father was a drunkard or your own life has been sinful.

This is the part that the ignorant have taken in what the world calls charity. Now, by learning to know the poor we have made great discoveries. I know that drunkenness and laziness and vices are responsible for much suffering and poverty, but there are other causes.

We have intelligent citizens, who make our own government and laws, and how much suffering of the poor is due to our carlessness and the vice of open eyed misgovernment?

How much suffering is due to the ill regulated workshop, to the condition of our city water, to the filth of our streets and alleys, and to our lack of the feeling of responsibility for the wholesomeness of their homes?

Charity's demand of justice is three-fold. It includes, first, a personal understanding of conditions of life by personal investigation; second, an equal division of the burden of legislative conditions that cause poverty and suffering; third, a spreading abroad of the spirit of co-operation.

Sacrifice of School Children

By PROF. WILLIAM E. WATT.
Principal of the Graham School, Chicago.

HOSTS of public school children are killed off by school anxieties and agitation, and many others are crippled for life. The practice of forcing children to work in the schoolroom at times when their minds are unfitted for work and the attempt to pound mathematics into heads aching for history or English is to be deprecated. Teachers and mothers are to be blamed for laying the foundation of a stunted, deformed generation, mentally and physically.

Laziness should often be encouraged, both in the schoolroom and in the home. The mind is required to be lazy occasionally, if it is to be worth anything at maturity, just as is the body. We commend the baby when it stretches and say it is growing; but we are apt to scold the pupil for the same act when there is equally good sense for it. The teacher who never lets the attention of her pupils lag, but keeps arousing and urging all in the room all day, and every day, usually gets the praise of her superiors; but she is merely driving the rat to spin the squirrel wheel to his ultimate destruction, and is making rapid strides personally toward nervous prostration or the insane asylum.

We know the mother would soon kill off all her children by such a course. The killing off in the school by the same process is not so short a work and it is not so readily noticed. But it is there. Hosts of children are killed by school anxieties and agitation—others are crippled for life. We pay much attention to the child who has the stomach ache; but when mental dyspepsia strikes the same child as a result of indiscreet stuffing at school we are ignorant in the matter and leave it to the teacher to say whether the same dose shall be given to-morrow and packed down with the directness of the paving ram.

Work done under compulsion is of little value. It is right to compel the child to do housework or to help on the farm or in the shop, but it is barbaric to force mental work upon a child whose brain is tired.

Some children have discovered that they can rest in the schoolroom by pretending to be at work. They make a show of diligence and run their eyes over their books while their thoughts are on something more congenial and which requires no strain.

Avarice the Nation's Peril

By HON. W. D. HOARD,
Former Governor of Wisconsin.

BUSINESS—the gain of money at any price—does it not explain the demon of graft that is debauching the very tissue of American manhood, that is corrupting our national, state and municipal life, that is asking from us the sacrifice of honor, honesty, patriotism, Heaven?

What is patriotism? The sacrifice of our selfish interests to the good of the many. What is treason? The sacrifice of the good of the many to our selfish interests.

What is good government? The enforcement of law. We are surprised to have a president who believes in enforcing law.

Solomon preferred wisdom to money. Why? It seems strange to us. The wisdom lay in the fact that he preferred.

What has civilized Christianity? The growth of knowledge among the plain people, not among the learned or the ecclesiastics.

It requires but little brains to be a critic only.

Religion must first be ethical, then worshipful. Reverse the order and you have the bigot and the fanatic. Some men are worshipful at times and then greedy. They are called hypocrites. They are not; they are only inconsistently sincere.

Trust the people, said Lincoln. Come to think of it, whom else can you trust as long as you are here?

The poor, not the rich, are the hope of the nation. They have the virtue, they do the work. As we have not enough poor, let us import them. We are doing it.

The philosophers teach us the folly of despising common things. Yet a certain style of culture is peculiar for despising the common people. A learned professor irritably asked an Irishman why the stupidity was committed of putting the railway station so far from the business quarter of the town. The Irishman pulled his pipe from his mouth. "Sure, sir, in order to have it clost by the tracks."

Typical Winter Conditions at Vladivostok

It Is a Bleak, Black, Frozen City in Which There Is But Little to Be Found That Is Cheerful

IMAGINE a black world frozen stiff, and that is Vladivostok in winter. Wherever water once flowed in bay or harbor, a wide, gray-white road runs, and these are the only two colors in a wide, still world. There are no trees. The large forests, of which the old travelers wrote, have long since been cut down for fuel, and the immediate hills behind the town are all bare as a man's hand. Once behind these hills the endless rolling plain begins which is Siberia.

Directly summer is over, all the wealth of flowers, which for five short months have simply rioted in the land, go black, die out; the earth freezes stiff. Winter has come, and black and stiff the world remains. In Vladivostok there is little snow; sometimes a gray dust, more like powdered ice than snow, blows over the land, but for the most part it is a black, not a white world of frost. And in its way it is more impressive. The earth freezes deep, many feet down, and is hard as iron. The whole harbor turns a kind of dull gray; that, too, is frozen deep. To keep any sort of channel open, the powerful ice-breaker has to go through its work twice a day. Twelve hours of an ordinary winter's day is often sufficient to block the passage. And all this in a town in the same parallel as Marseilles, France!

SLEDGE RACING ON THE HARBOR IN WINTER.

To those who have never experienced it, real Arctic cold is almost inconceivable. They cannot grasp the difference between 10 and 50 degrees of frost; it remains to them merely one of numbers. Indeed, when once the winter has gone it is sometimes difficult to remember really how cold it was; but during the four severe winter months themselves it is a very solid and serious fact. Every night you go to sleep remembering, if you are new to such things, that a failure of the furnace which heats the house means death; you might wake first to know you were frozen or you might not. In the poorer houses the inhabitants sleep on the stoves, and the weak ones often die. Drunkenness here is often attended with a swift retribution, which does not in the least prevent it; and every day people are taken up frozen from the gutters, the spirit which is in them only hastening the freezing, so that the carts which are always sent round to pick up the sailors when the crews of the men-of-war are ashore have to do their work quickly. In the summer-time, when there is not the same need for hurry, the men often lie about in gutters until the afternoon. The word "gutters" is used simply to designate a certain part of the roadway; gutters, as such, do not exist. The drunkenness among all classes of Russians is simply appalling; officers think nothing of taking a tumblerful of raw whisky as a modest "bitters" before dinner.

IN THE VLADIVOSTOK MARKET.

When the wind is not blowing the cold is endurable, though five fur-lined overcoats are not at all an extraordinary amount of winter wrap. You wear, of course, fur boots, fur gloves, fur caps. Women have their skirts and bodices lined with fur; wild cat, being both soft and very warm, is often used for this purpose. It is quite astonishing the partiality for such things as oily sardines that one develops.

In the winter time the bazaar is really a sight; everything is frozen stiff. The huge long sturgeon from the interior stand in rows on their very sharp-pointed noses; baskets full of little fishes are piled together like chips of ice; frozen birds hang down in long festoons, and the municipality is spared one trouble—it never has to make away with food "gone bad." The bazaar is almost entirely in the hands of the Chinese, the tall, dark, rough Chinese of the north, who live wrapped up in wadded cotton clothes, until they look like bundles of bedding. Without the Chinese and the Japanese, Vladivostok would find it hard to exist. They do all the work of the town; the Russians garrison and misgovern it; the Chinese, the Germans, the Japanese, and the other nations trade in it, and the ticket-of-leave men from Saghalien drive the droskies. These last are not political exiles, but criminals—mostly murderers; and they all live together in a settlement about two miles outside the town, under strict police supervision.

The great sport of Vladivostok in the winter is sledge-racing, and when once the harbor is frozen over a proper course is marked off, and everyone who owns a horse takes part. A Russian horse is a superb brute; he stands as high and looks as strong as an American cart-horse, but he goes like the wind. He will walk or he will gallop, but he does not condescend to do anything between. His harness is wierd and wonderful and very Russian, consisting primarily of a huge wooden half-hoop over the head—the keystone of the whole structure, which is attached to the shafts by winding long thin straps backwards and forwards. It takes hours to put this on, is always liable to come undone, and if undone is very dangerous. An English lady once related to me with horror how she was taken for a drive in Vladivostok, and the horse and carriage just went over everything—walls, banks, or whatever came in the way. It is quite true, a Russian horse does; and if you have once driven behind one you are never nervous again—you are either killed or cured.

In Vladivostok you take your daily skate as here your constitutional, and the most exciting thing to do is to sledge along the coast—dangerous because shore ice is never quite trustworthy—to, say, the original Askold, which does not lie sunk in Port Arthur, but is an island on the northeast coast of Siberia.

A. HERBAGE EDWARDS.

Costly Meal.

John E. Wilkie, of this city, chief of the secret service, entered the office of Assistant Secretary Armstrong in the treasury department and said in disgusted tones: "I ate a beefsteak the other day and it has just cost me $11.25" "Well," answered Armstrong, "I knew beef prices were rising, but I didn't think—" "It was this way," interrupted the secret service man: "The beefsteak cost me $1.25 and the first bite I took out of it I broke a tooth. The dentist looked me over and said there were so many improvements necessary in my jaw it would cost me $10." Mr. Armstrong listened to this tale with a severe expression. "Wilkie," he said, reproachfully, "you should eat more regularly. Then you will not attack your food so voraciously."

Spencer No Linguist.

As everyone know, Mr. Herbert Spencer was no linguist. His ill-health—partly associated in large measure with eye strain—prevented him from mastering German. He was similarly ignorant of Greek, whilst his Latin was of the scantiest. Nevertheless, his work did not suffer so much as one might expect from these disabilities. He was so entirely a pioneer—anticipated only by the Ionian thinkers of 25 centuries ago—that a reading acquaintance with German would have been of little use to him. On the other hand, his works have been widely translated, the wonderful little pamphlet on education being obtainable in some 15 languages, including Japanese.—London Chronicle.

A Tramp Joke.

Scribbler—What do you think of my tramp joke?

Editor—It is a misnomer. It has been worked to death.—Town Topics.

Miss Hapgood tells how she was cured of Fallopian and Ovarian Inflammation—and escaped an awful operation by using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I suffered for four years with what the doctors called Salpingitis (inflammation of the fallopian tubes) and ovaritis, which are most distressing and painful ailments, affecting all the surrounding parts, undermining the constitution, and sapping the life forces. If you had seen me a year ago, before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and had noticed the sunken eyes, sallow complexion, and general emaciated condition, and compared that person with me as I am today, robust, hearty and well, you would not wonder that I feel thankful to you and your wonderful medicine, which restored me to new life and health in five months, and saved me from an awful operation."—MISS IRENE HAPGOOD, 1022 Sandwich St., Windsor, Ont.

Ovaritis or inflammation of the ovaries or fallopian tubes which adjoin the ovaries may result from sudden stopping of the monthly flow, from inflammation of the womb, and many other causes. The slightest indication of trouble with the ovaries, indicated by dull throbbing pain in the side, accompanied by heat and shooting pains, should claim your instant attention. It will not cure itself, and a hospital operation, with all its terrors, may easily result from neglect.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I can truly say that you have saved my life, and I cannot express my gratitude to you in words.

"Before I wrote to you telling how I felt, I had doctored for over two years steady and spent lots of money in medicine besides, but it all failed to do me any good. My menses did not appear in that time, and I suffered much pain. I would daily have fainting spells, headache, backache and bearing down pain, and was so weak that it was hard for me to do my work.

"I used your medicine and treatment as directed, and after taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, menses appeared, my womb troubles left me, and I have been regular ever since. I used fourteen bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier together, and am now restored to perfect health. Had it not been for you, I would have been in my grave.

"I will always recommend your wonderful remedies, and hope that these few lines may lead others who suffer as I did to try your remedies."—MRS. T. C. WILLADSEN, R. R. No. 1, Manning, Iowa.

Such unquestionable testimony proves the power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over diseases of women.

Women should remember that they are privileged to consult Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., about their illness, entirely free.

THERE IS NO SLICKER LIKE TOWER'S FISH BRAND

Forty years ago and after many years of use on the eastern coast, Tower's Waterproof Oiled Coats were introduced in the West and were called Slickers by the pioneers and cowboys. This graphic name has come into such general use that it is frequently though wrongfully applied to many substitutes. You want the genuine. Look for the Sign of the Fish, and the name Tower on the buttons.

Republican Primaries

The Republicans of Garrett county are requested to assemble in primary meetings in their respective districts on SATURDAY, APRIL 30TH, 1904.

for the purpose of electing five delegates from each election district, to attend the county convention to be held in Oakland Maryland, on to select three delegates to attend the Sixth Congressional District Convention to be held at ROCKVILLE, ON MAY 10th, 1904, at noon, to nominate a candidate to represent the said Sixth Congressional District of the United States; also to elect two district delegates and two alternates to National Convention at Chicago June 21st, 1904, one Presidential elector and one member of the Republican Board of Appeals, and delegates to the State Convention at Baltimore, May 11th 1905.

The Baltimore convention will elect delegates at-large to the National convention at Chicago.

The members of the Republican county committees in the various districts are requested to make all necessary arrangements for the holding of these primary meetings.

AUSTIN BROWN, Chairman.

Passing of Mr Gorman.

When Senator Gorman triumphed in Maryland and was returned to the United States Senate he was heralded throughout the countty as the coming man in Democratic politics. He was at once restored to his old position of Democratic leader in the Senate—an unusual distinction—and his name was discussed throughout the country in connection with the Presidential nomination. The political happenings of the year, however, have demonstrated that Mr. Gorman is not the safe, invincible leader he once was. He has not been able to lead his colleagues in the Senate in a number of important policies—notably the Panama Canal matter— nor has he fared much better in Maryland, where the Democratic Legislature elected Isidor Rayner, United States Senator, to succeed Senator McComas while Mr. Gorman was using all his influence to accomplish the election of another. As a result of these developments Mr. Gorman does not appear to be any longer a factor in the contest for the Presidential nomination.

COLONEL WATTERSON says: "Hearst has no more chance of being nominated than he has of being carried to heaven in a wicker basket." The Colonel could have been briefer and just as strong by leaving off the words "in a wicker basket."

COMMENTING on the indorsement of President Roosevlet by the New York Republican convention, a Chicago paper says: "If the President had remained in the navy department there is not the slightest reason to suppose that he could have made himself a big national figure in the routine of office." Possibly. The suggestion might be amplified by saying that if Abraham Lincoln had remained in his law office at Springfield, Ill., he would never have become a big figure in American history; if U. S. Grant had continued in business at Galena he never would have become becomePresident of the United States; if William McKinley had never entered the Union army and made a good record as a soldier he might never been elected to Congress and subsequently as President; if Grover Cleveland had never been elected mayor of Buffalo he might never have been elected President, and so on. Perhaps if none of them had been born they would never have been heard of.

Will Dig Well It Presented Them.

The well-boring contractors who were asking for more money from the Tuscarora Mining Co. with a part of a well in the Narrows near Cumberland, seems to be working now for a scheme whereby they may finish the well. They so far have gotten the machinery, worth $5,000, and $7,000 in cash. They have gotten the well down to within 500 feet of oil and now they file a bill and lay attachment for $3,000. They want this paid and the company has been trying to raise the dough. The contractors say they will forgive the debt and keep the machinery if the company will give them the hole and release any rights to it. Then they will go ahead and finish it at their own expense. They say they do not know if there is oil there or not but they were willing to take a fling at it on their own hook. The company has not filed an answer yet.—Hagerstown Mail.

A MEMORABLE SUMMERLESS YEAR

"The Year Without a Summer," Was the Coldest Ever.

While everone is speaking of the present season as being remarkable in its characteristics, a correspondent has gathered some facts of the year 1816, known as "the year without a summer," saysthe New York Tribune. Few persons now living can recollect it, but it was the coldest ever known throughout Europe and America. The following is a brief abstract of the weather during each month of the year:

January was mild, so much so as to render fires almost needless in parlors. December previous was very cold.

Febuary was not very cold; with exception of a few days it was mild, like its predecessor.

March was cold and boisterous during the first part of it; the remainder was mild. A great freshet on the Ohio and Kentucky Rivers caused a great loss of property.

April began warmer, but grew colder as the month advanced, and ended with snow and ice and a temperature more like winter than spring.

May was more remarkable for frowns and smiles. Buds and fruits were frozen; ice formed half an inch thick; corn was killed and the fields again and again planted, until deemed too late.

June was the coldest ever known in this latitude. Frost, ice and snow were common. Almost every green thing was killed. Fruit was nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, several inches in Maine, three inches in interior New York, and also in Massachusetts. Considerable damage was done in New Orleans in consequence of the rapid rise in the river. The suburbs were covered with water, and the roads were only passable with boats.

July was accompanied with frost and ice. On the fifth ice formed of the thickness of a common window glass throughout New England. New York and some parts of Pennsylvania. Indian corn was nearly all destroyed; some favorably suited fields escaped. This was true of some of the hill farms of Massachusetts.

August was more cheerless, if possible, than the summer months already passed. Ice was formed half an inch thick. Indian corn was so frozen that the greater part of it was cut down and dried for fodder. Almost every green thing was destroyed, both in this country and in Europe. Papers received from England stated that it would be remembered by the present generation that the year of 1816 was a year in which there was no summer." Very little corn ripened in New England and the Middle States. Farmers supplied themselves from corn produced in 1815 for the need of the spring of 1817. It sold at $4 to $5 a bushel.

September furnished about two weeks of the mildest weather of the season. Soon after the middle it became very cold and frosty; ice formed a quarter of an inch thick.

October produced more than its share of cold weather; frost and ice were common.

November was cold and blustering. Snow fell so as to make good sleighing.

December was mild and comfortable.

New Postoffice.

A new postoffice in this county to be known as Swallow Falls, has been established by the Department with Mr. George D. Browning as postmaster. The office is located on the banks of the turbulent Youghiogheny river, north of Oakland, and is served by star route from the Oakland postoffice.

Young Plants

Every farmer knows that some plants grow better than others. Soil may be the same and seed may seem the same but some plants are weak and others strong.

And that's the way with children. They are like young plants. Same food, same home, same care but some grow big and strong while others stay small and weak.

Scott's Emulsion offers an easy way out of the difficulty. Child weakness often means starvation, not because of lack of food, but because the food does not feed.

Scott's Emulsion really feeds and gives the child growing strength.

Whatever the cause of weakness and failure to grow—Scott's Emulsion seems to find it and set the matter right.

B. & O. to Add More Trains.

The spring schedule meeting of operating and passenger officials of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad company began Friday at Camden Station, Baltimore. In addition to the usual increase in train service for the spring and summer months, there will be a number of additional trains added for the World's Fair service to St. Louis.

A proposition is also under consideration to inaugurate a service between Washington and New York every two hours. This will resemble the hourly service between Baltimore and Washington, under which trains leave each terminal on the hour.

FOR SALE

Or for Rent for Summer of 1904

At Deer Park, Maryland, Main Line B. & O. R. R., to St. Louis, 2500 Feet Above Tidewater, a Country Place of about 185 Acres.

"GLAMORGAN."

Thoroughly equipped as a farm and bounded by three county roads, insuring convenience and privacy. It is well adapted to public use such as a sanatorium or to private residences, five sites with beautiful views and appurtenant acres, being reached by its three miles of private pleasure drives through the woods.

The dwelling house was built from plans by Hewitt Bros., of Philadelphia. The plumbing is by Ogelsby, of the same city. It has recently been put in complete order and repainted, and is replete with the modern appliances of a gentleman's residence. It is within ten minutes' walk of postoffice and railroad station and within one mile of the Deer Park Hotel. Its general plan is as follows:

Wide porches surround three faces, terminated, on a level, with billiard room.

I. FIRST FLOOR. Parlor, hall with main stair case, library, dining room and lavatory.

II. BACK BUILDING. Stair case to cellar, in which are furnace, gas machine (supplied by outside gasometer), wine closet, pantry (hot and cold water), back stairs to second story back building. Laundry—3 stationary tubs, hot and cold water in each; ironing stove, fire hose on reel and special boiler. Kitchen, with range, sink and all applicances. Back porch, ten feet from which is ice house practically inexhaustible in summer; servants' bath rooms, etc.

I. SECOND FLOOR. Two communicating chambers, with bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; one chamber communicating with its bath room; total, four chambers with three bath rooms.

II. BACK BUILDING, 2nd FLOOR. Four chambers, two closets, bath room with W. C. adjoining.

THIRD FLOOR. Two chambers, two large lofts.

Every room has gas fixture and eight rooms have open fire-places in addition to furnace registers.

The water supply is unexceptionable, its every source being from springs rising within the confines of the place and all having passed analytical examination. Two tanks (each in contact with outside air) having a combined capacity of 14,500 gallons, a wind mill a horse power and an overshot wheel supplying the motor. Three dams (likewise spring water) contribute the ice supply and two of them are stocked with fish. The outbuildings are a barn with stalls for six horses and eight carriages, with ample storage for hay, straw and oats and having a coachman's room, a tenant's house of five rooms, a large cow and sheep stable and numerous sheds, etc.

This property is without incumbrance and possession can be given in May, 1904.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

Letter to F. P. Green.

Dear Sir: If it took 10 gallons to paint your house last time with somebody else's paint, and take 8 with Devoe, we save you $8 or 10; for painting costs two or three times as much as paint.

Mr. Ezra Rathmell, Williamsport, Pa. always used 11 gallons of mixed paint for his house; Devoe took 6.

But that isn't all; that's only first cost; how long will it wear?

The paint, that goes furtherst in covering, wears best too.

All paint, true paint, and full-measure, are on one side; part paint, false paint, and short-measure are on the other. What can you expect?

Yours truly
F. W. Devoe & Co

If your step uncle has an aunt who has a nephew whose wife has a cousin that is married to an old friend of your wife's sister, whose grandfather lived in the same town with an old school-mate of yours, whose soni-n-law is now in St. Louis, you should at once renew the acquaintance with a view of saving hotel bills while attending the World's Fair. This scheme can be worked in many instances.

The Oakland Normal school opened on Monday of this week for a term of ten weeks with Prof. H. A. Loraditch in charge. The enrollment for the first week is very satisfactory and it is expected that the number of scholars will be very materially increased by next Monday when the second week of the term begins. Prof. A. L. Lee, who is favorably known all over the county as an instructor of merit, has been secured as an assistant in the school. Prof. Loraditch is exerting all his energies to make the school a success.

The month of March, just closed, had none of the remarkable characteristics of the preceding months since the first of January. The average temperature for 16 years is 43 degrees. The highest temperature was 80 degrees on the 22nd and the lowest was 18 on the 4th. The greatest daily range was 45 degrees on the 3rd. The highest velocity of the wind was 42 miles per hour on the 3rd. The rainfall was 4.44 inches, slightly above the average for 15 years. There were killing frosts on eleven days.

In and near Deer Park, there are three notable octogenarians—Luke Male, in his 85th year; W. E. George, in his 84th year, and Christian Gensenyeager, in his 82nd year. Mr. Male is rather feeble, but the others, Messrs. George and Gensenyeager, are quite vigorous and hearty. All of them attribute their longevity to a long residence in the pure and invigorating atmosphere of this section. None of them ever use intoxicants in any shape, though they indulge in tobacco moderately. Mr. Gensenyeager's progeny have dropped the first part of the very long name, being known as Yeager, by which the father is known in and about Deer Park.

HIS DEAR CHILDREN.

Look at his hands, they are knotted;
  See how his shoulders are bent;
In toiling and gathering riches
  All of his years have been spent;
Striving for gain has deformed him,
  But great is the wealth he has won
To leave to his care-free daughter
  And give to his polished son,
And they blush for shame at the manner
  In which their father began,
For she has a maid to attend her
  And Reggie possesses a man.

From that which the world thinks is pleasure
  He has steadily turned aside;
All of his wit and his power
  To gaining have been applied;
The poor little shop where he started
  Stands idle beside the way,
And the papers are publishing pictures
  And stories thereof today;
He shaves himself in the morning
  And saves wherever he can—
A French maid dresses his daughter
  And Reggie possesses a man.

He is proud to think that his children
  Have a right to the pride they show;
He is proud of the way he has risen,
  Of the start he made long ago;
And they are impatiently waiting
  To build him a monument,
To buy the old shop and destroy it
  And boast of a proud descent,
For his hands are knotted and clumsy,
  Showing us how he began—
A maid serves his glorious daughter
  And Reggie possesses a man.

The Metamorphosis of Lucretia Pepper

By HOWARD DEVINE

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

SAMUEL HOPEFIELD married Lucretia Pepper with his eyes wide open and despite the warning and protest of all their mutual friends. Indeed he married her despite her own fair warning.

"If ever I marry," it had been her habit to declare with a toss of her independent head, "I will be the commander in chief of the domestic establishment. Give up my liberty to become the handmaid of a man? Catch me! If ever I marry, it will be understood that the clinging vine idea will not prevail."

These and many similar expressions elucidating her state of mind regarding matrimony had found utterance in the very presence of Samuel Hopefield as well as all the others of her acquaintance. So you can readily see that it was altogether his own fault if the marriage proved disappointing. Lucretia was honest and open and straightforward about it, and Samuel knew just what to expect. But when a man falls in love with a girl it is seldom indeed that he will heed warnings. And Lucretia certainly was a most attractive girl, both as to personal attractions and graces of mind and character.

So Samuel shut his eyes, apparently, to the threatening aspect of her mind regarding the marriage relation and married her.

The strange thing about it was that he showed no disappointment and the marriage seemed as happy and peaceful as could be desired. The weeks sped, the honeymoon passed and while the world waited for the crash they were sure would come, it came not at all. Lucretia appeared to be more and more affectionate and tender toward Samuel until she became positively deferential.

At first, to be sure, she talked some to her friends in the old defiant strain.

"I get no meals at all hours for my man," she said to a group at the sewing society one day. "Sam gets home at six o'clock for supper or he gets only a cold pick-up."

But presently it was noticed that the Hopefields were having supper at any time from six to 8:30, and the men reported that Samuel was the most careless man in town as to breaking away from business or pleasure to get home to meals.

"Why, he'll start a game of billiards after six," reported one of his cronies.

"And you ought to see the swell supper he has when he gets home at any old time," broke in another. "He dragged me home with him the other evening. Lucretia was not expecting company, but everything was out of sight.

"She always said she never would endure having company brought home without warning," chorused several ladies present.

"She was as sweet as a peach about it," stoutly contended the man, "and the perfect soul of hospitality."

Somebody asked Samuel about it one day. He looked surprised.

"Why, she's the sweetest dispositioned girl in the world," he said. "Didn't you fellows know that. I knew it all along."

In order to understand the metamorphosis of Lucretia Pepper under the Hopefield system it will be necessary to take the reader within the sacred circle of the Hopefield married life and lift the curtain upon a few events which were landmarks in the lady's development.

After the mystic words had been spoken by the clergyman, which gave into Samuel Hopefield's eager arms the fair form of his desired Lucretia, and after the honeymoon trip was over, the pair settled down in a cozy little home, all spick and span new in furnishings—furnishings which had been selected, needless to say, by Lucretia, without so much as a word of consultation with Samuel.

Lucretia started in right, according to her theories of what married life should be and how a man should be trained properly from the first. She laid down the rules of the household, very sweetly, but very firmly, and the schedule as to hours for meals and the other regular events of domestic life.

"You know, Samuel," she said, "it simplifies very greatly the work and management of a house if things move along methodically and according to a well-defined system. It is just as easy to form habits of punctuality and system if we start right. So I am determined that we shall start right."

Samuel listened with becoming meekness and agreed with her thoroughly. The system was inaugurated, and all went well for some days. Then one evening Samuel was a half hour late to supper—was detained at the office, he explained. He found Lucretia just finishing her evening meal, grim and determined. Everything was cold. He seated himself at the table with Micawber-like cheerfulness, and tackled the cold and soggy victuals, all the time talking affably. Lucretia was dignified and uncompromising.

"I am sorry that you were detained, Samuel," she said, "because we had such a good supper."

"Oh, the supper's all right," he replied. "But I'm sorry on your account I was detained. I'm afraid it makes you more trouble."

"I can stand it if you can," she replied, grimly, as she poured him some lukewarm coffee.

But Samuel refused to be an object of sympathy or to permit an atmosphere of embarrassment to gather. He rattled on in a most interesting manner, telling Lucretia interesting bits of gossip he had heard during the day, and equally interesting things that had happened at the office. She had never seen Samuel in such high spirits and found herself responding to his conversation. Once she was betrayed into a hearty laugh.

Fishing a second mutton chop from the congealed white gravy surrounding it, the young husband tackled it with apparent zest.

"Where in the world do you buy such fine mutton chops, Lucretia?" he said. "Mother never had such fine ones at home—and she had a reputation as a marketer. Or, is it the cooking? Somehow there is flavor to them that is simply great."

Lucretia gazed at him intently, but there was no suggestion of sarcasm in his voice or looks, and he was consuming the chops with a relish that defied suspicion.

As he concluded a hearty meal of cold and soggy things and wound up with a second cupful of the lukewarm coffee, he smacked his lips and said:

"If matters should go wrong and I should die and leave you unprovided for, Lucretia, you just go to some swell caterer or restaurant and ask for the privilege of making one batch of coffee for them. Make 'em let you do it once and you can ask your own price. I've been a coffee drinker all my life, but I never found any like you make."

That evening Lucretia's mother came over and Samuel did nothing but sing the praises of his wife's chops and coffee. He was too enthusiastic and persistent to suspect.

For some days he was promptly on time to supper. Then one day he was a half hour late again. Lucretia was a little cross, but the chops and coffee were piping hot. In fact, Lucretia made both fresh after Samuel came. This happened several times. Sometimes Samuel was more than a half hour late. One night he arrived an hour late and found that Lucretia had not yet had supper. She explained, with symptoms of sulkiness, that she had had a hard day, and felt too tired to cook two suppers. Samuel was all sympathy, and roundly cursed the necessity that made him late. He was delighted, however, at his good fortune in having her company in partaking the meal. After this she generally waited for him, once in awhile letting him sup alone in order to demonstrate that she had not given in.

One day he brought a friend home to supper without warning. The atmosphere in the house went down nine degrees lower than the thermometer would register. Lucretia declined point-blank to make any change in her plans, and certainly it was a skimpy meal, and Lucretia sat like a stone image at the feast. The friend was embarrassed, but Samuel was delightfully oblivious to the the trouble and fairly bubbled with wit and small talk. After supper he produced cigars, and with his friend sat for a good two hours at the table chatting and telling stories, while Lucretia fairly frothed at the mouth waiting to clear the table.

The atmosphere continued pretty chilly for some days, but it never touched Samuel.

"You have found another admirer, Lucretia," he said, next evening. "Tom says it was the coziest and most delightful little supper he ever attended—wants to come again. He's particularly crazy about your tea biscuit. By Jove! they were good last night. But particularly he's stuck on the splendid homelike feeling here. Says if he could find a girl who had good sense like you who knew enough to leave men folks alone and still maintain her dignity and place as the real mistress of the house, he'd marry—and that's a great compliment, because Tom is a confirmed old bachelor, you know."

And for days wherever they went, Samuel would talk of scarcely anything but the delightful little supper, and Lucretia's grace as hostess, "when, by Jove, she didn't even know I was going to bring him."

"I didn't know how she managed it without any notice," he said to her mother, "but she couldn't have had a sweller layout if the invitation had been given a week before."

Some days later he dropped in with another friend unexpectedly. They were compelled to wait some time for supper, but it was a stunner, and afterward the ash trays and matches appeared beside the coffee cups. And Lucretia was at her best as an entertainer.

Other domestic matters adjusted themselves in much the same manner as they arose. Samuel was irrepressibly cheerful and flattering, and could not be gotten to admit that anything Lucretia did was wrong. And Lucretia took more and more delight in living up to Samuel's high opinion of her.

And they lived happy ever afterward.

The moral of this story is that you can catch more flies with molasses than with vinegar.

Distrust of Monopoly

By PRESIDENT ELIOT,
Of Harvard University.

ALL possible alleviations and defenses being taken into account, it must be confessed that the prospect of encountering a combination of a perfect labor union and a perfect employers' association, both engaged in providing a necessary of life, and both bent in raising its price, is a formidable one for society at large. Democratic society has, by its legislation and by its public opinion, made such a combination possible, and democratic society must guard against dangers which, in its pursuit of liberty, it has endangered.

The present tendencies of labor unions and employers' associations suggest strongly the expediency of establishing over them governmental inspection and control, and this for two reasons—first, that both kinds of associations soon become monopolistic, and, secondly, that they are secret societies. Democratic government, like despotic government, dislikes secret societies, particularly if they are apt to resort to violence for the enforcement of their demands. In all social and industrial strife it is immeasurably better to use the great forces of publicity, discussion, and fellow feeling before physical conflicts take place, rather than after they have occurred.

Whoever gets a monopoly—be it one man or 100,000 men—invariably tries to keep other people from sharing his exclusive privilege. Any monopolistic classification must cause great abridgments of personal liberty among all sorts and conditions of men. Moreover, since the fundamental object of the labor union or the employers' association is always the pecuniary benefit of its class, these organizations are providing democratic society with exhibitions of class selfishness, which, in other countries, society and government have been manifested by classses quite different from those that now manifest it, as, for example, nobilities, priesthobds, and soldieries. The world has had bitter experience of the evils resulting from the class selfishness of these aristocratic, ecclesiastical, and military combinations; and democracy does well to distrust the new developments of class selfishness, different though the classes be that now manifest this dangerous quality.

QUAINT ENGLISH CUSTOM.

Pancake Tossing Ceremony That Comes Down from the Days of Queen Bess.

There is probably no old English custom so rich in interesting memories as the pancake-tossing ceremony of which the hall of Westminster school was the scene recently, says the Westminster Gazette. The custom, which is known to the boys by the unaesthetic name of "Grease," has an unbroken history which takes us back to the days of Queen Bess, when as many as 300 boys would scramble in one tumultuous heap for the possession of a solitary pancake. Heneage Finch, first earl of Nottingham, grovelled with the rest long years before he subsided into the no less coveted Woolsack. John Dryden, the parson's boy from Northamptonshire, struggled on the floor with the young Christopher Wren; and from the crowd of pancake-snatchers in 1743 you might have picked out William Cowper, Warren Hastings and Charles Churchill, all very small boys, to whom the pancake loomed much larger than the laurels they later won. And among the scrambling crowds of other years were John Locke, Charles Longley (destined to be the primate of all England), Edward Gibbon, Lord Raglan, and many another boy who was to win much greater trophies in the world outside the school walls.

Then think of the stories those walls could tell had they but tongues. Edward the Confessor watched the building of the arches upon which the "school" rests; King John was signing Magna Charta when the very walls which re-echoed the boys' shouts this morning began to rise on the site of the dormitory in which generations of Benedictine monks had slumbered. Boys were learning their lessons in the same hall years before Oliver Cromwell was born; and for three centuries all the classes of Westminster school were held where the pancake is tossed to this day.

CALLED THE HAMBAG FISH.

Name Given in New Jersey to an Interesting Species, the Orange Filefish.

"Ah, I see you have some hambag fish here," said a Jerseyman who was looking along the tanks in the aquarium, relates the New York Sun, as he paused in front of one containing two fine adult specimens of the creature known hereabouts as the orange filefish.

There are few common fish that have not a variety of names; and the Jerseyman's name for the orange filefish is rather appropriate. The fish has somewhat the outline as well as the color of the yellow bags in which smoked hams were once put up.

The two specimens in the aquarium are the survivors out of four taken in Gravesend bay in June last. One of them is yellow all over, the other is brown in color over three-quarters of the surface of its body and of a bright light yellow over the remainder.

The orange filefish is homely in shape and as thin-bodied as an ordinary flatfish, but, unlike flatfish, in this respect, which swims flatwise, the filefish swims with its body edgewise in the water, and commonly carrying its head more or less down. Sometimes when not swimming it drops its head so far that the fish seems to be standing on its head in the water.

Odd in shape as it is, and odd in action, and withal bright colored, it is a very striking creature, and the two specimens of it here are among the most attractive of the aquarium's exhibits.

These two orange filefishes are the first that have ever been carried here through the winter, making a record for the species in captivity.

A Great Traveler.

Mr. Rider Haggard has travelled many thousands of miles, from Iceland to Mexico, in search of material and local color for his novels.

SHOE-REPAIRING SUPPLIES.

Household Kits of Cobblers' Tools Are in General Use Throughout the Country.

"It was not so very many years ago," said a dealer in shoe supplies, to a New York Sun man, "that you saw in every cobbler's shop a side of sole leather, or, it might be, a roll of such leather standing over in one corner, the stock from which he cut his supply of soles, as he needed them, in repairing shoes. But now from many thousands of such shops this once familiar feature has disappeared. Instead the cobbler buys soles already cut out.

"Cut soles are made in a great variety of sizes and shapes. The cobbler can now buy cut soles and get exactly what he wants for less than he can buy the leather and cut them out himself.

"About 50 per cent. of the cobblers of New York and this part of the country now buy cut soles; in the south now about 25 per cent. buy them. In the west about 75 per cent. of the cobblers buy them. They are apparently more progressive there than the people of the east.

"This is accounted for, I suppose, by the fact that there are more new communities there, and towns starting new are likely to start with everything modern. If you were going to install a new plant of any sort you would put in the very latest styles of machinery, while in older communities they cling more to old ways.

"And in the west, too, cut soles are sold to people who mend their own shoes. Taking them altogether, in all parts of the country there are many thousands who do this.

"There are plenty of people living scattered about the land who would have to go 25, 50, 75 miles, to get a cobbler, and this wouldn't pay. Or they may mend their own shoes for economy's sake.

"In old times the farmer or other head of a family who did this work had for it an improvised set of tools. But in these days he buys a household kit of cobblers' tools.

"In no trade has there been a greater advance than in that of shoe manufacturing. And no trade has been more highly specialized. For example, there are concerns that make nothing but shoe counters, and other establishments that turn out nothing but boot and shoe heels; and there is one big western concern that makes nothing but kits of cobblers' tools, turning out of household kits and other sorts a car load a day.

"A good many kits of cobblers' tools? Yes, a lot, I know, but this is a big country with lots of people in it, and there are other lands to supply.

"Well, the farmer or other man who mends his own shoes buys in these days a household kit of cobblers' tools, and he can also buy cut soles, getting just what he wants, and all handy to use."

Life-Saving St. Bernards.

St. Bernard dogs seems to retain their life saving instincts even in this country. A large specimen of that breed was recently seen at Keene, N. H., making a great fuss over what appeared to be an old coat partly buried in a snowbank. At last someone investigated the coat and found that there was a man inside of it who was almost dead from the cold. As soon as the dog saw that the man was to be properly cared for he went on his way.—Boston Transcript.

THE SOMETHING-WRONG PUZZLE

ABOUT TO TAKE TO THE WATER.
What Is Wrong with the Picture?

BRUIN THIN IN THE SPRING.

Stays Fat While in Hibernation, But Grows Gaunt When He Starts to Eat.

"Any one would naturally suppose," said a Pike county man, relates the New York Sun, "that after lying holed up sound asleep and without a mouthful to eat for four or five months, as they certainly have done this winter, bears would come out in the spring lean and scraggly, but that is just contrary to the facts in the case.

"The bear when he seeks winter quarters is perhaps the fattest thing on four legs. He doesn't swell up with fat, like a pig, but seems to go to fat all over.

"When he starts in to fatten up for his winter retirement a bear can eat a bushel of chestnuts at a time with ease. As he gets fat his stomach gets smaller and smaller, until, when he is in proper condition for wintering over, it hasn't capacity enough to hold a double handful of food.

"This fat sticks right by the bear all winter and keeps him warm. If you are after a bear for his grease, you kill your game either just before he goes into his hole in the fall or right after he comes out in the spring.

"In a week after a bear comes out he will be as lean as a razor-back hog, although he has been eating everything eatable he could lay his paws on since he woke up, and that's a good deal. A bear, after thus losing his flesh in the spring, will keep lean until he begins to fatten up again for the winter, and then he rolls up the fat as before.

"It seems odd that a bear should keep fat for months without having eaten a morsel of anything, and lose his flesh—or grease, rather—as soon as he begins to take in food, but that's the way the bear is made, and I don't see how we are going to help it.

"And, by the way, the bears are out in Pike county. Three are reported as having been killed already in the region south of the High Knob, and that without taking into account the two rat-like cubs that were with one of the bears killed, and starved to death for want of her."

GAMES JAPANESE PLAY.

Are Very Different from Those Played by the Young of This Country.

The passion for toys and games of all kinds is remarkably developed among Japanese children, and they are encouraged to play games in much the same way that children of other countries are urged to learn.

One of the most curious features about Japanese child life is that each season of the year has its own particular games. In fact, the games are distributed, as it were, and apportioned to different months—battledoor and shuttlecock being played at certain seasons of the year, ball at another, and so on. As for the dolls, they have a special fete day devoted to them, and in Japan dolls are as much a boy's plaything as a girl's.

The dolls of the Japanese boys are generally dressed to represent historical heroes; others are attired as the emperor and empress, or as heroic or legendary figures. Japanese children, too, on the "Feast of Dolls," give their dolls presents, and put them on shelves or seats in the best room in the house.

They also play at funny little cards, but, these, instead of being like English cards, each bear quotations representing the gems of Japanese poetical literature. The game consists of drawing a card with one-half of the quotation, and finding the other which bears its context.

There is also the "game of scents." This consists in burning various perfumes and guessing the scent in question by the smell of the smoke it creates—sometimes a very difficult matter, it is said.

Her New Game.

A little girl the other day illustrated two things—the difficulty of selecting the right noun of multitude and the inborn cruelty of childhood. She wanted a game—a game of her own invention. "What is the game?" asked the new nurse. The innocent eyes brightened as the answer came: "You be a poor little lame lamb and I'll be a flock of tigers."

Big Shrinkage in Pensions.

The burden of pensions has shrunk in ten years from $2.24 to $1.32 per $1,000 of taxable wealth.

MODERN BATTLES AT SEA.

Better Gunnery, But Less Pageantry Than There Was in Times Gone By.

Naval battles have been described by writers in the past as the most awe-inspiring spectacles the imagination could conceive. Perhaps they are to-day deserving of similar characterization, but there is less of romance attending them than in former times. Sea fighting in Lord Nelson's day was certainly picturesque, with its stripped crowds of men swarming about the encumbered decks and streaming flags from every mast. But these have gone with the towering ranges of sails and nimble sailors who leaped about aloft handling them even during the height of battle. The new man of war goes into the fight grim, unadorned and apparently proceeding by her own volition, like some unthinkable marine monster.

Far more terrible, but mercifully far more swift, will be the conflict between hostile fleets in the future. There will be scarcely any such thing as the lingering agony, long drawn out, of the old days of sea fighting. For one thing, modern ironclads and cruisers going into action will choose the lesser of two evils confronting them. Because of the deadly peril of splinters and of fire everything of wood in their fittings, even to the boats, will be cast away at the beginning of the fight.

Then, when the battle is joined, the seamen must needs have a heart of brass incased in triple steel, a mind that refuses to meditate upon the immediate possibility of one of those terrible 12-inch projectiles plunging down upon his vessel's deck, and out, amid the disintegration of all her ganglions of energy, through the bottom, rendering her an easy target to an uninjured foe and her sinking a matter of minutes.

The modern man of war will not, at any rate, prolong the agonies of her crew when she is scuttled. She will go down quick into the pit in a halo of steam, a whirling vortex of waves, and in five minutes from the commencement of her downward plunge there will be no sign that she has ever been, and only if other vessels be very near will there be any possible chance of saving the handful of stalwart swimmers whose superhuman struggles have wrenched them clear of the devouring down-dragging eddies.

The Gate of the Orient.

Entering the Suez canal from the Mediterranean at Port Said one is practically at the gate of the orient. As a fitting gate, however, to that oldest world of mystery and splendor, Port Said belies its title. Apart from its connection with the canal, it is notorious as having been the last refuge of the most desperate criminals of southern Europe. Until recently Port Said was not a safe place in which to stroll about at night. Still one may attain a just illustration there of the truly oriental conception that time was made only for slaves. Squatting on the quay, groups of Arabs may be seen gazing at, and apparently thinking about nothing in particular for hours together.—Michael White, in Four-Track News.

NEIGHBORS HOSTILE

SOUTH AMERICAN REPUBLICS AGAINST UNITED STATES.

Reasons for the Proposed Alliance Against Us—Fear Growing Fever of Expansion May Reach After Them.

Rumors are afloat as to the hostility of neighbors of ours to the south—Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Bolivia and Ecuador. Fearing that Uncle Sam has designs of annexing, or at least grasping after, the South American states, it is reported the above mentioned countries have formed against that ambitious one an alliance offensive and defensive.

That our interests are vital in the portion of South America north of the Amazon is unquestionable, and few of our citizens will gainsay there is necessity for religious observance of the Monroe doctrine in lands bordering the Caribbean, lands in the proximity to the Isthmus of Panama; but there seems to be a growing feeling among students of political conditions that the states farther to the south need not concern us so closely, in fact, that it would be well for the United States to withdrew altogether from these its Monroe protection.

With the exception of small strips of Ecuador and Brazil, the five republics in the reported alliance lie south of the equator, in the region certain statesmen suggest should be left to work out its own salvation. To be sure, this is a very large and important part of South America, a land of great wealth, of great possibilities, and we would very much dislike to see any other nation, or nations, getting possession down there. Let us glance a bit at the various countries making up so big a territory, possessing so much real and so much potential wealth.

First Argentina. The Argentine nation, founded in 1810, experienced the usual vicissitudes attendant on Latin-American experiments in self-government, but the present Argentine republic dates back to 1862; which number of years indicates stability and prosperity of an unusual degree for that region. From time to time revolutions have worked havoc, but the last one occurred 14 years ago, and at present peace reigns and is promised for the future. Argentina has now about 4,000,000 people within her borders; more than one-third are foreigners, and 92 per cent of the immigrants are of the Latin race. Only recently Americans have begun to come into the country, but it is thought they will ere long be an important factor. Buenos Aires, the capital and chief port of Argentina, stands at the mouth of the great La Plata river, and is the largest city in South America. It has a population of almost a million, a population rapidly increasing and made up of many foreigners; nearly four hundred thousand Italians; next the Argentines; then Spaniards, French and Germans, and a goodly number of English-speaking people. The city is the chief political and commerical center of the Argentine country, and a prodigious amount of shipping is entered at this port. Its splendid docks extend along the river front for five miles.

In Brazil, "the Portuguese half of South America," dwell 18,000,000 people, more than half the total number of folk counted for South America. This vast country, as yet practically undeveloped, has wonderfully rich resources. The United States takes about half of Brazil's exports (gets most of her coffee and millions of dollars worth of her rubber annually), and sends to her only one-fifth as much as it buys from her. The Germans, shrewdest and most hustling traders in lowest America, have absorbed the trade of various provinces of Brazil.

The Chileans Mr. Carpenter calls the Yankees of South America. There are about three million of them, alert, progressive, prosperous people. The Chilean commonwealth has been a well-ordered one in the main, not constantly disturbed by civil broils. It has warred with Bolivia and Peru as to boundary lines and had some internal troubles, but has maintained a government of stability and strength. This "long, slim land" is one of marvellous wealth, has great store of precious metals as well as other very valuable mineral deposits. Agriculture, however, is the chief business of the country, and there is a very rich farming class in Chile, people that buy many goods.

Concerning Ecuador but very little is known. It has 1,500,000 inhabitants, and is a land of revolutions. Bolivia is a land also practically unknown; of great extent, but a state of only 2,000,000 people. It has rich mineral deposits, but is a primitive land, in its present stage of development not much of a market for America. The Germans have control of the foreign trade.

ABOUT NEW-CHWANG

CONDITIONS WHICH PREVAIL AT MANCHURIAN TREATY PORT.

Summers Are Mild and Delightful, While the Winters Are Cold and Severe—Russian Warship in Peril.

A glance at the map shows that the city of Newchwang is directly in the pathway of the present Russian-Japanese war, and this treaty port of Manchuria is almost certain to become the scene of fighting and possible Russian defeat and Japanese occupation. It is more than likely that before Russia is able to get her immense army into the field for action that the aggressive Japs will have driven the forces of the czar back as far as Harbin.

There is at Newchwang at the present time a Russian warship, unable, on account of the ice in the river, to move. Her guns were left at the fort at the mouth of the river when she came up last fall to go into winter quarters. Unable to move and without armament, she would be at the mercy of the Japanese should they capture the place soon. But it is probable that the Russians would blow up their ship and destroy it rather than have it fall into the hands of the enemy.

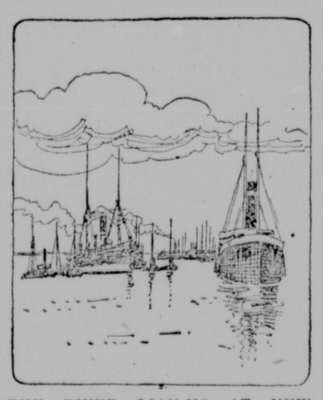
Newenwang is situated on a branch of the Liau-ho river, a considerable stream. Its port is Yingtsze. It is about 75 miles to the southwest of Mukden, and commands the peninsula upon which Port Arthur is located. It is a city of about 60,000 inhabitants, and in the summer-time it is full of life and the commercial activities are considerable. The broad waters of the river Liau-ho are crowded with the shipping of the Russian, Danish, Japanese, British and American nations, and the interests of the last named country are constantly on the increase, as is the case in all the eastern trading ports. The boats that come up the river to Newchwang ply between that city and Chefoo, Shanghai, and the southern ports of China.

In 1900, during the Boxer disturbances in China, Newchwang was deserted by the foreign population, which is quite numerous. At that time there remained at the city to protect the foreign interests two Russian gunboats, two Japanese gunboats, and the old Chinese imperial customs schooner.



THE RIVER LIAU-HO AT NEWCHWANG IN SUMMER.

During the last year the British, Japanese and Russians have each had a ship at Newchwang. One of our illustrations shows the British steamer as she appeared when going into winter quarters last fall before the ice formed in the river, locking her in. It takes a long time for these small warships to get into their narrow quarters and once in they are helpless, as far as navigation goes, until the ice breaks up in the spring and the boat can again slowly and painfully slip out of its narrow winter berth into the broader navigable channel of the river.

On the right bank of the river is the terminus of the Chinese Imperial railway. This bit of road runs from Pekin via Shan-Hai-Kwan and is the line which was partially destroyed during the Boxer uprising of 1900. Since that time it has been restored to better condition than before. On the left bank of the river are the wharves. Each merchant steamship company has its own wharf. A peculiarity of the wharves is that they are used only to receive the cargoes of the arriving steamers. The loading of cargoes to carry to other ports is all done from the little steamers which come down the river from the interior points.

JOHN BOYN, FARMER

RECOGNIZED BY MANY AS HEIR TO SERVIAN THRONE.

Minnesota Pretender Is a Descendant of Milos Obrenovitch — King Peter Looking for a Chance to Abdicate.

London (Eng.) Special.

The announcement that the king of Servia would like to abdicate has revived the story of the American heir to the throne, in the person of John Boyn, a Minnesota farmer, whose father, August Boyn, was said to be an heir to the throne of that country, and who, it is claimed, died in that country many years ago by the hand of an assassin.

A writer in the St. James Gazette, in discussing the rumors that King Peter would like to let go because he is disappointed with his people, says the world contains a lot of pretenders to the throne who do not really pretend because they prefer to keep off that dangerous elevation. The most interesting of these pretenders, says the writer, is the Minnesota farmer, John Boyn, believed to be descended from Milos Obrenovitch, and through him connected with the Servian ruler.

The mother of John Boyn lives in a modest little cottage among the evergreens and jackpines near Rum river, a few miles from Princeton, Minn. She is 84 years old, but for one of her age is apparently hale and hearty. Small of stature and with her shrunken form bent with infirmities of old age, she still shows that she was in her youth a comely woman for one of her race, and had Dame Fortune made her queen of Servia she would have graced the throne of that country of social and political volcanoes with as much dignity as many of the happy and unhappy rulers of Europe.

She did not know much about her husband's kingly inheritance which it has been claimed he went to Servia to seek. He told his folks he had a large inheritance awaiting him in Servia, and decided to go over to that country in 1887 to secure the wealth. His wife and children begged him not to leave them, but he promised to return soon with money enough to make them all rich.

He had no idea of attempting to regain his royal rights other than a portion of the fortune which was due him. He wrote his wife from Belgrade after his arrival. In a few weeks she received word through the American consul that her husband was dead. Subsequent events proved that he had been assassinated.

Residents of Princeton will remember Boyn. He had a common education, and was by trade a cabinetmaker. The farm his wife now occupies was preempted by him. The son of old John Boyn, whom the writer in the St. James Gazette asserts is more nearly the direct heir to the throne than all other pretenders, lives a short distance from Princeton and near the home of his mother. Though he stoutly maintains his heirship to the throne now held by Peter Karageorgevitch, he is not worrying over the situation.

According to authentic accounts, Boyn's grandfather when a mere child was rescued during an invasion of the Turks by being carried by his nurse into a field and hidden, he being the only member of the family to escape. The child was taken to Saxony, where he was brought up and in time married and raised a family, August (John's father) being the only son. It appears that the Turks wiped out the royal family from which the Boyns descended, and John's grandfather preferred to remain in peace in Saxony rather than try sitting on the insecure throne of his native country.

The nurse who rescued the grandfather also carried with her the family Bible and records, and when the child grew up he received the family record, which in time went to August, who kept it inviolate. When he returned to Servia he took the Bible with him, but the book and all the records were lost, as they disappeared when he died in Belgrade.

Wonderful Catch of Fish.

One of the most phenomenal catches of fish on record has just been made at Oceanside, Los Angeles, Cal. T. J. McGarvin and three assistants ran their seine through the surf and then were unable to pull it in, owing to the enormous amount of fish they had taken. A team of horses was sent for and attached, and still the catch could not be landed. A second team was procured and the united effort of men and teams drew the wonderful catch to the shore. Most of the fish were of the kinds known as yellowfin croakers and blackfin croakers, fish about 18 inches in length and weighing eight or ten pounds each. It was found when the fish were made ready for market that there were 15 tons of them. Nine tons were shipped to Los Angeles and the remainder were dried at the fish drying works there.

FLOWERS FOR WOMEN.

Michigan Railway Company Gives Thousands of Boutonnieres Away at Niles Every Year.

Over 500,000 women annually get free boquets in Niles, Mich., where a railroad company has just rebuilt its hothouse on a scale that doubles its former capacity. It matters not whether it be midwinter or the blistering months of summer, there is a fragrant shower of cut flowers at this pretty country station as soon as a train comes.

The new building is one of the most extensive and substantial that has ever been erected for the purpose. It not only holds a never-failing supply of flowers for the tiny boquet for the women folks, but in it are stored thousands of plants that in the spring are shipped to every part of the system to be used in beautifying station grounds.

In different parts of the roomy structure are found snowy oleanders, yellow asters, purple phlox, heliotrope, tiger lilies, dahlias, azaleas, coleas and everything to delight the gaze of everyone fortunate enough to behold the sight.

More than a decade ago the officers of the road conceived the idea of raising enough flowers to enable them to throw in the lap of each woman passenger, be she of high or low degree, a boutonniere of cut flowers. An employe in uniform bearing a basket filled with the favors passed through the train distributing the fragrant bunches. The men do not count in this matter and must be contented to see the women enjoy the gift.

MARRIAGES EQUAL DEATHS.

Richmond, Ind., Reverend Officiates at 170 Weddings and at the Same Number of Funerals.

Rev. J. P. Chamness, pastor of the Fifth Street Methodist Episcopal church, Richmond, Ind., since April 19, 1900, when he took up the pastorate of the local church, has officiated at 170 marriages and an equal number of funerals. When the first year of his service at the church was finished and Rev. Mr. Chamness made out his statistical report the number of marriages and funerals were the same, just 34. The next year the funerals led by four, his marriage amounting to one fewer than those of the former year. Fifty-one marriages to 47 funerals was the balance that presented itself when another 12 months had rolled around.

Doctor Who Cures Sick Gems.

There is a jeweler in New York city who makes a specialty of curing sick and sulky gems. All jewels except diamonds, he says, are liable to maladies. Rubies, sapphires and pearls have their separate ailments, but diamonds are immune from their great hardness. Precious stones are all affected by surrounding conditions. The general cure is the application of acids, but it requires an expert to do it. Pearls suffer most. They age early and lose all their value in reflection of beautiful colors.

A VENERABLE PASTOR CURED BY PE-RU-NA.

Pe-ru-na is a Catarrhal Tonic Especially Adapted to the Declining Powers of Old Age.

In old age the mucous membranes become thickened and partly lose their function.

This leads to partial loss of hearing, smell and taste, as well as digestive disturbances.

Peruna corrects all this by its specific operation on all the mucous membranes of the body.

One bottle will convince anyone. Once used and Peruna becomes a life-long stand-by with old and young.

Rev. J. N. Parker.

Strong and Vigorous at the Age of Eighty-eight.

Rev. J. N. Parker, Utica, N. Y., writes: "In June, 1901, I lost my sense of hearing entirely. My hearing had been somewhat impaired for several years, but not so much affected but that I could hold converse with my friends; but in June, 1901, my sense of hearing left me so that I could hear no sound whatever. I was also troubled with rheumatic pains in my limbs. I commenced taking Peruna and now my hearing is restored as good as it was prior to June, 1901. My rheumatic pains are all gone. I cannot speak too highly of Peruna, and now when 88 years old can say it has invigorated my whole system. I cannot but think, dear Doctor, that you must feel very thankful to the all loving Father that you have been permitted to live, and by your skill be such a blessing as you have been to suffering humanity."—Rev. J. N. Parker.

A Bishop's Letter.

T. H. Lomax, D. D., Bishop 2nd Dist. A. M. E., of Charlotte, N. C., writes: "I recommend your Peruna to all who want a strengthening tonic and a very effective remedy for all catarrhal complaints."—T. H. Lomax.

If you do not receive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

The spring is the best time to treat catarrh. Nature renews herself every spring. The system is rejuvenated by spring weather. This renders medicines more effective. A short course of Peruna, assisted by the balmy air of spring, will cure old, stubborn cases of catarrh that have resisted treatment for years. Everybody should have a copy of Dr. Hartman's latest book on catarrh. Address The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.

The Mission of the Seventy

In the last six months of His ministry end life, Jesus made a systematic and determined effort to announce His Messiahship to the whole nation. Evidence is not wanting that He had a welldefined plan of operation and that the throughly Oriental and consequently spectacular "triumphal entrance" to Jerusalem was the denouement of the whole. In this plan the mission of the seventy is an important feature. There is an undoubted significance in the number. As Jesus had the twelve patriarchs in mind when He appointed the apostles, He had the seventy elders of Israel in view when He appointed these evangelists. It is also an old tradition (see Genesis x) that the number of the nation was seventy as the number of metallic substances is also supposed to be. The time of this circumstance was also the Feast of Tabernacles, at which seventy bullocks were offered. As the Talmud says, these were seventy bullocks to correspond with the seventy nations of the world. Some trouble, however, it must be admitted, has arisen from regarding the seventy as a fixed number, and as a constantly active circle, besides the twelve and exclusive of them. As St. Luke is the only one who tells of the appointment of the seventy, it has been inferred that he himself was one of the number. It is gratifying to know that Jesus had so large a number of men attached to His cause who were competent for such a commission. It is a gauge of growth in the kingdom.

Although this special heralding of the Messiah was somewhat formal, Jesus undoubtedly earnestly desired that the people would be moved to accept Him. It has been said that the seventy were a net of love thrown out into Israel. The special sphere of their operation was the trans-Jordanic district, which had hitherto been comparatively neglected. Brief time remained for its evangelization before the close of His career. It was no mere experimental mission. It was really called for, and Jesus deployed His little force by consummate, strategic skill, and the sterling quality of these evangelists is shown by their success.

It has been said that the seventy are a remarkable luminary in the public life of Jesus, whose brilliancy, however, endured only a brief time. There is no subsequet trace of them. After the accomplishment of their charge they were absorbed into the large company and their term of service was so brief that their names were soon forgotten. The orders under which these pioneers were sent are ideal instructions for Christian scouting-parties to-day. At the same time they are a very mirror of Jesus' heart. He sees the humau mass as a harvest heavy for the sickle, but insufficiently supplied with harvesters. He yearns to have the deficiency made up, but He will have none go who are not forewarned of the hostile forces they will certainly find arrayed against them. His startling analogy is "lambs among wolves." Paradoxical instructions follow. Emptiness is their. No purse, or knapsack, or shoes. They must not be overloaded. Punctilious courtesies are to be omitted. Oriental salutations are time-consumers. But in this caution Jesus puts no premium on rude moroseness. He was Himself the soul of courtesy.

These messengers are not to follow the custom of rotating as a guest among the causes open for entertainment. That would mean time lost in making new acquaintances. They are to be thankful for plain food. "It ill becomes Christ's disciples to be desirous of dainties." They are neither to fast with Pharisees nor feast with epicureans. The reference is to the traditions about meats which made one critical is what was set before him. Jesus says, "Eat; don't question!" A home once entered is to be blessed with the benediction, "Peace." If there is a single member of the family open to it the kingdom of heaven with its peace and joy will enter his heart. It is a question of receptivity. For such individuals and communities the kingdom is imminent, the kingdom whose essential is not sacrifice and oblation (meat and drink), but righteousness, peace, and joy. Alas! for the cities which reject these meesengers. In places where there is no welcome there is to be a warning, Wiping off the dust is truly Oriental. A sign in always preferred to a word. Tyre and Sidon were synonyms of depravity. They were the cities where prodigal sons went to spend their patrimony in riotous living.

The Teacher's Lantern

By one fine stroke, Jesus shows His Father's relation to the human mass in this world. There is no tinge of the Roman idea of emperor or judge. Humanity is precious as a ripe harvest. God is its Owner. He is intent upon garnering it.

* * * * *

Is the ministry an overstocked profession? Has the need of praying for more laborers passed? The question has been answered affirmatively in current literature. Increase of ministry has been shown to be out of proportion to increase of communicants. Competition for a living in the ministry becomes pathetic.

* * * * *

Drummond has met this present day issue in his "New Evangelist," published since his death.

* * * * *

Each age requires a gospel for itself. The things which stirred men's minds two centuries ago fail to do so now. Vital religion under present methods of preaching declines. The very nature of truth demands from time to time a new evangelism. Theology is a thing that moves. There is progress in truth itself. What was the new theology of the seventeenth century is the theology of the nineteenth century only on one conditton,—that the age has not grown.

* * * * *

The conception of God under the old evangelism was vague. That of Christ was worse. He was a theological Person. His function was to adjust matters between the hostile kingdoms of heaven and earth. Religion said, "Christ our Life;" theology said, "Christ, our Logic." The truths of the New Evangelism are not to be conveyed to the people in the propositional form. An infallible standard is a temptation to a mechanical faith. Few minds really take truth in theological form. Truth is to be absorbed, not bolted. The leading faculty of the new theology is not to be reason, but imagination.

* * * * *

The present-day ministers will adjust themselves to this age in the form which they present their gospel. The problem of a "hearing" and a "living" will be solved. And the prayer for more laborers will have to be made.

* * * * *

Great and various are the gains of comradeship in any undertaking. This is especially true of Christian or philanthropic work. Well says the preacher, "Two are better than one, because they have a good reward for their labor. For if they fall the one will lift up his fellow, but woe to him that if alone when he falleth. For he hath not another to help him up. And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him and a threefold cord is not easily broken."

* * * * *

The speech with which Jesus dismisses these thirty-five pairs of heralds is photographic of the minister of to-day. The substance of the minister's message is "Peace," but it finds an entrance only to a son of peace, that is one who is open and receptive to the peace-producing message. The characteristics of the true messenger are meekness, contentment, and self-denial. But these negative qualities can upon occasion flame up into self-assertive dignity when the message is despised.

* * * * *

Opposition must be anticipated. Goodness and wickedness are always at sword's point. It is not a thirty-years' war, but a thirty-century war. It is inevitable and inveterate. There is an incidental gain in this opposition of truth. And what is doubly tried is doubly proven true.

* * * * *

The justice of ministerial support may may be argued from this incident. These heralds were to take no store with them. Sustenance was to be expected and provided en route. Showing the spiritual they were to reap enough of the material at least for a livelihood.

The Man Who Makes A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS.

CHAPTER 300.

AN ACT for the incorporation of the town of Friendsville in District number Two in Garrett county; and for the amendment of article 12 of the Code of Public Laws of the State of Maryland, entitled Garrett County, by adding additional sections thereto, to be known as Sections 11IA, 11IB, 11IC, 11ID, 11IF, 11IG, 11IH, 11IJ, 11IK, 11IL, 11IM, 11IO, 11IP, 11IQ, to follow immediately after section 111 of said article 12 and to be known by the sub-title Friendsville, and to exempt the town of Friendsville in district No. 2 in Garrett county, as herein bounded and described from the operations of the provisions of chapter 77 of the Acts of 1898, entitled An Act to "prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in election district No. 2 of Garrett county."

WHEREAS, At a meeting of the male citizens and residents of the town of Friendsville, in Garrett county, Maryland, held on the 14th day of January, 1904, it was decided by the unanimous vote of the residents of said town attending said meeting that an application should be made to the General Assembly for a charter for said town of Friendsville

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That 15 new sections be and the same are hereby added to Article 12 of the Code of Public Laws, title "Garrett County," under the new sub-title "Friendsville," to immediately follow section 111, to be known as sections 11IA, 11IB, 11IC, 11ID, 11IE, 11IF, 11IF½, 11IG, 11IH, 11IJ, 11IK, 11IL, 11IM, 11IO, 11IP, and 11IQ, and to read as follows:

SECTION 11IA. That the inhabitants of the town of Friendsville in district No. 2 in Garrett county, Maryland, are hereby incorporated by the name of the "Mayor and Council of Friendsville," and by that name may sue and be sued, may have and use a common seal, and may hold real, personal and mixed property and dispose of the same when the best interests of the town may demand.

SEC. 11IB. Be it further enacted, That the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville are hereby declared to be as follows: Beginning at a bounded mulberry tree, standing north ten degrees west sixty perches from John T. Gary's house, and running thence 95½ deg. east one hundred and ninety purches to a clump of Pawpaw bushes, north 25 degrees east 140 perches to a stone corner, then south 16 degrees east 256 perches to a large rock, then south 68½ degrees west 260 perches to a stake on brow of hill above coal bank, north 81½ degrees west 152 perches to a leaning tree a little above and beyond Homer Friend's house, thence north 8 degrees west 280 perches to the beginning.

SEC. 11IC. Be it further enacted, That said corporation shall be governed by a Mayor and six Councilmen and that W. W. Savage of said town be, and is hereby named Mayor of the said city for the ensuing year from the passage of this Act, ending the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February in 1906, and that Wm. H. H. Friend, Allen J. Mason and Arthur Chisholm, be and the same are hereby named and designated as the Councilmen for the first two years from the passage of this Act, ending on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February, 1906, and that Frederic G. Fox, John W. McCullough and George J. Kolb are hereby named as Councilmen to serve for the one year from the passage of this Act, ending on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February, 1905, and hereafter an election shall be held on the first Tuesday in February each and every year for the election of three Councilmen to serve for two years from the date of their election or until their successors shall be duly elected and qualified. And an election shall be held on the first Tuesday in February, 1906, for the election of Mayor of said town to serve for two years or until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified, and an election shall be held thereafter in every second year for the election of a Mayor for the said town.

SEC. 11IC. And be it enacted, That the Mayor and the Council therein named shall have power to pass all such ordinances for conducting the elections herein provided for, or which may be hereafter authorized to be held, and shall make return thereof to the clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett county. And the qualified voters of any of said elections shall be bona fide residents, male, shall be 21 years of age or over of said town of Friendsville, who have been residents of State for the period of one year and of said town for the period of six months continuously next before the date of any such election; and that no one shall be eligible for the office of Mayor or Councilmen of said town unless he shall be a real estate owner or husband of a bona fide real estate owner in said town. And the Mayor shall have been a resident of said town for three years previous to his election and the Councilmen shall have been residents of said town two years prior to their election.

SEC. 11ID. And be it further enacted, That the said Mayor and Council may from time to time cause an assessment to be made of all the property liable to the state and county taxes within the corporate limits, and to levy a tax thereon not exceeding twenty-five cents on the one hundred dollars in any one year, and that said property shall be assessed at its actual cash value; and that the land included in the above named corporate limits, which have not been laid out as town lots or as town property shall be exempt from taxation, with the exception of the buildings and personal effects thereon. And the said Council may appoint an assessor and collector of taxes and fix his salary for compensation, and provide for a method of collecting the taxes by ordinance, and also the method of making assessments; and any person aggrieved by any assessment made under this provision shall have the right of an appeal to the said Mayor and Council of said town of Friendsville.

SEC. 11IE. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said Mayor of the said town to see that the ordinances of the town are duly and faithfully executed, and he shall appoint subject to the confirmation of the Council all such persons as agents and servants of the corporation as may be necessary to carry out the objects and purposes of the incorporation and enforce the ordinances to be passed thereby.

SEC. 11IF. And be it further enacted, That said Council shall have power to pass all such ordinances not contrary to the Constitution and laws of this state, as it may deem necessary, for the good government of the town; for the protection of the town's property, rights and privileges; for the preservation of the peace and good order and securing persons and property from violence and danger and destruction; for the protection of the health, confort and convenience of the citizens of Friendsville, and visitors thereto or sojourners therein; for providing proper and suitable lights on the streets; for establishing, maintaining and regulating an adequate police force; to regulate the management and location of starch factories, glue factories, renderies, tallow chandlers, bone factories, soap factories, hide houses, tanneries, slaughter houses, breweries, distilleries, livery stables, foundries and all other establishments of which the business or trade may become obnoxious or injurious to public comfort or health; to prohibit the erection of such buildings, or the continuance of such noxious occupations therein, whenever the public health requires it; to prevent or regulate the use of fire arms, fire works, bon fires or other things or practices tending to endanger persons or property; to regulate or prohibit the running at large of cattle, horses, swine, fowls, sheep, goats, dogs or other animals; to authorize the impounding, keeping, sale and redemption of such animals when found in violation of the ordinances in such cases provided; to prevent the deposit of any unwholesome substance, either on public or private property; to compel its removal to designated points and to require slops, garbage, ashes and other waste or unwholesome material to be removed to designated points, or to require the occupants or residents on premises to place them conveniently for removal; to compel the occupants of any premises, building or out-houses, situated in said city, when the same have been filthy or unwholesome to abate or clean the same, to authorize the same to be done by the proper officers and to assess the expenses thereon against such property; to regulate or prevent the storage of gun powder, tar, pitch, resin, coal oil, benzine, turpentine, hemp, cotton, nitroglycerine, dynamite, giant powder, petroleum, gasolene or gas, or any product thereof, or any other explosive or combustible material which may seem to be dangerous; to authorize the removal or confinement of such persons having infectious or pestilential diseases; to pass all ordinances and orders and to expend such sums of money as may be necessary within the limitations therein provided for the protection, maintainance and preservation of the water supply of the city and the prevention of the pollution thereof; to regulate the selling, weighing or measuring of hay, wood, coal, coke and all other articles sold by weight and measure, and to provide for their inspection and selling; to make all regulations which may be deemed expedient for the promotion of health or suppression of disease; to regulate the construction of chimneys, smoke stacks, hearths, ovens, and the erection of stove and stove pipes, boilers and apparatus used in buildings or other places and cause the same to be removed or made secure, when considered dangerous; to suppress, restrain and regulate bawdy houses of ill fame and to prohibit the youth of said city from being on the streets, lanes or alleys at unreasonable hours of the night; to punish and suppress tramps and vagrants by imposing fines or both fines and imprisonment at hard labor, and to abate by appropriate ordinances all nuisances in said town which are so defined at common law, whether they are herein specifically named or not; to regulate the use of side walks and all structures in, under or over the same and to require the owner or occupant of the premises to keep the side-walks in front of same not to exceed 200 feet free from snow and other obstructions and prescribe hours for cleaning the same; to regulate and prevent the throwing or depositing of sweepings, dust, ashes, offal, dirt, garbage, paper, hand bills, dirty liquors, or any other materials into any street, alley or public places for signs, sign posts, awnings, awning posts, poles, horse troughs, steps, railroad entrances, racks, posting hand bills and advertisements and display of goods, wares and merchandise; to cause the streets, lanes and alleys to be side walked, paved, graded, repaired, repaved, regraded, drained or sewered, or to close streets, or parts of streets, lanes or alleys; to regulate and license the use of coaches, hacks, drays and all other vehicles for the transportation of passengers, freights or other articles to or from points within said city, for hire or pay; to regulate, license, tax restrain or prohibit theatrical and other exhibitions, shows or entertainments, for which money is demanded or received; provided that lectures on scientific, historic, benevolent, artistic, religious, or literary subjects, and apparatus for the elucidation of the same, and specimens of fine art shall not be deemed to be within the provision; to regulate the sales of all kinds of property at auction in the streets, stores, shops, or elsewhere in the city; and to license auctioneers, and all venders of property on the streets or squares, or other public places in the said city; to license, tax, regulate, suppress and prohibit hawkers, and itinerant dealers, peddlers and pawn brokers and to revoke such license at pleasure; to license, tax, regulate and prohibit the keeping or harboring of dogs; to license, tax and regulate branch stores and all other concerns established in said city for temporary business only.

SEC. 11IF½. And be it enacted, That the corporate authorities of the town of Friendsville as by this bill provided shall, on the fourth Tuesday in April, 1904, order an election for the purpose of determining whether or not license for the sale of liquor shall be issued in said town, and at said election they shall provide two tickets, on one of which shall be printed "For Liquor License," and on the other "Against Liquor license," and at said election only freeholders of the town who are otherwise qualified as voters shall be eligible to vote. The Town Clerk, herein named, shall secure from the Clerk to the County Commissioners a certified list of all freeholders in said town, which list shall be verified as to the voter's qualifications by comparison with the registration list of said town of Friendsville in the office of the Supervisors of Election for said county; and for the purposes of this election the said certified list under the seal of the County Commissioners, attested by the Clerk of the town of Friendsville made in duplicate shall be the registration list by which the Judges of Election shall be guided in taking the vote on said question. The Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall appoint three judges and two clerks to hold said election, and they shall severally take the oath provided for judges and clerks by Art. 33 of the Code of Public General Laws title "Elections," and the polls shall be opened at one o'clock, P. M., and close at six o'clock, P. M.; said judges and clerks shall make return to the Mayor and Council of the results of said election and if it shall be found that a majority of the votes cast are "For Liquor License," then and in that event license shall be issued in conformity with the provisions of the succeeding sections of this act; but if a majority of the votes cast shall be found to be "Against Liquor License," then no license shall be issued except after another election as provided for by Section 11IQ—should any such election be held. The Mayor and Council shall by handbills posted in said town give five days' notice of said election.

SEC. 11IG. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons being the lessor or owner of any hotel property capable of comfortably accommodating fifteen guests or more with suitable and comfortable rooms and beds and bedding shall upon application to the clerk of said corporation and the payment of a minimum license fee of $250.00 (two hundred and fifty dollars) per year shall be authorized to sell liquors, malt and spirituous in the town of Friendsville at a bar to be located in said hotel and no where else, and said bar shall be closed promptly at nine o'clock every week night, and shall be closed from nine o'clock P. M., until six o'clock A. M., of the following day; and any one violating this provision by opening or selling any liquors between the hours named, or from any time from nine o'clock on Saturday night until six o'clock Monday morning, shall be deemed to have violated any privilege herein contained or acquired by the payment of the license fee aforesaid, for the sale of liquor, and the license so granted him by said corporation to be at once revoked, and the amount paid shall be paid to the town of Friendsville and if he shall sell any liquor after such forfeiture brought to his notice by an order of the Mayor and Council of said town he shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall upon conviction thereof after indictment be fined not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than two hundred dollars ($200.00) for each and every sale of liquor made after he shall have been so notified by the said Mayor and Council of Friendsville of the forfeiture of his license.

SEC. 11IH. And be it further enacted, That the said Council may elect a Clerk to said Council and fix his compensation and the length of his term, and that they may also fix the compensation of the Mayor of the said town.

SEC. 11IJ. And be it further enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall retain jurisdiction over the present county road running through in the boundaries of said corporate limit of Friendsville, and that said Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall have jurisdistion and supervision over all sidewalks along said road and all streets, lanes and alleys as they may accept and take under control from time to time, and they shall keep a record and description of the same, with the length and location thereof. And no street or alley shall be deemed to be under the control of said corporation so as to render said corporation liable on account of injury or damage arising therefrom until it shall be shown to have been accepted by the records of said corporation so kept by the clerk of said corporation.

SEC. 11IK. And be it further enacted, That the said Mayor and Council shall have the power to compel the property owners binding along any of said streets, lanes or alleys so accepted by said corporation and recorded among its proceedings, to construct and keep in repair side-walks and foot-ways of their property binding on said streets and roads not exceeding 200 feet and may pass all such ordinances as may be necessary to compel the construction and repair of said side-walk. And they shall have power to enforce the construction and repair of said side-walks by fines imposed upon the property owners for a failure to construct and repair after fifteen days notice previously given, which said fines shall be collectable as other fines imposed for the violation of the ordinances of the town, as hereinafter set forth and stated.

SEC. 11IL. And be it further enacted, That said Mayor and Council of Friendsville may establish and maintain a town lock-up and may confine therein all persons convicted of violation of their ordinances in default of the payment of fines imposed for such violations, or may at their option confine such person in the county jail at the expense of the said town, or they may require such person, in default of payment of fines, to work out such fines and costs upon the streets or other improvements of said town, such person to be allowed as a credit on such fines or costs the same wages as are paid other employees of said town for the same character of work.

SEC. 11IM. And be it further enacted, That all fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed for violating any ordinance passed by said Mayor and Council shall be recoverable in the name of the Mayor and Council of Friendsville before such justice of the peace of the State of Maryland, residing in district No. 2 in Garrett county as may be elected police justice for said town by the Mayor and Council and no other, as small debts, and shall be paid to the Mayor and Council for use of said town. And any one feeling agrieved by any judgment rendered by said police justice shall have the right of appeal to the circuit court for Garrett county to the next term of said court, but no judgment, fine or penalty imposed shall be stayed unless the party taking the appeal shall file a bond to be approved by the said justice in double the amount of the fine and costs to the Mayor and Council in Friendsville conditioned upon the successful prosecution of said appeal.

SEC. 11IO. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this Act, the provisions of the Act of 1898, chapter 77, entitled "An Act to Prohibit the sale of Spirituous and Fermented Liquors and Lager Beer in Election District No. 2 of Garrett county," be and the same is hereby repealed so far as the same shall apply to that part of Election District No. 2 contained within the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville, in Garrett county, Maryland, hereby incorporated, and said part of said election district No. 2 within said corporate limits is hereby exempted from the operation of the provisions of said Act of 1898, chapter 77, and whenever any hotel-keeper having accommodation for fifteen guests in said corporate limits of Friendsville shall produce to the clerk of the circuit court for Garrett county a receipt for the sum of $250.00 (two hundred and fifty dollars) paid to the clerk of the Mayor and Council of Friendsville for a license to sell spirituous and fermented liquors in said town, then the clerk of the circuit court for Garrett county shall issue a license to such parties to sell spirituous and fermented liquors and lager beer in the corporate limits of said town of Friendsville, upon the terms and conditions and for the license fee or charge as other state licenses are issued for the sale of spirituous liquors and lager beer and in case his license as granted by the Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall be forfeited under the provisions of this Act, and he shall be convicted as herein provided, then he shall no longer have any right to sell under his state license.

SEC. 11IP. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the clerk of the circuit court of Garrett county to issue license to any person, persons, firm or corporation to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer after April 30th, 1904, outside the corporate limits of Friendsville, within four miles of the public school at Friendsville, Md.

SEC. 11IQ. And be it further enacted, That whenever hereafter ten freeholders of the town shall desire to have the sale of liquor abolished, they shall petition the Mayor and Council at least thirty days before the February election provided for in each year, to submit at said election to the voters of said town, whether or not the license herein provided for shall be abolished; and the Mayor shall have printed on separate tickets to be voted at said election the words "For Liquor License," and "Against Liquor License," and if if a majority of the votes cast shall be cast For Liquor License the same shall be issued as hereinbefore provided; but if a majority of the votes cast shall be Against Liquor License, then no more license to sell liquors shall be granted after the expiration of the term for which any such licenses then issued shall end; and if the votes of the majority shall be Against Liquor License and the sale of such liquors be prohibited, any ten freeholders in said town may, at the next ensuing election petition for a submission of the question again, and a similar ticket shall be prepared and voted and the majority for or against liquor license shall prevail and licenses shall be issued as aforesaid or not as the case may be and the voters shall decide; and under these conditions and provisions the question of license or no license may be submitted at each and every annual election; no person who is not a freeholder within the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville and possessing all the other qualifications set forth in this act shall be entitled to vote on the license question.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 7, 1904.

CHAPTER 187.

AN ACT to amend the Charter of the town of Deer Park, by empowering the Mayor and Common Council thereof to impose a license tax on any and all kinds of business carried on within the limits of said town.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That in addition to all other powers vested in the Mayor and Common Council of the town of Deer Park by previous Acts of the Legislature of Maryland, said Mayor and Common Council shall have the power to pass all such ordinances as may be necessary to impose a license tax upon all circuses, shows, theatrical troupes exhibiting within the limits of said town, and upon all livery stable keepers, owners of horses, hacks, carts, wagons, drays or other vehicles kept for hire, and upon all auctioneers, stores, shops, saloons, dancing halls and other places of amusement, and upon hawkers and peddlers, and upon all other trades, business or professions operating or carried on within the limits of said town of Deer Park, or that may come therein for the purpose of transacting business; the amount of said license tax for each and every year shall be as follows: On all dancing halls not more than one hundred dollars; on each and every saloon not less than one hundred and fifty nor more than three hundred dollars; on each and every livery stable, not more than ten dollars for each rig; for each huckster or peddler not more than fifty dollars; for each merchant or store keeper not more than ten dollars, and for all other kinds of business, trades, or profession such sum as said Mayor and Common Council shall in their judgment deem proper. No license tax shall be issued for a period of less than one year (except for circuses, shows and theatrical troupes) and shall be dated from the first day of May in each year. All applications for license shall be made to the Mayor of said town, who is hereby authorized to issue same upon the payment of the license tax provided for by the ordinances of said town.

SECTION 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 7th, 1904.

CHAPTER 554.

AN ACT to repeal and re-enact, with amendments Section 6 of Chapter 610 of the Acts of 1890, entitled "An Act to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county, to determine by ballot whether spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in said county, and to regulate the terms and conditions on which the sale thereof may be made, in case the majority of the voters of said county shall determine said question in the affirmative and to regulate the sale thereof by druggists and pharmacists."

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Section 6 of Chapter 610 of the Acts of 1890, entitled "An Act to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in said county, and to regulate the terms and conditions on which the sale thereof may be made, in case the majority of the voters of said county shall determine said question in the affirmative, and to regulate the sale thereof by druggists and pharmacists," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, so as to read as follows:

6. No spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in any election district of said county, except as provided for by section five of this Act, and also upon the following terms, viz: each and every applicant, person or persons, house, corporation, company or association, shall be recommended to said clerk by at least twelve respectable freeholders living in the Election District in which said saloon is located, and within one mile of the place where said liquors or alcoholic bitters are to be sold, as a fit person to traffic in the article, nor until such applicant or applicants, applying for such license, shall have filed with said clerk a bond with at least two sureties, to be approved by said clerk in the penal sum of two thousand dollars, conditioned to the payment of all fines, penalties, costs and damages, to which the person or persons obtaining said license may become liable for any violation of any of the license laws of this State; and said clerk is hereby prohibited from approving any bond under this section unless it shall appear to him, by good evidence, that the sureties on said bond are worth, in real estate, double the amount of the penalty of said bond, and that in no event shall any person sell such article on the Sabbath day, commonly called "Sunday," and for violation of this provision such person, natural or artificial shall be subjected to the penalties provided for in section four of this Act. Provided, however, that the repeal and re-enactment of this section of said Chapter 610 shall apply only to Election District No. 2, commonly called Accident District and that the said section 6, as originally enacted shall stand and be the law as to all other districts in said county.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1904.

A MODERN BAKERY

Is that Owned by Mr. Henry Lauar in Oakland.

Recently Mr. Henry Lauer, proprietor of the Oakland Model Bakery, installtd an engine and several pieces of machinery with which to mix bread, make ice cream, etc. The machinery was given a test a few days ago and worked to prefection.

In the rear of the bakery is located the engine and boiler room, entirely away from the bake room proper. Inside, the dough mixer is located, which is driven at the rate of 70 revolutions per minute by the engine. The mixer has a capacity of three barrels of flour which is sifted into it from the floor above. A few minutes only is required to reduce the flour to a dough and thence it is placed upon a table and made ready for the pans.

By the introduction of this machinery Mr. Lauer more than doubles the capacity of his plant and is consequently better equipped to fill all orders.

To the Teachers of Garrett County.

Under the new law for the State the Garrett County School Board will declare the schools of the county, maintaining their average, open for a term of seven and one half months, with a minimum salary of $200 to the teachers. The prospects for the county are brighter than ever before, and with four Normal schools in the county the opportunity for teachers to better equip themselves is very apparent. The board hopes to make the salaries compare with other counties in the State and thereby retain and encourage our best teachers. There is work for all, but we are anxious to have our teachers compare favorably with the best teachers of other counties.

The examinations in the different branches will cover about the same ground as last year, but may be a little more difficult. The regular examinations will be held about the last week of the Normals and all teachers who wish to make themselves eligible to teach must avail themselves of this only opportunity to be examined.

The schools will open with the Institute September 26-30. The following Monday schools will open for the admission of pupils.

VOLUNTARY ARBITRATION LAW

Bill Signed By the Governor Empowers State Official To Tender Services.

One of the important bills passed by the Legislature and signed by the Governor is the voluntary arbitration bill. It provides for the arbitration of disputes between employer and employe, the Bureau of Industrial Statistics of the State acting as the promoter of this arbitration. The bill empowers the Chief of the Bureau of Industrial Statistics, upon learning of a strike or lockout which involves 10 or more men, to visit the scene of the difficulty, or send one of his deputies to visit the scene and seek to mediate between the parties. If he fails he may endeavor to secure the consent of the parties to the formation of a board of arbitration to consist of one employer and one employe and a third person, to be chosen by them, or should they fail to agree upon a third person, the Chief or one of his deputies may serve, the third member being chairman of the board.

The president of the board is to have power to summon witness and hear their testimony under oath, rendering a decision, which shall be final to the parties, three days after the investigation.

Should the parties to the dispute refuse arbitration the Chief of the Bureau of Industrial Statistics must carfully investigate the matter, having the power to summon witness and enforce their attendance and to force employers to produce their books. After this investigation it becomes his duty to publish a statement in some daily newspaper laving the blame for the dispute, where he believes it belongs.

OAKLAND WILL NOT GET THE ARMY CAMP.

Regulars and Militia Will Rendezvou on the Battlefield at Bull Run

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE TUESDAY

That the Old Virginia Battle Ground Had Been Selected for the Fall Gathering of the Regular Troops And State Milita.

Notwithstanding the efforts put forth by the citizens of Oakland and the land owners hereabouts ably assisted by Senator McComas and Representative Pearre, to have the troops of the United States Army and the militia of the various states rendezvou this fall on land lying along the Youghiogheny River west of Oakland which was inspected upon three occasions by army officers, announcement was made Tuesday that the fall maneuvres will occur on the historic battlefield of Bull Run, thus settling the question so far as Oakland is concerned.

In commenting upon the decision of the War Department in making this selection, a Philadelphia paper savs:

"Bull Run's historic battlefield has been selected as the place where the autumn military manoeuvers are to be held. These are to take place in September and are to be on a scale much larger than was ever before attempted in the East.

"Official announcement that the old Viriginia battle ground has been selected was made Tuesday by Colonal H. O. S. Heistand, Adjutant General of the Division of the Atlantic.

"It planned to assemble there early in September ten thousand of the regulars, the division including infantry, artillery and cavalry. Letters addressed to the Government of twenty-two states have been mailed inviting participation on the part of the milita of those States. The letters explain that the pending appropriation will meet the expenses of no more than eighteen thousand guardsmen, and that is desired to fill the contingent on the bases of relative strength. The Government is to bear all the expenses of transportation and subsistence and to give regular army pay to all militia officers and men during the peroid of the maneuvres."

In his letter to the Governors General Corbin says in part:

"The allotment to be nade from the appropriation now pending will meet the expenses of not exceeding eighteen thousand organized militia under pay for not exceeding fifteen days."

The period covered, than by the joint instruction, including the time spent by the organizations of militia in travelling to and from their camps, will not exceed fifteen days.

Although marking the first conflict of the Civil War, and later the scene of another battle, bloodier and more dramatic than was the first, the field of Bull Run—or Manasses—as they call it in the South, is not a park or Government reservation like Gettysburg and Chickamauga. The old battle field, which extends ten miles in one direction and five in another, is in private hands. The owners are farmers, and from these the Government has obtained a lease for the period covered by the manoeuvres. The fields are under cultivation, but the crops of corn, wheat and oats will have been gathered before the time set for the meeting of militiamen and regulars. As a further concession to the owners it was promised that the army would purchase, as far as possible, its needs in the way of forage for the horses from the farmers of that vicinity. Details have not yet been worked out, but the general plan is to have some high rank officer of the army command the regulars and assign others of high rank to the command of the guardsmen. The two will then meet as onposing forces, with umpires to judge the result.

General Corbin, as commander of the Division of the Atlantic, will be in general command.

The States which have been invited to send guardsmen are Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, West Virginia, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas.

SECREARY TAFT CHANGES HIS MIND

Thereby Ends A Controversy About Army Camp Sites.

CONGRESS VS. WAR OFFICIALS.

Chaffee Recommended Leaving Purchase To Latter, But The Secretary Finally Reverses Approval.

Secretary of War Taft has reversed his first recommendation regarding the purchase of four national camp sites for the army and organized militia, and in a letter written to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs approves the bill for the purchase, as provided in the bill, of four camp sites. These are to be located in the Conewago Valley, Pennslyvania; Harris' Ranch, California; one in Wisconsin and one in Texas.

The importance of Secretary Taft's action of today is that it ends the controversy between the general staff of the army and Congress. When the Camp Site bill, providing for the purchase of four specified sites, was adopted by the House Military Committee and was referred to the War Department by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs for remark, Lieut-Gen. A. R. Chaffee, chief of the general staff, recommended that the bill not pass on the ground that, in his opinion, the selection of sites for military maneuvers should be left to the War Department and not made mandatory by any act of Congress. This recommendation was approved by Secretary Taft, who then had little knowledge of the matter, and aroused much dissatisfaction among Congressmen, who held that it was the prerogative of Congress and not the War Department to choose the land to be purchased.

It seems that former Secretary of War Root, before he resigned from the Cabinet, appointed a committee of army and militia officers to select camp sites, and that they recommended the four sites provided for in the Congressional bill. The House Committee on Military Affairs also held extensive hearings on the subject and voted that the four sites provided for in the bill were the most desirable for Government purposes.

It was felt, therefore, that the general staff had assumed too much when it recommended that the selection of the property to be purchased be left to the War Department.

The controversy became more and more bitter and members of Congress saw Secretary Taft personally and explained in detail the situation to him. By his action today in reversing his first approval of the recommendation of General Chaffee Secretary Taft has conclusively shown, it is said, that it will be his policy to decide personally all matters of military legislation, notwithstanding any recommendation the general staff may make. In his letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs Secretary Taft says in part as follows:

"On March 28, 1904, the chief of staff, Lieutenant-General Chaffee, submitted to me a memorandum upon bill (S. 5177) appropriating certain sums for the purchase of four permanent camp grounds and authorizing the enlargement of the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Parks for the instruction and maneuvering of troops of the regular army and national guard. The Chief of Staff pointed out his objections to the method of purchase and certain criticisms upon some of the camp sites selected. I concurred in this memorandum and forwarded it to Senator Quarles, as a member of the committee, by whom the bill had been submitted for consideration by the general staff and the Secretary of War. I have, since sending that communnication, had a good many conferences with members of Congress and of the Military Committees of the House and Senate. After what I hope is due reconsideration I have reached the conclusion that it will be greatly in the public interest if a bill like that reported by the House committee should pass both houses at this session.

"I was not aware at the time of my concurrence in the criticisms of the Chief of Staff how much investigation had been made into the question of camp sites and how far my predecessor had gone in his conclusions as to the wisdom of buying as recommended by the House committee. It is possible that if a bill were passed in the form recommended by the Chief of Staff, giving the War Department the right to make the selection and to fix the price, the camp sites could be obtained at a cheaper rate, but it is of the utmost importance that the camp sites be procured, and if Congress, in its wisdom, deems it better to make the selection itself, I am not disposed, on the part of the executive department, to interpose the slightest objection. The responsibility for the selections then falls upon Congress, which is the appropriating body, and which certainly has the power, and in this case much opportunity to exercise a proper judgment in the selection of the sites."

Death of Francis Marion McRobie.

Departed this life April 15th, 1904, at his residence near Swanton, Md., Francis Marion McRobie. In the community of his death he was born May 19th, 1840, and died in the 64th year of his age as the result of protracted ravages of an incurable malady. He was the son of the late John McRobie, a native of Allegany county and who died about twenty-six years ago, a resident of Garrett in the early infancy of the county's formation, and about the year 1889 he was followed to the tomb by his aged widow. The subject of this sketch is survived by his wife, a daughter of the late Col. William McRobie; by two sons and three daughters, all married except one daughter; and is also survived by three sisters, one brother, Mr. Abraham McRobie; and by his two half-brothers, Mr. Nelson Murphy and Mr. John Murphy.

When, in 1861, the Republic was convulsed in sentiment and divided in allegiance by the approach of the Great Civil War, he entered the army under the flag of the Union. Space will not admit of a close and merited tracing of his career as a soldier in that bloody strife of four long years; but it will suffice to note that at Moorefield he was captured and after a captivity of a few months obtained an exchange and subsequently rejoined his comrades in arms, and eventually left the service under the achievement of a creditable record.

In the year 1878 he connected himself with the United Brethren church and continued his membership with that persuasion the remainder of his days.

He was a devoted husband and an indulgent father; a quiet, law-observing citizen and an obliging and useful neighbor. His extended popularity and established place in the affection of the public was impressively attested by the large concourse of people assembled at the interment on the grounds of the old homestead Sunday morning, April 17th, 1904.

Mr. McRobie sprang from a race of mountaineers noted for extraordinary growth, robust health and longevity. Before disease had fixed its fatal blight upon his ruddy face and towering form, he was a model of symmetrical manhood, and the quick wither and waste of strength and bearing before the contemplated walk of his path was finished, admonish us of the truth found in "that lofty and melancholy psalm in which the fragility of human life is contrasted with the immutability of Him to whom a thousand years are as yesterday when it is passed, and as a watch in the night."

Swanton, April 19th, 1904.

THE DEMOCRAT CHANGES HANDS

Mr. J. M. Litzinger Retires and Mr. Chas. Deffinbaugh Becomes The Owner.

Monday of this week the Mountain Democrat, our esteemed contemporary, changed hands and will hereafter be published by the new owner and editor, Mr. Charles Deffinbaugh, who for several months past has been in charge as associate editor. Mr. Litzinger, the former owner, whose duties as publisher of the Grafton Leader, requires much of his time looking after the interests of that property, will now devote his entire attention to work in West Virginia. Mr. Deffinbaugh is well equipped to carry on the Democrat successfully as he has been schooled in the business in all of its departments fora number of years. We wish him unbounded success in his enterprise.

DIED.

Joseph J. Lashorn died on the 21st inst. at his home in Deer Park, Md., after a lingering and painful illness of about three months. His funeral services were held in the Lutheran church last Saturday at 11. a. m., Rev. E. Manges, officiating.

The services were very largely attended, showing the respect and esteem in which he was held by the community.

He was born in Martinsburg, W. Va., on the 10th of October, 1837, and was aged 66 years, 6 months and 11 days.

He was a scout, guide and dispatch bearer during the Civil War. At the battle of Antietam he carried dispatches from Gen. McClellan to Gen Hooker. He was fearless and courageous in the hour of danger.

Was married to Henrietta Thrasher of Deer Park, who survives him together with a daughter and one son. He was a kind husband, and an indulgent father, a helpful neighbor and a good citizen.

During his illness he was humble and penitent, and ready to go at the Master's call.

Our departed brother and friend doubtless had his faults but then which of all of us could cast the first stone.

He was a man well versed in the Scriptures and knew where to go for help in the trying hour.

Mrs. Lashorn wishes us to convey her most cordial thanks to her neighbors and friends for their sympathy and helpfulness during the illness and after the deatn of her beloved husband.

Savilla C. White, was born Jan. 8, 1859, at what is now Loch Lynn Heights, Garrett County, Md. On the 11th day of February, 1879, she was married to B. F. Crane, of Preston County, W. Va. Their union was blest with nine children five sons and four daughters, two of whom, a son and a daughter died in infancy.

On Dec. 19, 1903, she contracted that dread disease smallpox, which with a complication of other diseases, she could not survive and on Jan. 19th, 1904, God, in his infinite wisdom, releived her of all her sufferings. She was 45 years and 11 days old. She was converted when about 17 years of age and joined the M. E. church and lived a consistant christian life until death. She leaves a husband, seven children and one brother with numerous relatives and friends to mourn her departure. To know her was but to love her. Her remains were laid to rest in the White graveyard.

Evolution OF THE Navy of Japan

THE development of Japan's navy from a handful of worthless junks into one of the finest bodies of fighting vessels in the world within the space of four decades is unparalleled in the naval history of the world. This marvelous development could not have taken place if the nation had not possessed the innate intelligence and inherent bravery without which neither military nor naval progress is possible. The adoption of modern methods was new to the Japs, but they did not have to acquire courage or intelligence, for those they have always had. Under the old daimios the Japanese were constantly at war with each other by land and by sea, but their warfare until a few decades ago was waged in the most primitive fashion. They have always been good sailors. They could not be otherwise and exist in the peculiarly located little empire which they love so well. Tens of thousands of Japanese get their living from the sea, and the average Jap takes to the water as naturally as a duck. It was therefore but natural that when the mikado began to get together a navy of fighting ships worthy the name he found ready comparatively well trained men to man them. A little, a very little, training gave the Japanese the knowledge necessary to enable them to use the guns with reasonable effectiveness, and the empire began to get ambitious in a naval way. Then began that marvelous development which has literally startled the world.

But to fully understand the rapid strides Japan has made in the direction of navy building it is necessary to go back nearly half a century.

It is less than fifty-one years ago that Commodore Perry one day dropped anchor in the bay of Yeddo. That event in itself was not of any particular importance to the nation which sent him nor just then to the nation he visited. He had simply gone to ask for the opening of two Japanese ports to American trade and had taken a fleet along to gain a respectful hearing. The shogun, who was the virtual ruler, looked upon the fleet, saw the force of the argument and gave his assent. There the immediate transaction ended. Yet to the very large number of small slant eyes that gazed upon the spectacle the Yankee squadron was like a revelation from another world.

An Event of Portent.

The Japan that Perry saw was the Japan that had existed for centuries. The brown little people were wearing basket shoes and wide flowing kimonos, as their revered ancestors had done for no one but the antiquarians knows how long. The samurai were fighting for their petty lords with the same bows and arrows and peculiarly shaped swords that their fathers had used before them. The queer tubs of boats darted out from the high and indented coasts as similar tubs had darted since the beginning of the Christian era. The geisha girls in the odd little tea houses courtesied and flirted and sang as other geisha girls had done from time immemorial. Two hundred and fifty noblemen, called daimios, having at their head one whom they had elected shogun, ruled the country, while the titular mikado, like the Chinese emperor of the present day, was a prisoner who was only allowed to speak to his fellow men from behind a painted screen. There was little education except among the chief men.

All this, however, was before the visit of the strange American ships. The subjects of the daimios, in their childlike wonder, did not know that this thing marked the beginning of a new era in the history of their island empire. They had been touched by the unrestful spirit called progress, and nevermore could they be content to follow in the ways of their fathers. The American fleet went as it had come, but the wonderful glimpse the Japanese people had caught of a larger world would not go. As the smoke of the departing battleships had vanished over the horizon, so the old Japan was to vanish, and, compared to the long ages of its past, almost as swiftly.

Other vessels came, messengers of peace this time, merchantmen carrying strange wares. But the articles of trade were not the only cargoes. Every ship brought the tales of another civilization. The Jap mind proved fertile soil for this new seed. Almost immediately it took root, and in a few years the land was overrun by new ideas. Perry's visit was in 1853, and in 1868 came the revolution that placed the present mikado on the throne in fact as well as in name. All nations were now admitted to the Japanese ports, and the emperor at once began to liberalize his policy by calling around him men who were advocates of the new order. Most prominent among these were Marquis Ito and Count Inouye. From a warring theater of the retainers of petty lords Japan suddenly became a united nation. Out of the idea of nationality grew the conception of a well defined national mission—that of being the leader of the orient in the introduction of western civilization. Almost in the twinkling of an eye the old exclusiveness disappeared, visitors were welcomed, and Japs began to travel. Perceiving the wonderful advancement made by occidental nations, the newly awakened land determined to share in their progress. To achieve that end it was necessary to adopt the customs and the methods of the west. Turning herself from the traditions she loved, the little kingdom became the Land of the Rising Sun in fact as well as in name, and the morning that broke over her was the beginning of a new era in the life of all the far east.

Simultaneous Development.

The development came to all lines simultaneously. With the return of the first crop of Japanese graduates from European and American universities began the development of a modern educational system in Japan. From each country she took the best. Her model for her public schools was America.

New industries sprang into life. Railroads were introduced. Japanese youths were sent abroad to study in the foundries. The marvelous imitative faculty of the people came into play, and in a short time native shops were constructing machinery on the exact pattern that had been observed abroad.

This development was especially in evidence in the navy and army. Indeed, there can be little doubt that the dream of becoming a great military power was the actuating motive in the modernizing of Japan. The soldier had always been the national hero of the country. The nobles and the samurai under them had fought with each other from time immemorial. A contempt of physical danger and of death had been inculcated in the minds of the children from the earliest ages. A large section of the population had no other trade than fighting. Such a spirit as this had to have outlet in some direction, and when the unification of the empire came at the beginning of the reign of the present mikado the military ardor had to seek an outward object on which to vent itself, as internal discord was at an end. It was then that the dream came of a greater Japan. The shrewd statesmen of the island empire saw that by the introduction of western weapons and methods of fighting the Jap could easily become the lord of the far east. Once having that end in view, the energies of the country were bent to its accomplishment. The first step to that end was to build up an army and a navy equal to the task.

Because of the fact that Japan, like Great Britain, lies upon a chain of islands, it had been from the earliest ages a seagoing nation. Many of the fights between the petty lords had taken place on the straits, inlets and bays about the sharply indented coast. One of the great victories in the ancient times was the almost complete destruction of an immense army of Chinese that had sailed across in their junks to invade one of the Jap islands. The Celestials never reached shore.

Lesson of the Ships.

The first glimpse of the western world that had come to fire the Japanese imagination was the sight of a fleet of warships. What wonder, then, that one of the initial activities of the awakening nation was in the direction of the construction of a larger navy? The first tangible start seems to have been in the purchase from the United States government of the Stonewall Jackson, a 1,300 ton ship carrying a ten ton gun, besides smaller ones, a powerful vessel for that day. She was renamed the Adzuma, and, with her as a model, the Japs began that career of adaptation and imitation that has had such remarkable results. The purchase of the Adzuma was made in 1866, two years before the revolution. In 1877 another and greater ship was bought. This was the Fooso, 3,718 tons, double screw, speed thirteen knots. This ship carried a broadside central battery and was 220 feet long. Three small ironclads, the Kongo, Hiyei and Rinjo, of 1,300 tons each, were added in the two years following. These constituted the Japanese navy in 1880.

In the succeeding decade only two more ironclads were added to the list, but a considerable squadron of fast cruisers was built on Japan's order in various foreign countries. With the addition of two more very speedy cruisers in the next four years, these made up Japan's naval strength at the beginning of her war with China.

This remarkable naval evolution was not confined alone to ships. The far-sighted statesmen like Ito saw that boats were useless unless manned by crews that understood them. It takes longer to train officers and men than it does to build vessels, so provision was made for such training. America, England and other countries were asked to allow Japanese officers to serve aboard their ships, and also that Yankee and British officers be permitted to serve on Japanese ships. These requests were readily granted, and to the European and American naval experts that were sent to train the officers and jackies of Japan is due much of the record made by that nation in later days. Of even greater importance was the opening of the Naval academy at Annapolis to a certain number of Japanese students. Here were trained several of the admirals now distinguishing themselves in the war with Russia.

Powerful Vessels.

After the Boxer uprising, when the allies were withdrawn from Peking, Japan's military activity continued. The navy was strengthened by the introduction of some of the greatest fighting machines afloat. Today the Japanese fleet contains four battleships averaging over 15,000 tons each, two of them, the Mikasa and the Asahi, reaching 15,200. These are larger than any ships of the Russians and as large as any in the world.

Nor was the mikado's government satisfied with securing only the ships. She already had well trained gunners and crews, as had been shown in the battles of the Yalu and Port Arthur. These were not enough. The Spanish-American war showed what marksmanship will do. As soon as the American gunners were left idle after the close of that conflict Japan began bidding for them. It was estimated that just prior to the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war there were at least 300 American gunners in the navy of the mikado. These are the men who fought with Dewey at Manila and with Schley at Santiago.

Because of the character of her shores the torpedo boat is peculiarly effective in Japanese waters. As a result a large number of these were secured. Naval men in recent times had come to the conclusion that the effectiveness of these craft had been overestimated. So well have they been handled by the Japanese that this estimate is being revised.

It has long been held that a naturally bright nation, which has practically stood still for centuries, will, when brought into contact and competition with other peoples, develop with almost incredible rapidity. This theory seems to hold good in the case of the Japanese. In the manipulation of torpedo craft and, in fact, of every other type of fighting vessels, they were, up to a short time ago, humble pupils. Now they suddenly seem to have developed into leaders, actually able to teach their teachers.

The TOP COAT

is perhaps one of the "nobbiest" overgarments made. It has an air of jauntiness all its own.

But unless it is properly proportioned it loses its individuality.

You can depend upon the Clothcraft Top Coat to be fashioned on the proper lines.

The shoulders are broad, the collar clings closely to the neck, the back hangs gracefully, the whole garment is as shapely as the best tailors in the land can make it.

The illustration gives a good idea of the appearance and fit of the coat, but you will better appreciate its merit by seeing it.

Come to our store and examine it, look at the material, the lining, the trimmings—try it on and see what a superb garment it is.

You'll agree it is worth more than it costs $10 to $25.

And be sure to get the new style book.

It shows all the proper fashions for spring and summer as exemplified in "Clothcraft" creations. It's yours for the asking.

A SPRING NECESSITY.

What is it makes the money fly
Like sparrows when the spring is nigh,
But must be had, though it comes high?
The new spring hat.

What is it ladies talk about
And if they cannot have it pout,
Though it may look like all get out?
The new spring hat.

What is it that will make the bride
Or maid or matron swell with pride
As she goes for a walk or ride?
The new spring hat.

What is it makes the husband shake
His head and swear like any rake
And feel like jumping in the lake?
The new spring hat.

What is it that the humble gent
Who sells it to pay help and rent
Makes on it ninety-eight per cent?
The new spring hat.

What is it we must get somehow,
Or else have one tall family row,
Although we have to sell the cow?

She Would.

"Marie, will you marry me?"

The speaker was a young man of about twenty-seven summers and possibly twenty-four winters.

"How can that be?" you ask.

Easy enough. He had spent three years in Florida and missed the winters.

As he leaned forward, filled with yearning and with so much earnestness that he snapped a suspender button, his ears attuned to catch her lightest word, there came up dark misgivings in his heart such as fill a man's mind when he sits down to a plate of hash in a ten cent restaurant.

The question had not been asked in the same calm, offhand manner that he might have said to the grocer, "What is the price of that head of cabbage?" but his very soul went forth in the questioning, and his strong frame trembled like a billboard in a cyclone.

Would the answer be yes or no?

For months his courage had been taking physical culture exercises for this ordeal, and now the fateful moment had arrived. One word would mean either happiness and millinery bills or desolation and the long, weary search for a new girl.

Not for a moment did he dream that she would take as long in replying as he had taken in asking, nor was he wrong.

"Will I marry you?" she said slowly, her great eyes growing softer and her gum snatching the opportunity for a moment's rest.

"What do you suppose I have been letting you fool around here two winters for, burning up coal that cost money? I surely will if I ever get a chance, but if you are as slow about setting the date as you were about asking the question I may be too old by that time to take much interest in such matters."

He had found out what he had been longing to know.

He had also secured a slight foretaste of married life, only he didn't know it.

And don't bite worth a cent.

He hears the voice of nature true,
Or so he tells his wife,
And not another thing will do
Except the wild, free life.

He tramps through nature's rough back yard
And up and down the creek;
At home did he work half as hard
He'd be sick for a week.

Man, I can't understand your way,
Though I admire your pluck,
But if you had to fish for pay
You'd call it beastly luck.

Bonding Act to Build Court House and Jail at Oakland.

CHAPTER 471.

AN ACT to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether bonds, not to exceed the sum of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be issued by the County Commissioners of said county for the purpose of building and furnishing a new Court House and Jail, at the county seat, Oakland, in said county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the question of whether or not the County Commissioners of Garrett County shall issue bonds to an amount not less than seventy-five nor exceeding one hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing lots and furnishing and erecting a building, Court House, and a new Jail and furnishing the same, at Oakland, the county seat of said county, not to exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be submitted to the registered qualified voters at the Congressional election to be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in the year nineteen hundred and four, the said ticket to be voted to be printed on the congressional ballot to be used at said election, the ballot to be used in said election shall have printed on them for the issue of bonds or against the issue of bonds, and shall be counted and returned as other election returns are counted and made.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That if it shall be found by the returns of said judges of election that a majority of the votes cast in said county are for the issue of said bonds, then it shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Garrett County, within three months after said election, to issue said bonds to an amount not exceeding one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars in sums not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars each, and shall bear interest not to exceed five per centum per annum; and within nine months after said election, if it shall be decided by the ballots cast at said election, if it be decided by ballot cast that said bonds shall be issued, the said County Commissioners shall issue bonds, which bonds shall be signed by the President of the Board of County Commissioners, and to be countersigned by the clerk of the said board, and the said bonds shall be made payable in the following manner, that is to say: five thousand dollars each and every year, beginning with the year 1905, and they shall have coupons attached for the semi-annual interest, payable respectively on the first day of February and the first day of August in each year; the said bonds shall be dated as of the first day of August, 1905, and shall be forever exempt from all taxation for any purpose, and shall have printed on them a reference to the Act authorizing the issue thereof.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That said bonds shall be issued to mature at such date as shall not require the payment thereof of more than five thousand dollars in any one year; but none of said bonds shall be issued to mature before the first day of August, 1905.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That in order to pay the interest on said bonds the County Commissioners shall annually, beginning with their levy laying session in 1905, levy on the assessable property of the county a sufficient amount to pay said interest until the said bonds shall respectively mature; and for the payment of said bonds they shall, beginning with the year 1907, levy on the assessable property of said county the sum of five thousand dollars to pay said bonds, which shall be paid in the order of their serial number, beginning with serial number 1 and in their successive order.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That of the whole issue of said bonds so authorized or so much as may be necessary, the said County Commissioners shall immediately after signing said bonds, as hereinbefore provided, sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which said sale of said bonds shall be made upon due notice by publication in such news paper or news papers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper and necessary.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be applied by the County Commissioners of said county for the purchase of such lots and the erection and furnishing of a new Court House and Jail building, at Oakland, the county seat of said county, and for no other purpose; and for the building and furnishing of said Court House and Jail, the said County Commissioners shall contract by sealed bids for which contracts advertisements shall be made in such newspaper or newspapers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper, giving notice of the time and place of the public opening of such bids, and they shall require such bidder to file with their bids a good and sufficient bond with a surety or sureties to be approved by them in such penalty for the faithful performance of the contract thereunder as they may deem proper; and upon the opening of such bids the said County Commissioners shall award the said contract to the lowest responsible bidders, but they shall have the power to reject any and all bids.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1904.

PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS.

To Reimburse School Tax.

CHAPTER 20.

AN ACT to appropriate the sum of two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents out of the public school funds, to reimburse Garrett county for an instalment of State School tax withheld from said county in the year nineteen hundred and three and also to authorize and direct the Comptroller to apportion to said county the installment known as the March instalment of the state school tax for the year nineteen hundred and four, said instalment being the apportionment made to Garrett county on the 15th day of March in each year. Whereas an instalment of state school tax amounting to the sum two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents, was withheld from Garrett county in the year nineteen hundred and three and said county not being able to keep open its schools for seven and a half months in the year, as required by the school laws of the state, as by said law required to receive the March instalment of said school tax for the year nineteen hundred and three, the said inability of said county has been subject to large expenses in the erection of school houses, and the fact that the small population is scattered over a large extent of territory, creating a large number of school houses for the number of pupils required to be taught therein: Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller be, and he is hereby directed, to issue his warrant upon the Treasurer of the State in favor of the Board of County School Commissioners of Garrett county for the sum of two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety nine cents, said sum, in addition to the amount to which said county is entitled to receive, to be payed out of the public school funds of the state under existing laws.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to apportion Garrett county its proper proportion of said school tax for the year nineteen hundred and four, known as the March instalment of said school tax to be made by the Comptroller in pursuance of law, on the fifteenth day of March in each year, in the same manner as if the schools of Garrett had been kept open seven and one-half months in the year ending December 31, nineteen hundred and four.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the Board of School Commissioners s' all apply the said sums so received by the provisions of this Act to the support of the public schools of said county in the same manner as the other portion of the state school tax received by said county are intended to be applied under the provisions of the existing laws of the state.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 3d, 1904.

Prohibiting Sale of Liquor in Districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12.

CHAPTER 103.

AN ACT to prohibit the granting of licenses for the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in Election Districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12 of Garrett county, Maryland.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland, to issue to any person or persons or corporation a license to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in election districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12, commonly known as Sang Run, Deer Park and Bittinger districts of Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 18th, 1904.

Prohibiting Sale of Liquor at Bond.

CHAPTER 673.

AN ACT to prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Lower Savage School House in the village of Bond, Garrett county, Maryland.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, Maryland, to issue license to any person or persons to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Lower Savage School House, in the village of Bond, Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 12th, 1904.

Carrying of Firearms.

CHAPTER 177.

AN ACT to prohibit all persons under fifteen years of age from carrying or having in their possession firearms of any description within the limits of Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for all persons under the age of fifteen years to carry or have in his or her possession any shot gun, rifle, revolver or other firearm of any description within the limits of Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person convicted of violating this Act before any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than twenty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail for not less than ten nor more than thirty days for each and every offence.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all fines imposed and collected for violation of this Act shall be paid to the County Commissioners of Garrett county to be used by them in the improvement of the public roads of said county.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 25th, 1904.

Against Bringing Indigent Persons Into Garrett County.

CHAPTER 296.

AN ACT to prevent any person from removing and bringing any poor, indigent or insane persons from any state, county or town into Garrett county, with the intent to leave such person a charge and burden upon Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to remove, bring, or entice any poor, indigent or insane person from any state, county or town to Garrett county, with intent to make said Garrett county chargeable with the support of such poor, indigent or insane person, under penalty of a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the Maryland House of Correction for a period of not less than two months nor more than two years, or both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall have the power to return and remove such poor, indigent or insane person who shall come into Garrett county for the purpose of charging Garrett county for the support of such persons, to such state, county or town where such poor, indigent or insane persons reside; and the County Commissioners may recover from such person or persons, state, county or town such expenses as incurred by reason of the support and return of such poor, indigent or insane person.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage

Approved April 7th, 1904.

Not to Sell Liquor Within Three Miles of Fairview Church.

CHAPTER 5.

AN ACT to prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Fairview Church in Election District number Eight.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett county, Maryland, to issue license to any person or persons, association or body corporate to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county, within three miles of Fairview Church in Election District number Eight in Garrett county.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved February 18th, 1904.

PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS.

Incorporating Friendsville.

CHAPTER 390.

AN ACT for the incorporation of the town of Friendsville in District number Two in Garrett county; and for the amendment of article 12 of the Code of Public Laws of the State of Maryland, entitled Garrett County, by adding additional sections thereto, to be known as Sections 111A, 111B, 111C, 111D, 111E, 111F, 111F½, 111G, 111H, 111J, 111K, 111L, 111M, 111O, 111P, and 111Q, and to read as follows:

SECTION 111A. That the inhabitants of the town of Friendsville in district No. 2 in Garrett county, Maryland, are hereby incorporated by the name of the "Mayor and Council of Friendsville," and by such name shall sue and be sued, may have and use a common seal, and may hold real, personal and mixed property and dispose of the same when the best interests of the town may demand.

SEC. 111B. Be it further enacted, That the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville are hereby declared to be as follows: Beginning at a bounded, running south 68½ degrees west 240 perches to a stake on brow of hill above coal bank, north 81½ degrees west 152 perches to a leaning tree a little above and beyond Homer Friend's house, thence north 8 degrees west 280 perches to the beginning.

SEC. 111C. Be it further enacted, That said corporation shall be governed by a Mayor and six Councilmen and that W. T. Savage of said town be, and is hereby named Mayor of the said city for the two years from the passage of this Act, ending the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February in 1906, and that Wm. H. H. Friend, Allen J. Mason and Arthur Chisholm, be and the same are hereby named and designated as the Councilmen for the first two years from the passage of this Act ending on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February, 1906, and that Frederic G. Fox, John W. McCullough and George J. Kolb are hereby named as Councilmen to serve for the one year from the passage of this Act, ending on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February, 1905, and hereafter an election shall be held on the first Tuesday in February each and every year for the election of three Councilmen to serve for two years from the date of their election or until their successors shall be duly elected and qualified. And an election shall be held on the first Tuesday in February, 1906, for the election of Mayor of said town to serve for two years or until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified, and an election shall be held thereafter in every second year for the election of a Mayor for the said town.

SEC. 111C. And be it enacted, That the Mayor and the Council herein named shall have power to pass all such ordinances for conducting the elections herein provided for, or which may be hereafter authorized to be held, and shall make return thereof to the clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett county. And the qualified voters of any of said elections shall be bona fide residents, male, shall be 21 years of age or over of said town of Friendsville, who have been residents of State for the period of one year and of said town for the period of six months continuously next before the date of any such election; and that no one shall be eligible for the office of Mayor or Councilmen of said town unless he shall be a real estate owner or husband of a bona fide real estate owner in said town. And the Mayor shall have been a resident of said town for three years previous to his election and the Councilmen shall have been residents of said town two years prior to their election.

SEC. 111D. And be it further enacted, That the said Mayor and Council may from time to time cause an assessment to be made of all the property liable to the state and county taxes within the corporate limits, and to levy a tax thereon not exceeding twenty-five cents on the one hundred dollars in any one year, and that said property shall be assessed at its actual cash value; and that the land included in the above named corporate limits, which have not been laid out as town lots or as town property shall be exempt from taxation, with the exception of the buildings and personal effects thereon. And the said Council may appoint an assessor and collector of taxes and fix his salary for compensation, and provide for a method of collecting the taxes by ordinance, and also the method of making assessments; and any person aggrieved by any assessment made under this provision shall have the right of an appeal to the said Mayor and Council of said town of Friendsville.

SEC. 111E. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said Mayor of the said town to see that the ordinances of the town are duly and faithfully executed, and he shall appoint subject to the confirmation of the Council all such persons as agents and servants of the corporation as may be necessary to carry out the objects and purposes of the incorporation and enforce the ordinances to be passed thereby.

SEC. 111F. And be it further enacted, That said Council shall have power to pass all such ordinances not contrary to the Constitution and laws of this state, as it may deem necessary, for the good government of the town; for the protection of the town's property, rights and privileges; for the preservation of the peace and good order and securing persons and property from violence and danger and destruction; for the protection of the health, comfort and convenience of the citizens of Friendsville, and visitors thereto or sojourners therein; for providing proper and suitable lights on the streets; for establishing, maintaining and regulating an adequate police force; to regulate the management and location of starch factories, glue factories, renderies, tallow chandlers, bone factories, soap factories, hide houses, tanneries, slaughter houses, breweries, distilleries, livery stables, foundries and all other establishments of which the business or trade may become obnoxious or injurious to public comfort or health; to prohibit the erection of such buildings, or the continuance of such noxious occupations therein, whenever the public health requires it; to prevent or regulate the use of fire arms, fire works, bon fires or other things or practices tending to endanger persons or property; to regulate or prohibit the running at large of cattle, horses, swine, fowls, sheep, goats, dogs or other animals; to authorize the impounding, keeping, sale and redemption of such animals when found in violation of the ordinances in such cases provided; to prevent the deposit of any unwholesome substance, either on public or private property; to compel its removal to designated points and to require slops, garbage, ashes and other waste or unwholesome material to be removed to designated points, or to require the occupants or residents on premises to place them conveniently for removal; to compel the occupants of any premises, building or out-houses, situated in said city, when the same have been filthy or unwholesome to abate or clean the same, to authorize the same to be done by the proper officers and to assess the expenses thereon against such property; to regulate or prevent the storage of gun powder, tar, pitch, resin, coal oil, benzine, turpentine, hemp, cotton, nitro-glycerine, dynamite, giant powder, petroleum, gasolene or gas, or any product thereof, or any other explosive or combustible material which may seem to be dangerous; to authorize the removal or confinement of such persons having infectious or pestilential diseases; to pass all ordinances and orders and to expend such sums of money as may be necessary within the limitations therein provided for the protection, maintainance and preservation of the water supply of the city and the prevention of the pollution thereof; to regulate the selling, weighing or measuring of hay, wood, coal, coke and all other articles sold by weight and measure, and to provide for their inspection and selling; to make all regulations which may be deemed expedient for the promotion of health or suppression of disease; to regulate the construction of chimneys, smoke stacks, hearths, ovens, and the erection of stove and stove pipes, boilers and apparatus used in buildings or other places and cause the same to be removed or made secure, when considered dangerous; to suppress, restrain and regulate bawdy houses of ill fame and to prohibit the youth of said city from being on the streets, lanes or alleys at unreasonable hours of the night; to punish and suppress tramps and vagrants by imposing fines or both fines and imprisonment at hard labor, and to make all appropriate ordinances all nuisances in said town which are so defined at common law, whether they are herein specifically named or not; to regulate the use of side walks and all structures in, under or over the same and to require the owner or occupant of the premises to keep the side-walks in front of same not to exceed 20 feet free from snow and other obstructions and prescribe hours for cleaning the same; to regulate and prevent the throwing or depositing of sweepings, dust, ashes, offal, dirt, garbage, paper, hand bills, dirty liquors, or any other materials into any street, alley or public places for signs, sign posts, awnings, awning posts, poles, horse troughs, steps, railroad tracks, racks, posting hand bills and advertisements and display of goods, wares and merchandise; to cause the streets, lanes and alleys to be side walked, paved, graded, repaired, repaved, regraded, drained or covered, or to close streets, or parts of streets, lanes or alleys; to regulate and license the use of coaches, hacks, drays and all other vehicles for the transportation of passengers, freights or other articles to or from points within said city, for hire or pay; to regulate, license, tax restrain or prohibit theatrical and other exhibitions, shows or entertainments, for which monies is demanded or received; provided that lectures on scientific, historic, benevolent, artistic, religious, or literary subjects, and apparatus for the elucidation of the same, and specimens of fine art shall not be deemed to be within the provision; to regulate the sales of all kinds of property at auction in the streets, stores, shops, or elsewhere in the city; and to license auctioneers, and all venders of property on the streets or squares, or other public places in the said city; to license, tax, regulate, suppress and prohibit hawkers, and itinerant dealers, peddlers and pawn brokers and to revoke such license at pleasure; to license, tax, regulate and prohibit the keeping or harboring of dogs; to license, tax and regulate branch stores and all other concerns established in said city for temporary business only.

SEC. 111F½. And be it enacted, That the corporate authorities of the town of Friendsville as by this bill provided shall, on the fourth Tuesday in April, 1904, order an election for the purpose of determining whether or not license for the sale of liquor shall be issued in said town, and at said election they shall provide two tickets, on one of which shall be printed "For Liquor License," and on the other "Against Liquor License," and at said election only freeholders of the town who are otherwise qualified as voters shall be eligible to vote. The Town Clerk, herein named, shall secure from the Clerk to the County Commissioners a certified list of all freeholders in said town, which list shall be verified as to the voter's qualifications by comparison with the registration list of said town of Friendsville in the office of the Supervisors of Election for said county; and for the purposes of this election the said certified list under the seal of the County Commissioners, attested by the Clerk of the town of Friendsville made in duplicate shall be the registration list by which the Judges of Election shall be guided in taking the vote on said question. The Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall appoint three judges and two clerks to hold said election, and they shall severally take the oath provided for judges and clerks by Art. 33 of the Code of Public General Laws title "Elections," and the polls shall be opened at one o'clock, P. M., and close at six o'clock, P. M.; said judges and clerks shall make return to the Mayor and Council of the results of said election and if it shall be found that a majority of the votes cast are "For Liquor License," then and in that event license shall be issued in conformity with the provisions of the succeeding sections of this act; but if a majority of the votes cast shall be found to be "Against Liquor License," then no license shall be issued except after another election as provided for by section 111O—should any such election be held. The Mayor and Council shall by handbills posted in said town give five days' notice of said election.

SEC. 111G. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons being the lessor or owner of any hotel property capable of comfortably accommodating fifteen guests or more with suitable and comfortable rooms and beds and bedding shall upon application to the clerk of said corporation and the payment of a minimum license fee of $250.00 (two hundred and fifty dollars) per year shall be authorized to sell liquors, malt and spirituous in the town of Friendsville at a bar to be located in said hotel and no where else, and said bar shall be closed promptly at nine o'clock every week night, and shall be closed from nine o'clock P. M., until six o'clock A. M., of the following day; and any one violating this provision by opening or selling any liquors between the hours named, or from any time from nine o'clock on Saturday night until six o'clock Monday morning, shall be deemed to have violated any privilege herein contained or acquired by the payment of the license fee aforesaid, for the sale of liquor, and the license so granted him by said corporation to be at once revoked, and the amount paid shall be paid to the town of Friendsville and it be shall sell any liquor after such forfeiture brought to his notice by an order of the Mayor and Council of said town he shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall upon conviction thereof after indictment be fined not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than two hundred dollars ($200.00) for each and every sale of liquor made after he shall have been so notified by the said Mayor and Council of Friendsville of the forfeiture of his license.

SEC. 111H. And be it further enacted, That the said Council may elect a Clerk to said Council and fix his compensation and the length of his term, and that they may also fix the compensation of the Mayor of the said town.

SEC. 111J. And be it further enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall retain jurisdiction over the present county road running through in the boundaries of said corporate limit of Friendsville, and that said Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall have jurisdiction and supervision over all sidewalks along said road and all streets, lanes and alleys as they may accept and take under control from time to time, and they shall keep a record and description of the same, with the length and location thereof. And no street or alley soall be deemed to be under the control of said corporation so as to render said corporation liable on account of injury or damage arising therefrom until it shall be shown to have been accepted by the records of said corporation so kept by the clerk of said corporation.

SEC. 111K. And be it further enacted, That the said Mayor and Council shall have the power to compel the property owners binding along any of said streets, lanes or alleys so accepted by said corporation and recorded among its proceedings, to construct and keep in repair side-walks and foot-ways of their property binding on said streets and roads not exceeding 200 feet and may pass all such ordinances as may be necessary to compel the construction and repair of said side-walk. And they shall have power to enforce the construction and repair of said side-walks by fines imposed upon the property owners for a failure to construct and repair after fifteen days notice previously given, which said fines shall be collectable as other fines imposed for the violation of the ordinances of the town, as hereinafter set forth and stated.

SEC. 111L. And be it further enacted, That said Mayor and Council of Friendsville may establish and maintain a town lock-up and may confine therein all persons convicted of violation of their ordinances in default of the payment of fines imposed for such violations, or may at their option confine such person in the county jail at the expense of the said town, or they may require such person, in default of payment of fines, to work out such fines and costs upon the streets or other improvements of said town, such person to be allowed as a credit on such fines or costs the same wages as are paid other employees of said town for the same character of work.

SEC. 111M. And be it further enacted, That all fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed for violating any ordinance passed by said Mayor and Council shall be recoverable in the name of the Mayor and Council of Friendsville before such justice of the peace of the State of Maryland, residing in district No. 2 in Garrett county as may be elected police justice for said town by the Mayor and Council and no other, as small debts, and shall be paid to the Mayor and Council for use of said town. And any one feeling agrieved by any judgment rendered by said police justice shall have the right of appeal to the circuit court for Garrett county to the next term of said court, but no judgment, fine or penalty imposed shall be stayed unless the party taking the appeal shall file a bond to be approved by the said justice in double the amount of the fine and costs to the Mayor and Council in Friendsville conditioned upon the successful prosecution of said appeal.

SEC. 111O. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this Act, the provisions of the Act of 1898, chapter 77, entitled "An Act to Prohibit the sale of Spirituous and Fermented Liquors and Lager Beer in Election District No. 2 of Garrett county," be and the same is hereby repealed so far as the same shall apply to that part of Election District No. 2 contained within the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville, in Garrett county, Maryland, hereby incorporated, and said part of said election district No. 2 within said corporate limits is hereby exempted from the operation of the provisions of said Act of 1898, chapter 77, and when ever any hotel keeper having accommodation for fifteen guests in said corporate limits of Friendsville shall produce to the clerk of the circuit court for Garrett county a receipt for the sum of $400.00 (two hundred and fifty dollars) paid to the clerk of the Mayor and Council of Friendsville for a license to sell spirituous and fermented liquors in said town, then the clerk of the circuit court for Garrett county shall issue a license to such parties to sell spirituous and fermented liquors and lager beer in the corporate limits of said town of Friendsville, upon the terms and conditions and for the license fee or charge as other state licenses are issued for the sale of spirituous liquors and lager beer and in case his license so granted by the Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall be forfeited under the provisions of this Act, and he shall be convicted as herein provided, then he shall no longer have any right to sell under his state license.

SEC. 111P. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the clerk of the circuit court of Garrett county to issue license to any person, persons, firm or corporation to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer after April 30th, 1904, outside the corporate limits of Friendsville, within four miles of the public school at Friendsville, Md.

SEC. 111Q. And be it further enacted, That whenever hereafter ten freeholders of the town shall desire to have the sale of liquor abolished, they shall petition the Mayor and Council at least thirty days before the February election provided for in each year, to submit at said election to the voters of said town, whether or not the license herein provided for shall be abolished; and the Mayor shall have printed on separate tickets to be voted at said election the words "For Liquor License," and "Against Liquor License," and if a majority of the votes cast shall be cast For Liquor License the same shall be issued as hereinbefore provided; but if a majority of the votes cast shall be Against Liquor License, then no more license to sell liquors shall be granted after the expiration of the term for which any such licenses then issued shall end; and if the votes of the majority shall be Against Liquor License and the sale of such liquors be prohibited, any ten freeholders in said town may, at the next ensuing election petition for a submission of the question again, and a similar ticket shall be prepared and voted and the majority for or against liquor license shall prevail and licenses shall be issued as aforesaid or not as the case may be and the voters shall decide; and under these conditions and provisions the question of license or no license may be submitted at each and every annual election; no person who is not a freeholder within the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville and possessing all the other qualifications set forth in this act shall be entitled to vote on the license question.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 7, 1904.

Amending Deer Park Charter.

CHAPTER 187.

AN ACT to amend the Charter of the town of Deer Park, by empowering the Mayor and Common Council thereof to impose a license tax on any and all kinds of business carried on within the limits of said town.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That in addition to all other powers vested in the Mayor and Common Council of the town of Deer Park by previous Acts of the Legislature of Maryland, said Mayor and Common Council shall have the power to pass all such ordinances as may be necessary to impose a license tax upon all circuses, shows, theatrical troupes exhibiting within the limits of said town, and upon all livery stable keepers, owners of hacks, carts, wagons, drays or other vehicles kept for hire, and upon all auctions, stores, shops, saloons, dancing halls and other places of amusement, and upon hawkers and peddlers, and upon all other trades, business or professions operating or carried on within the limits of said town of Deer Park, or that may come therein for the purpose of transacting business; the amount of said license tax for each and every year shall be as follows: On all dancing halls not more than one hundred dollars; on each and every saloon not less than one hundred and fifty nor more than three hundred dollars; on each and every livery stable, not more than ten dollars for each rig; for each huckster or peddler not more than fifty dollars; for each merchant or store keeper not more than ten dollars, and for all other kinds of business, trades, or profession such sum as said Mayor and Common Council shall in their judgment deem proper. No license tax shall be issued for a period of less than one year (except for circuses, shows and theatrical troupes) and shall be dated from the first day of May in each year. All applications for license shall be made to the Mayor of said town, who is hereby authorized to issue same upon the payment of the license tax provided for by the ordinances of said town.

SECTION 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 7th, 1904.

Amending License Law as Applicable to Accident District.

CHAPTER 554.

AN ACT to repeal and re enact, with amendments Section 6 of Chapter 610 of the Acts of 1898, entitled "An Act to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county, to determine by ballot whether spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in said county, and to regulate the terms and conditions on which the sale thereof may be made, in case the majority of the voters of said county shall determine said question in the affirmative and to regulate the sale thereof by druggists and pharmacists."

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Section 6 of Chapter 610 of the Acts of 1898, entitled "An Act to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in said county, and to regulate the terms and conditions on which the sale thereof may be made, in case the majority of the voters of said county shall determine said question in the affirmative, and to regulate the sale thereof by druggists and pharmacists," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, so as to read as follows:

6. No spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in any election district of said county, except as provided for by section five of this Act, and also upon the following terms, viz: each and every applicant, person or persons, house, corporation, company or association, shall be recommended to said clerk by at least twelve respectable freeholders living in the Election District in which said saloon is located, and within one mile of the place where said liquors or alcoholic bitters are to be sold, as a fit person to traffic in the article, nor until such applicant or applicants, applying for such license, shall have filed with said clerk a bond with at least two sureties, to be approved by said clerk in the penal sum of two thousand dollars, conditioned to the payment of all fines, penalties, costs and damages, to which the person or persons obtaining said license may become liable for any violation of any of the license laws of this State; and said clerk is hereby prohibited from approving any bond under this section unless it shall appear to him, by good evidence, that the sureties on said bond are worth, in real estate, double the amount of the penalty of said bond, and that in no event shall any person sell such article on the Sabbath day, commonly called "Sunday," and for violation of this provision such person, natural or artificial shall be subjected to the penalties provided for in section four of this Act. Provided, however, that the repeal and re-enactment of this section of said Chapter 610 shall apply only to Election District No. 5, commonly called Accident District and that the said section 6, as originally enacted shall stand and be the law as to all other districts in said county.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1904.

Republican Primaries

The Republicans of Garrett county are requested to assemble in primary meetings in their respective districts on SATURDAY, APRIL 30TH, 1904.

for the purpose of electing five delegates from each election district, to attend the county convention to be held in Oakland Maryland, on to select three delegates to attend the Sixth Congressional District Convention to be held at ROCKVILLE, ON MAY 10th, 1904, at noon, to nominate a candidate to represent the said Sixth Congressional District of the United States; also to elect two district delegates and two alternates to National Convention at Chicago June 21st, 1904, one Presidential elector and one member of the Republican Board of Appeals, and delegates to the State Convention at Baltimore, May 11th 1904.

MONDAY, MAY 3rd, 1904.

The Baltimore convention will elect delegates-at-large to the National convention at Chicago.

The members of the Republican county committees in the various districts, are requested to make all necessary arrangements for the holding of these primary meetings.

AUSTIN BROWN, Chairman.

JUDGE PARKER is credited with believing that Mr. Bryan will be "amenable to reason." A man with that kind of faith in human nature will have to be watched to prevent him from loaning money to strangers on a train.

ATTEND THE PRIMARIES.

Attention is called to the notice published at the head of this page regarding the primary meetings to be held in the several districts of the county on Saturday, April 30th.

These meetings for the purpose of electing delegates to the county convention to be held here Monday, May 2nd, should, and we hope will, be well attended, not alone that suitable persons may be selected, but to show that the voters have the party's welfare at heart, an indication, as it were, that the people fully appreciate the privilege of participating in the preliminaries of a contest later on of greater moment to the country and the party. The splendid condition of the Nation's affairs should be an incentive to all to do everything possible toward the retention in power of the Republican party, and the interest in party matters throughout the country is an augury of success.

President Roosevelt is sure of a renomination. The same can be said of Congressmen Pearre and the good record he has made in the past leaves little if any doubt of his re-election.

Interest here begets enthusiasm elsewhere and the success of the Republican party insures a continuation of prosperity.

Attend the primaries!

PARTISAN LEGISLATION.

The session of the General Assembly of Maryland for 1904, which came to an end by constitutional limitation at midnight on the 4th inst., will go down in history as perhaps the most extremely partisan of all sessions of that body up to the present time. The larger part of the winter was given up to concocting and enacting into law schemes by which the Democrats hope to make the State of Marvland solidly Democratic for an indefinite period. Among the bills of this character passed was, first, that to submit a constitutional amendment to a vote of the people, by which it is hoped a large number of the colored people will be disfranchised. This proposed amendment is of such a drastic character and contains provisions so absurd that Governor Warfield intimated his intention to veto it, but was prevented from doing so by its transmission to the clerk of the Court of Appeals without having been submitted for his approval or rejection. In a special message to the Senate he claims that this was a clear violation of his prerogative as Governor, and pointed out very forcibly the objectionable features of the amendment; but his message was treated with scant courtesy, if not with contempt. Another outrageously partisan measure is a bill abolishing party designations after the names of candidates on official ballots, chiefly in counties having numerous colored voters. This law applies only to Anne Arundel, Calvert, Charles, Frederick, Garrett, Kent, Prince George's St. Mary's, Somerset Talbot and Worcester counties. Still another partisan measure is a bill substituting minority for bipartison representation on boards of registration for municipal elections in Frederick. The Senate passed a bill to substitute minority for equal representation on boards of registration and judges of election throughout the State, but it was quietly hinted that the measure would meet with a gubernatorial veto, and it was suffered to die without action by the House of Delegates.

EX-GOV. LLOYD LOWNDES.

"The candidacy of ex-Gov. Lloyd Lowndes of Maryland was at one time regarded as possible, but since Maryland is now placed in the Democratic column by the elimination of the colored vote, there is not much for Mr. Lowndes. He is probably the most popular Republican in Maryland and almost the only one upon whom the Republicans of the State could unite, but his nomination would not bring much advantage to the party in view of present conditions in Maryland."

The above is a clipping from a late issue of the Washington Times, and we desire to correct any misapprehension that may arise in respect to the conclusions of the writer. There is no question that Mr. Lowndes is the most popular Republican in Maryland, and one upon whom the party in this State would cordially unite; but there is ample occasion for denying that Maryland has been placed in the Democratic column by the recent mean, indirect attempt of the Legislature to eliminate the colored vote in several of the counties. Mr. Lowndes is not only a popular Republican, but he is most highly regarded by his fellow citizens of all parties, thousands of whom, appreciating his ability and statesmanship and knowing him to be a gentleman of exceptionally high character and sterling worth, would discard party lines for the time at least and flock to his standard, giving to "Roosevelt and Lowndes," as candidates for President and vice-President, a majority that would utterly submerge the opposition and confound every "Gormandiser" in the State so that the "Democratic column" embracing Maryland would be simply invisible.

It is known that ex Gov. Lowndes has had ample experience in the affairs of government, he has occupied a place in the front rank of the National Congress, when Maryland had no better represenative and the Federal Government no superior legislator, and as our Chief Executive he was pre-eminent, without an equal in the history of the State, always a staunch and true Republican, in full accord with the principles of the party, conservative and just, thus meriting the recognition of the Republican National Convention which his friends who know him best so earnestly desire. We have seen that gentlemen from other states have been suggested as candidates for vice-President—all Senators and good men but not superior to Mr. Lowndes—and we express the opinion that there is no occasion for disturbing these gentlemen in the honorable places which they are acceptable filling. Let them alone. Nominate Mr. Lowndes, he does not live in a glass house, and our party would be strengthened not only at the polls, but in the councils of the Nation. Mr. L's good name is not restricted to Maryland. His strength is not confined to a pent-up Utica. He is widely and favorably known throughout the country, and is probably as popular in West Virginia as in Maryland, and we believe that his nomination would also insure that State to the Republicans. In a word or two, we say, nominate Mr. Lowndes for vice-President, and the ticket, "Roosevelt and Lowndes," would be the synonym of strength and success—the guarantee of progress, peace and prosperity.—Annapolis Republican.

THE good roads bill will be favorably reported to the U. S. Senate in December. This will carry with it an appropriation of eight million dollars for the improvement of roads. For every dollar expended by the several states the government will spend another dollar. They cannot receive a sum in excess of a certain sum based on population of the states in question. No state is to get less than $100,000.

FROM the stand point of a layman it seems reasonable to question the constitutionality of a provision of the election law, passed at the late session of the General Assembly of Marvland, by which the party designation is to be omitted after the names of the candidates in certain counties and inserted in other counties. As a general principle it cannot be doubted that the legislature has no authority to discriminate in a general law, in the matter of the rights of citizens in different counties of the State, and the courts should hold, on the ground of public policy, if such legislation is not directly prohibited by constitutional provision, that it is null and void.

Sale Made of The Commonwealth Tannery Ratified by Court.

PRIVATE BID OF $35.000 ACCEPTED

The Business of the Concern Will Be Reorganized at Once and Plant Will Continue Operations Without Interruption.

The troubles of the Commonwealth Tanning Company of Garrett County are about over and in the distance a clear sky is about open.

This concern was thrown into bankruptcy several months ago by some of its creditors and Messrs. Fred. A. Thayer and Edward H. Sincell, representing a majority of the claims against it, were appointed receivers by the Circuit Court, which appointment was later confirmed by Judge Morris of the United States District Court in Baltimore, who ordered the plant and materials sold at public auction. The receivers advertised the property but at the sale the highest bid made was $15,000. The property was withdrawn and Judge Morris instructed the receivers, on the 14th inst., to receive for ten days, private bids for the property. This they did and on Monday the bids were opened. The highest among them was one of $35,000, made by gentlemen representing parties who desire to reorganize the company by forming a new corporation.

The bid was submitted to Judge Morris Tuesday afternoon by the receivers, who at once ratified and confirmed the sale.

Under the reorganization plan the property will be operated for the benefit of the creditors. Already contracts have been made for hides and the business will go on without interruption.

The satisfactory turn which the affairs of the company has taken is a matter for congratulation all around.

Mr. Palmer will be retained as superintendent of the plant under the new company. The ability he displayed in the management prior to the introduction of Mr. Maxwell into its affairs will soon result in the retrievement of its fortunes.

Proposed Telephone Line Extension.

The Bloomington correspondent of the Peidmont Independent, in his last week's letter to that paper, had the following to say which will be of interest to many in all sections of the county:

"Mr Mallett, president of the Garrett County Telephone Co., and Mr. Smith were in town Wednsday in the interest of the above company. They were soliciting subscribers for stock in their company, and if enough stock can be sold they will run a line here, and through the exchange system people will have communication with Blaine, Oakland Byard, Cumberland, Frostburg, Piedmont, Keyser and intermediate points. Our people should be interested in this telephone system and liberally subscribe for stock as it is a paying institution for the stockholders and the rates for services are extremely low. Mr. Jarbo Stillenbarger will look after the interest of the company at this point and will cheerfully answer all questions regarding this line. The stock is only ten dollars per share. Let our citizens subscribe liberally and let us see a telephone line to this place in the near future. This line connects with the Western Maryland at Deer Park and the Gordon system at Piedmont and all subscribers will have free exchange over both the Western Maryland and Gordon system."

"LUNCH ROOM" DENNETT INSANE.

Was Found Wandering in the Hills Near San Francisco.

Many persons in this section will be pained to learn that Mr. Alfred W. Dennett, who built and equipped Hotel Dennet, at Mountain Lake Park, and the originator and owner of the unique "Dennett's Surpassing Coffee" restaurants with their tiling, their pictures and their unusual combination of mottoes, which are familiar to the people of nearly every large city from New York to San Francisco, is insane. He was found wandering in the Piedmont hills near San Francisco early Monday morning with a pillow slip wound about his head, yelling "Glory! glory!"

Dennett has not had, for some time, any interest in the restaurants that bear his name. He lost his entire fortune in a mining venture, and recently took to selling Bibles. A company was formed to buy his string of restaurants, and it is conducting them much after the fashion of their original owner. Mrs. Amelia Swayne, formerly of Chicago, is the manager of the single Baltimore house. The other was burned in the big fire.

Anyone who has but once been in a Dennett restaurant will never forget the bathroom-like tilling that covers the walls nor the gaudy works of art that adorn them nor the quotations from the Bible and elsewhere. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver" does not attract more than the usual perfunctory attention paid to those holy aphorisms that have been donged in the ears of the average sinner ever since he started going to Sunday school but "Keep your eye on your coat and hat," &c., which hangs as a companion piece, makes one read both twice and reflect.

He was placed in the city prison at San Francisco after he was found. He attacked two "trusties," Louis Hasty and Fred Wright, and was overpowered only with the greatest difficulty. Dennett said that he could find no warmth in the bed that he had been occupying, and that he had been searching for a place to build a fire. His boarding house land lady said that he had been crying aloud for help all night from the Salvation Army. He was removed later to a hospital and placed in the insane ward pending examination before the lunacy commissioners.

"WET" TICKET WON IN FRIENDSVILLE

At the Election to Decide the License Question Held Tuesday.

MAJORITY FOR LICENSE WAS 15.

Some Question Has Been Raised as to the Legality of Certain Ballots Cast—Property Qualification the the Stumbling Block.

Under the provisions of the charter incorporating the town of Friendsville, in this country, passed at the recent session of the Legislature, an election was held on Tuesday to decide whether or not spirituous and fermented liquors shall be sold within the limits of the town after May 1st of the present year.

Under the act incorporating the town it is provided that "only freeholders of the town who are otherwise qualified as voters shall be eligible to vote" upon the question of license, said election to be held on the fourth Tuesday of April between the hours of 1 o'clock and 6 o'clock p. m. To meet the property qualification so that they could have a voice in the election about twenty-five men purchased a lot in the town and parceled it out among themselves, having deeds executed and recorded for the same in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court in Oakland, thus becoming freeholders.

In all 55 votes were cast, as follows: For license, 45; against license, 20.

Those opposing the granting of license alleged that the twenty-five votes cast by the nominal freeholders were illegal and threaten to take steps in the courts to prevent the Clerk from issuing license to any who may apply for the same.

The election was carried on very quietly and was held in the office of Justice W. H. H. Friend.

TWO FARMHOUSES BURNED.

One Was Near Swanton and the Other Near Blaine.

Friday morning at about the same hour two farmhouses in this county were consumed by fire, both blaze originating in the same manner—defective flues.

Daniel Mosser, residing about a mile north of Swanton, was one of the unfortunates, his house, a comfortable and almost new building, being burned to the ground along with some pieces of furniture which could not be gotten out. He carried no insurance either on the building or its contents.

The other fire occured on Mr. James Swan Frick's property near Blaine and tenented by our old soldier friend J. W. Harvey, who lost nearly all his furniture and clothing besides that of his wife and daughter. The building was partly log and partly frame, and belonged to Mr. Harvey, he having built a portion of it at his own expense. To relieve him somewhat in his misfortune a subscription paper has been circulated among his neighbors and friends who have generously contributed.

H. T. BEALL DIES IN NEBRASKA.

Was An Heir to An Estate and Was for Years Thought Dead.

There are not many persons of Allegany and Garrett counties who remember Henry Tomlinson Beall, who was many years ago a well known citizen of what is now Garrett county. He died three months ago at Fairfield, Nebraska. He was the youngest son of Judge Isaac Beall, who was the youngest son of Capt. Thomas Beall, of Samuel, the founder or father of our city. The mother of the deceased was Rebecca Tomlinson Beall, one of the three daughters of Jesse Tomlinson. Henry T. Beall was the last surviving grandson of the old proprietor of Fort Cumberland, so called in early times.

Mr. Beall was born at or near Cumberland in the year 1825, and was nearly an octogenarian at his death. His parents, about the year 1832, moved to the Little Meadows, now Garrett county, near the residence of the father-in-law, where they lived all the remainder of their lives, and where Henry grew up to manhood. He became the owner of a fine estate called "Chimberazo," upon which he resided for a number of years. Shortly after the Civil War he sold his lands and moved down to the Shenandoah Valley, where he remained for several years. His next move was to Nebraska, in its earliest years, where he finished his very quiet life. He was noted for his style of existence—almost secluded in his ways of living. His residence was but little known in the latter half of his life. In fact, for a number of years he was supposed to be dead and in law was so treated. A strange incident, this, in his life, the result of his seclusiveness. He had a brother Samuel Beall, who for many years lived in St. Louis. He was much of the same nature and habits as the other brother. Even his brothers and sisters did not know of his existence or whereabouts. About a dozen years ago he died without children or wife, leaving an estate of about $10,000, but no will. His heirs were hunted up and most of them found, but Henry T. Beall was treated as dead in law. But strange to say, a woman, claiming to be his widow, with two children, appeared in court and obtained the share of the living Henry T. Beall. It was claimed that satisfactory evidence was presented to the appropriate court of the death of Henry T. Beall and of the right of the claimants to his share in the estate of Samuel Beall. There was certainly some crooked proceedings, as Henry T. Beall was then living and without a wife.

In boyhood days he was a school fellow with the writer of this sketch, at a select school at the Little Meadows, with Charles G. Slemaker as teacher. We sat side by side on the same slab bench, with a plain pine board for a writing desk. He was bright and apt in every way and was no doubt the superior in his class of about six or eight boys, two of whom are yet still living. He was confessedly the finest penman of the school and his fine art in this line was done with the "great goose quill." Metallic pens were not then in use—if at all, in favored places.

Lectures at the Oakland Normal.

The Oakland Normal school is meeting with success in point of numbers and the enrollment is still increasing. During the term lectures will be delivered by Drs. H. W. McComas and M. C. Hinebaugh, Messrs. J. E. Harned, E. A. Browning, J. C. Reninger, S. T. Jones, Revs. H. Scott and W. H. Miller. Among the subjects to be discussed will be those treating of the human system, a microscopical exhibition of the circulation of the blood, literature and its beauties, pedagogy, banking, method, etc. All the above subjects will be made applicable to school work. On Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock Rev. Miller will deliver a lecture on the "Value of Method," to which the public is invited as well as to the other lectures.

On the inside pages of this paper today will be found a number of the local laws passed at the recent session of the State Legislature. Attention is especially directed to Chapter 177 prohibiting certaian persons from carrying firearms of and description or having the same in their possession. This is a wise measure for in many instances boys who have little judgment at home usually lose what they have when they go into the woods to hunt and in some cases inflict dangerous and fatal wounds to their companions or other innocent persons.

C. B. Hershberger, the local agent for the McCormick Machine Co., expects to have a delivery day when the machines arrive, and those who have bought from him will each form in line before taking them to their farms and give a grand parade headed by either the Meyersdale or Frostburg, Md., band. He will also give a free lunch, and they will have a hot time in the old town Grantsville item in Myersdale Commercial.

Economy in Advertising

If you could meet your entire trade personally and could explain to each the merits of all your different goods you would not need to advertise. You can't do this. As a matter of economy you advertise—tell the public what you have for sale. Each year additional business will result. It makes it easier to do business, less worry, more satisfaction all around.

If you are satisfied with just "keeping store" don't advertise. If your blood is red, if you want to grow, if you feel a satisfaction in being a leader in your line, advertise. Do it right. Make it a feature of your work, not a side issue, and the cash assets at the end of each year will surely determine the value of advertising.—Printers' Ink.

New County Treasurer in Charge

Tuesday of last week Mr. E. A Weimer who was elected to the office of County Treasurer last fall, entered upon the active discharge of his duties, relieving Mr. James W. White, who served in the same capacity so well and faithfully the two years preceding. If Mr. Weimer fills the office as acceptably as his predecessor (and we have no doubt upon that score) then the people of Garrett county will experience no regret for having elected him. Mr. White leaves the office and retires into private life with the well wishes of every one with whom he transacted public business.

Attempted Suicide.

Loch Lynn Municipal Ticket.

A number of the citizens of Loch Lynn Heights met in the school house Monday evening for the purpose of nominating a ticket for town officers to be voted for at the election which is to be held Monday May 2nd. The meeting resulted in the nomination of the following ticket: Mayor, W. D. Dunn; Councilmen, H. V. Leighton and C. J. Rathbun to serve for three years, and G. P. White and B. F. Crane for two years, to fill out the unexpired term of G. D. Reckley and H. B. Ferguson; clerk, A. T. White; bailiff, A. H. Long; tax collector, E. E. Kesner; treasurer, Warren Rathbun.

At the special meeting of Garrett Lodge Knights of Pythias of Oakland held on Tuesday night of this week the degree of Esquire was conferred upon Messrs. William Hinebaugh, James H. Painter, D. A. Vaughn and G. S. Hamill, Jr. After the degree work the members of the lodge were entertained by Mr. Henry Lauer, proprietor of the Oakland Bakery, upon whom the degree of Knight had been conferred at a previous meeting of the lodge. The local lodge is growing at a remarkably rapid rate, more than twenty new members having been initiated during the past two months.

Swanton Grange meets in May's Hall on Saturday night at 8 o'clock, prompt. This meeting from 8 to 9 o'clock is open to everybody and all are invited to come and help make it interesting. Bring in the women and girls and all take part in defending the right side of the question: Resolved, that household conveniences are more conducive to a farmer's success than farm implements. An interesting program is being prepared.

C. T. SWEET, Master.

Messrs. D. E. Bolden & Co., the Oakland furniture merchants, have an attractive advertisement in these columns today. They offer some exceptional bargains especially in mattings and carpets. Their line of house furnishing goods cannot be excelled in this whole section of the country and to deal with them the buyer will save money.

Last week while Superintendent Long, of the Park, was in Baltimore, he contracted for the construction of an eighteen-foot gasoline launch and ten new row boats which will be placed on the lake at the Park when the season opens or as soon as the boats arrive. The boats cost several hundred dollars and they will be greatly enjoyed.

The Knights of Pythias hall at Gormania was dedicated last Saturday upon which occasion a large number of visiting Knights, besides the Grand Officers of the State of West Virginia, were present. The gathering was a veritable love feast and cemented in closer bonds the goodfellowship of the members of the order.

Oakland Model Steam Bakery

To my Patrons and the Public:

Owing to the steady increase in my business and the determination to give my customers the best service and goods that can be produced anywhere, I have installed in my Bakery an up-to-the-minute steam plant by which the product of my establishment is more than doubled and in consequence no delay is anticipated in putting upon the market twice daily fresh, nutritious Bread, Cakes, Pies, etc.

The dough mixer in my establishment has a capacity of three barrels which is driven by an engine and is of the latest pattern and a model in every respect. The dough is mixed by this machine and turned upon the table without being touched by the hands, thus ensuring better mixed bread and cleanliness in every respect. "Cleanliness" is our motto.

I have also installed a power ice cream machine and am better prepared than heretofore to manufacture Ice Cream and sell at wholesale and retail on the shortest notice.

I respectfully invite the public to inspect my plant.

Very truly yours, HENRY LAUER.

DEMOCRATIC KILKENNY CATS.

While the Republican party has its troubles in various states, it must not be forgotten that our adversaries are not in a blissful state of harmony and content, and the outcome of Democratic national politics may result in as wide a divergence of action by the members of that party as in 1896 and 1900.

The great difference of opinion between the Republican views of national affairs and the sentiment of those Democrats who refused assent to the Democratic ticket in 1896 and 1900 is on the single issue of the tariff. Such Democrats are as radically in favor of lower duties or free trade as are the followers of Bryan, but upon all questions pertaining to upholding of the gold standard, to the protection of capital and the preservation of investments these Democrats are in full accord with the ideas of the Republican party.

In brief, upon all such issues they hold the Republican doctrine, and by their money and their votes in 1896 and 1900, in a great degree, contributed to the success of William McKinley and the Republican party.

They patriotically abandoned their anti tariff views and sustained our protective tariff views when the standard of money was endangered and the values of securities and investments were attacked. They can be relied upon to do this again and again, for self-preservation is the first law of nature, and they will never support the vagaries of Bryan nor aid the systematic warfare of Hearst upon corporate wealth.

This wing of the Democratic party will afford no aid or comfort to the party if the the organization in National convention adopts the views or the candidates of the wing which has controlled for the past few years.

In Kentucky, Kansas, Iowa, Illinois, Rhode Island, Dakotas, California and Mississippi Hearst's adherents seem to have made good their control, with active operations suggestive of success in Ohio, Michigan, Colorado, and Massachusetts.

The Gorman and Parker forces hold New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and nearly all the entire South.

Indiana is to be a closely contested state between the opposing forces. It will be a battle royal between the radicals and the conservatives of the Democratic party, both upon platform and candidates, with small chance of union of the party upon either.

Hearst is as obnoxious to the gold Democrats as Bryan; Cleveland is not seriously thought of by the South or West. The fear of Hearst strengthens Gorman and Parker more than their own records or their present work.

Few men possess enough philosophy to adopt the idea of Shakespear, "rather bear the ills we have than fly to others we know not of," and something sensational will undoubtedly be the outcome of the next Democratic national convention, for though the party is burdened with ills there are others they can still assume.

Republican hopes usually can be securely based upon Democratic folly.

Gets A Life Sentence.

At Keyser last Friday John Barger, charged with the murder of Charles Adams at Barnum, W. Va., during a strike, was convicted by a jury of murder in the first degeee, fixing the penalty at life imprisonment. Barger is a non-union minor whom a boy called a "scab." Adams, a union miner, remonstrated with Barger for beating the boy, whereupon Barger went home, secured a revolver and killed Adams.

Letter to F. P. Green

Dear Sir: Three gallons saved is $12 to $15 earned.

Mr. Hanford Platt of Bridgeport, Conn, ordered 15 gallons Devoe to paint his house, and returned 3 gallons. His painter said it would take 15; a lead-and oil painter.

The reason is, of course: they are used to poor paint.

What is poor paint? Anything not Devoe: some worse than others.

Besides, paints wear about as they cover. Double the $12 to $15.

A Lesson From The Play

By HOWARD FIELDING

Copyright, 1903, by Charles W. Hooke

THERE were long racks for hats just outside the door of the hotel dining room, and as I was endeavoring to find my own headgear in the midst of the great and varied assortment a man spoke my name in a tone of surprise.

"Upon my word," he exclaimed, with unusual earnestness, "I'm glad to see you! I'm mighty glad to see you here!"

I was glad to see him, too, though I might not have stated it in a manner so emphatic as his own. To me he was merely a friend unexpectedly met in a strange city; to him I certainly seemed to be something more. He was John M. Crawford, whom I have known intimately since our school days twenty-five years ago. We are both in business in New Haven, and one of us has been very prosperous, as anybody might guess from Crawford's aggressive and confident demeanor.

"I heard you were in Denver," said he.

"I'm half way home," was my reply. "I had a bit of business in this city and stopped off for a day and a night."

"Well, I've a bit of business here, too," he said, "and you can help me out with it. It's not exactly in my line nor to my liking, but it's got to be done."

Naturally I asked him what it was. He led me to a retired spot in a corner of the hotel office, and when we were seated he pulled a folded piece of pink paper from his pocket. I perceived immediately that it was a theatrical programme, a single sheet such as one will see in "one night" towns. I looked at Crawford in surprise, for he is not a man who takes an interest in the drama.

He held the programme up before my eyes and put his finger upon a name in the list of the performers. It was Wallace Ford.

"Yes," said I; "he's an actor. His mother told me last winter that he had gone into the profession."

"She told me so, too," replied Crawford, "and I was sorry, though I have no prejudice against the stage, none whatever."

He spoke almost as if he were repelling an accusation.

"Well?" said I.

"This boy has got himself into trouble," said Crawford. "That's why I'm here. His mother asked me to see what I could do. She would have come herself, but she is not well enough to make the journey."

My sympathy as well as my curiosity was aroused. Nellie Ford was a school friend of mine many years ago, and she was the sort of girl that one always remembers. Her childish beauty and unfailing buoyancy of spirit seem to be a part of my own youth. Her name wasn't Ford, of course, in those old days when Jack Crawford and I used to sharpen lead pencils for her and be darkly jealous of each other. We were never jealous of Ford, who was a much older boy and quite out of the field of rivalry as we viewed it then. But he was the candidate of fate, and to such there can be no opposition. He had "prospects" when he married Nellie, and they were no more than prospects when he died ten years later. He bequeathed them to his wife and his son. Some day they would get a share of a considerable estate, but it was a long time coming.

"HE'S FALLEN IN LOVE WITH A GIRL IN THIS COMPANY."

"So Wally Ford has got himself into trouble," said I. "Well, we'll get him out. That's all settled. Now I'll hear the story."

"He's fallen in love with a girl in this company," said my friend. "She's older than he is and—and quite out of the question. She's been married and divorced—er—two or three times, I believe. Really, you know, it's mighty hard to say anything against a woman even when the worst that one is tempted to say isn't half as bad as the truth. But in this case I think there's no doubt that the woman's motives are entirely mercenary. You know Wally must get his money soon in the mere course of nature. Old Timothy Ford can't live forever. And this girl has found it out and has made up her mind to marry Wally. The boy has written to his mother, and she is fairly prostrated. So here I am."

"Have you seen him?" I asked.

"Yes; I had a talk with him this afternoon, and he is the most obstinate young blunderhead that ever I encountered. Before I had fairly approached the subject he said he would throw me out of the window for venturing to hint that the young woman's past might be considered an obstacle. Well, you know me. I'll make an affidavit that no man lives who is more careful in the matter of a woman's good name."

"You may have been too careful," I suggested. "The boy should know the facts. He'll know them some day. Let's go and see him now together."

"It's too late," said Crawford. "He's gone to the theater. I'm to meet him afterward. Suppose we have a look at the play."

I assented, and after we had smoked together for a little while we strolled over to the theater.

The play was a sort of sentimental comedy by an English dramatist, a very good piece of work, it seemed to me. I had heard of it, but had never seen it performed and was ignorant of the story which it presented. Its leading idea was that a very good fellow upon his deathbed had put his motherless boy into the care of his best friend, who had accepted the trust with the highest resolve to execute it faithfully. Three other men who had known and loved the father were colleagues in this great and difficult task of bringing the orphan through all perils which might beset him up to a noble and honorable manhood.

At the rise of the curtain the youth is supposed to have attained his twenty-first birthday, and the story of his guardianship is disclosed to the audience in the first act, together with the facts that the four protectors have led a gay life in their time and that the boy shows signs of a tendency to do likewise.

Wally Ford played the part of the youngster, and I thought that his work was really excellent. Indeed, the whole company was surprisingly good, especially the young woman who (in real life, not in the play) had ensnared Wally's affections. Upon the stage she had the role of an innocent girl to whom the four guardians have betrothed the boy.

"She's rather pretty. Don't you think so?" said I to Ford.

"Yes, confound it," he replied, "she is—with her makeup on."

"There's no makeup that is equal to the self delusion of a young fellow in love," said I. "This girl never painted her own face as Wally's fancy paints it."

"It's a queer thing," said Crawford a moment later, "that there's a splendid girl in this company. Mrs. Ford told me about her—good family, irreproachable character and all that. If Wally had fallen in love with her, he'd have had the maternal blessing. Mrs. Ford has no prejudice against actresses. She's a broad minded woman. She knows that there are lots of nice girls on the stage, and she believes in the work if a person really feels called to it. She put no obstacle in Wally's way when he expressed a wish to be an actor, and I think she's right. It is an honorable work. Now, this play, for instance, is full of fine feeling and teaches a good lesson. You'll see."

"Which is the nice girl—the one whom Mrs. Ford likes?" I asked.

"You won't see her till the third act," he said. "She plays the adventuress."

"The deuce she does!" said I.

It is the plot of the piece that this adventuress is led to believe that the youth has a lot of money, and she therefore agrees to marry him—if he will settle it all upon her. In reality he hasn't anything except what his guardians give him. The adventuress is connected with the dramatic profession in a very lurid capacity, and she is spoken of as having seen "a great deal of the world."

The youth in the play is totally blind and deaf so far as the adventuress is concerned. He won't hear a word said against her. He asserts his own judgment with the explosive confidence appropriate to his years and will listen to no warning from the older and wiser men who have reared him for his father's sake and would make any sacrifice to shield him from disaster.

I beheld this plot unfolding before me with a slowly growing wonder at the amazing coincidence which was involved.

"How long," I whispered to Crawford, "has Wally been playing this part?"

"All the season," he replied.

"A hundred times, at least," said I. "A hundred times he has held up this mimicry of folly to the eyes of the multitude, and, by the living jingo, he has never seen it himself."

"It does fit his own case to the life, doesn't it?" said Crawford.

The curtain had fallen upon the second act, at the close of which the chief trustee of the boy decides to buy the adventuress outright for the small sum of £1,000 as the only way of rescuing the youthful prey from her clutches. We could speak more at our ease between the acts.

"How is it possible," said I, "that he can play this part over and over again and in his private life enact the very folly which he holds up to the public for a lesson?"

"I don't know," said Crawford. "Doesn't look reasonable that a man could do that; upon my word it doesn't. Love's a queer thing."

"Do you think that the fellow on the stage is supposed to be in love with the adventuress?"

"No," said he; "not really."

"Well, neither is Wally in love with this girl. He is suffering from a species of self hypnosis. He is under the influence of a delusion. We must wake him up."

"I'll have another try at him after the show," said Crawford. "The company doesn't leave town till tomorrow. He is coming to my room at the hotel. We'll both do our best. It's a serious matter, my friend. Wally may marry the girl any day."

We saw the remainder of the play and then walked back to the hotel. Half an hour later there was an unnecessarily loud rap at the door, and Wally Ford strode in, tall, handsome and strong. I observed an excess of dignity, an effort to seem older than his years—in fact, very much the same demeanor that he uses on the stage when he says, "There comes a time in every man's life when his own judgment is of far more use to him than any other person's."

The reply in the play is, "Perhaps this is not one of those times."

But the infernal difficulty is to beat such a conviction into the head of an obstinate boy.

Wally started at the sight of me, and there was an added defiance in his manner when he returned my greeting. I hastened to assure him that my presence in the city was entirely accidental, and he said, with a withering glance at Crawford, that he was glad to hear it.

There is really no use in setting down here what we said to him that night. It would have been just the same if we had read to him out of the city directory. My statement that the very part he played should teach him prudence and respect for the judgment of his elders nearly procured me some broken bones. Did I venture to compare Miss Hartington with the woman of the drama? Oh, dear, no; not for the world. Still there was a faint basis for comparison in the fact that she was five years older than himself.

"Miss Hartington is but twenty-six," said he. "She is two years older than I am."

I shook my head in blank despair. The boy even believed her in regard to her age.

"And," he added, "you would hardly urge the difference in our ages as a reason for my delay. It is a reason for haste. Life slips away. We should not waste our youth. It does not come again."

"We may differ, Wallace," said I, "upon a definition. What constitutes a waste of one's youth?"

"A long engagement, for one thing," he replied, "when two people are sure of each other."

Crawford argued with his customary gentleness, and I lost my temper, but we produced no effect upon Wally. When he had gone we held a council of war and decided to follow the play to the next town. We did so, and to the next after that. The business manager of the company began to recognize us and to nod pleasantly when we met upon a train. No one but Wally knew our errand. We were suspected of being fascinated by some of the young ladies. Altogether, for two respectable middle aged married men, our position began to be embarrassing. Moreover, we were doing no good. Yet we were more and more strongly convinced that our young friend was on the brink of a great folly, that he was infatuated with a wholly mercenary woman and that because of our old time regard for his mother we could not desert him while there remained the most shadowy ghost of a chance of saving him.

Wally was entirely unshaken in his allegiance to Miss Hartington. He treated

Crawford and me with frozen dignity. It was utterly futile to reason with him, and when at last he informed us that his wedding would take place within a fortnight we decided that the battle was lost. Nevertheless we did not quit the field, and as the company played an engagement of three consecutive nights in one city we were spared the miseries of travel.

We took a double suit in a rascally little hotel in order to be near Wally, who was economizing for the wedding, and on the last of the three nights we were sitting in the parlor waiting for the boy, who had promised to see us after the performance. He came promptly, and, with the magnanimity of a victor, he greeted us less icily than usual. Indeed we were fairly launched upon a really amicable conversation when a hasty rap at the door interrupted us.

Crawford answered, and I saw him retreat from the door after he had opened it, as if there had been a ghost outside.

"I beg your pardon," said a voice which I instantly recognized as Miss Hartington's. "Is Mr. Ford here?"

Crawford did not reply in words, but he made a series of grotesquely wooden gestures which the lady rightly interpreted as an invitation to come in. So in she came, and her looks amazed me. I had seen her several times off the stage, and always the sight of her had touched my heart. The world had not used her well, and she showed it. She had seemed to me a beaten woman, weary, disappointed and oppressed by a deep sense of injustice, yet withal sustained by some interior strength which I had taken to be sheer pugnacity.

Now she was transformed. She held her head high; her eyes shone; there was the magic of renewed youth in her face.

"Wally," she cried, "read that!"

And she gave him a telegram, so long that it filled two sheets. The boy got about half way through it, and then he seized her hand, exclaiming:

"Splendid! Splendid! This is the chance of a lifetime. I'm so mighty, mighty glad for you."

She looked at him intently, lovingly—yes, by all that's odd, the woman loved him.

"It's the chance of a lifetime for both of us," she said, paying no more attention to Crawford and me than if we had been two dummies. "Wally, this offer—miraculous as if the sky should rain roses"—

"Or dollars," said he.

"This part that is offered me," she continued, "is all that I ask. If I cannot make my way with this, I am content to fail. But I was not content to live this life of mine and have nothing, absolutely nothing; no smallest desire granted, no single gleam of good fortune between my cradle and my grave. Wally, I was not strong enough to do it. I was not strong enough to live a life all loss and still do right. But now, now! Now I can do it. I can say to you what I should have said long ago, that—that you must not think of me any more."

She had been at a high pitch of courage up to that last sentence, but she could not quite carry it on to the end. I thought that she didn't mean what she said, but the boy knew her better, and suddenly his face grew startlingly white.

"Do you mean," he cried, "that you will break with me?"

"Yes, yes," she answered, and she waved her hand toward Crawford and me. "Ask them. They know. They'll tell you—they've been telling you. Love some one who has not lived so much, who has illusions and the hopes of girlhood. I lost them long ago, but I have ambition. I love my work. You shall see."

And in the midst of this outburst she vanished from the room.

Wally's face, which had been so pale, now flamed with rage.

"You, you!" he shouted, striking up to us. "You have done this. You have bought her. You have wrecked my life."

I think he was upon the point of striking Crawford, but instead he turned upon his heel and left us.

Crawford sank into a chair and slid lower and lower in it till I thought he would slide off upon the floor.

"The boy is crazy," said I. "This is undoubtedly genuine. The girl has got a fine engagement, and her good luck has given her the strength to do right, just as she said. But to accuse us of getting this engagement for her"—

Crawford interrupted us by tapping upon his own breast.

"I did it," said he. "She doesn't know it, but I did. I telegraphed to a fellow in New York and used money and all that. By George, she has got a chance! I know, for I paid for it. And somehow I'm ashamed. It's like some blasted conspiracy, and yet it's for the good of both of them."

"But how did you know she'd give him up?"

"You don't understand women," said he. "You never did. She loved him."

Prayer and Promise.

"Lord, what a change within us one short hour Spent in Thy presence will prevail to make!" —Trench.

The apostles observed Jesus in the act and attitude of prayer. In some oratory of nature, perhaps they saw Him kneeling with upturned face. His glowing lineaments showed the bliss of communion with God, or repose after wrestling, and the conscious obtaining of the thing desired. A goodly sight! No wonder it provoked the question how they could learn to pray after such a fashion, too. The universal Teacher taught through these suppliants all who would afterward learn of Him concerning this supreme act of the soul. He gave first the model of prayer—the ideas, the words. The Paternoster is an epitome. Here are the needs alike of the race and the individual in miniature. It is the alphabet, the numeral system out of which prayer of every description can be spelled and figured. Analytically, in its separate parts, it illustrates the components of a true rounded, acceptable prayer. Synthetically, there is in it a tenor, a spirit—a cumulative power unmatched in written language. It is the chief ornament of every ritual. Its perpetual repetition wearies no one. It is suited alike to child and adult. The Lord's Prayer is a fine example of the avoidance of many words which Jesus on another occasion insisted upon.

The equilibrium between comprehensiveness and condensation is maintained. The exordium is a reverential address to the Deity, in which His existence, unity, and paternal character are adoringly recognized. The "kingdom of heaven" will be found to be the solvent of the prayer. The coming of the kingdom will insure the hallowing of the Divine name, and the doing of the Divine will, as in heaven, so on earth. The coming of the kingdom insures absolution, reduces temptations, and consequently delivers from evil. Criticism has fairly established that the ascriptions of kingdom power and glory was not a part of the prayer as originally given. But the lofty doxology chords so perfectly that it will probably continue in use forever. The prayer can be divided into two parts: The first relates to the Father, and contains three petitions: i. e., concerning His name, His kingdom, and His will. The second concerns ourselves, and is comprehended in the words bread, forgiveness, and deliverance. Rudolph Stier says in his "Words of Jesus," "All the tones of the human breast which go from earth to heaven sound here in their keynotes." From this matchless formulory Jesus passes to the spirit which should characterize the suppliant. To set this forth, He uses a homely domestic incident. We must transfer ourselves to the Orient to appreciate it. There was no mail or time-table to apprise the host of the hour of the guest's arrival. It would like as not be late at night, as travel was ordinarily continued then, to escape the heat of the day. The guest would be downright hungry, as there were no facilities of the modern restaurateur. The host's larder would like as not be empty, the climate making the preservation of edibles difficult, and leading them to live from hand to mouth. Borrowing would be the next thing in order. What a touch of nature in the churlishness of the half-awakened neighbor! To him the getting up from his warm bed, and the stumbling over his children as they lie hit and miss upon their tiny mats about the floor; the taking down of the heavy bar across the door; all seems to his drowsy powers a superhuman exertion. Yet there comes at length a point where it is easier far for the sleepy niggard to get up and have done with the matter, than to be periodically roused by the persistant knocking and calling. The force of the parable is in its contrasts. God's self is Love. His treasures are inexhaustible. He delights to give. There is no indifference or disinclination on the part of God which must be first overcome by man's importunity. The delay in answer, if there is any, is for the recipients own highest advantage; that he may study anew his supposed needs, may analyze his motives, may review the promises, so that when at length the answer comes, he may be in a state of mind and heart to avail himself of the blessing to the uttermost. Postponement is for the advantage of the receiver, not the giver. The Paternoster is still in Jesus' mind. Earthly fathers have judgment to discriminate between good and evil gifts for their children. They have natural affection enough to incline them to bestow only the good. If that be so—and who denies it?—how will not the Heavenly Father, infinite in wisdom, power, and love, bestow that all-inclusive gift, the life and light of the soul, the Holy Spirit, to those who, out of the vocabulary of the Paternoster, and in the spirit of the parable, ask Him?

The Teacher's Lantern

Form and fervency! Their juxtaposition here is no accident. It is designed to teach us that they are not inimical; that the importunate soul can express itself in the phrase of the Paternoster. Phillips Brooks poured out his great heart in the prayer of St. Chrysostom, and other "forms" of the Prayer-book. Moved himself, he moved all who heard him.

* * * * *

The golden mean is to be maintained, however, between a too rigid adherence to form and persistence in extemporaneous prayer.

* * * * *

John Baptist would likely give his disciples a form of prayer. He gave minute and practical direction to each class of his converts, the people, the publicans, the soldiers. He would hardly omit teaching them how to pray.

* * * * *

Jesus is our standing pattern in prayer. He enforced His precept with His example. Twenty-one instances of his praying are noted in the Gospel—secret, public, at meals, long prayers, ejaculatory, intercessory for friends and enemies; all are recorded. The fervency of His prayer is described in the Epistle to the Hebrews. His supplications were offered with "strong cryings and tears."

* * * * *

We are to pray without ceasing. The bird is not always literally flying, but it is ready to fly on an instant. So our souls should be ready to spread their pinions, and mount to the mercy-seat on short notice.

* * * * *

You can no more find a Christian without prayer than you can find a living man without a pulse. Prayer is a state rather than a specific act. Benefit depends on continuity. One must have the aptitude.

* * * * *

Prayer-wheels turned by wat power are numerous in India. prayer pasted on the wheel is th to be said with every revo Those who laugh at the crudity o the device ought to ask whether in the average Christian prayer there is not some meaningless iteration. God does not need to be instructed or aroused.

* * * * *

Luther is said to have exclaimed, "I have so much to do I can not get along well without three hours a day praying." Daniel was a busy statesman, but amid the cares of office he found time to pray three times a day.

* * * * *

When the whole number of the sons of God shall have reached this goal, a pure doxology will arise in heaven: Hallowed be the name of our God! His kingdom is come. His will is done. He has forgiven us our sins. He has brought temptation to an end. He has delivered us from the evil one. His is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen! (Bengel.)

MRS. CECELIA STOWE,
Orator, Entre Nous Club.

176 Warren Avenue,
CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 22, 1902.

For nearly four years I suffered from ovarian troubles. The doctor insisted on an operation as the only way to get well. I, however, strongly objected to an operation. My husband felt disheartened as well as I, for home with a sick woman is a disconsolate place, at best. A friendly druggist advised him to get a bottle of Wine of Cardui for me to try, and he did so. I began to improve in a few days and my recovery was very rapid. Within eighteen weeks I was another being.

Mrs. Stowe's letter shows every woman how a home is saddened by female weaknesses and how completely Wine of Cardui cures that sickness and brings health and happiness again. Do not go on suffering. Go to your druggist today and secure a $1.00 bottle of Wine of Cardui.

WINE of CARDUI

To Shut Up or Pay Up? That Is the Question

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

S it better to shut up or pay up?

Households are there where sordid questions of want are not raised, since money is abundant and the luxuries of life are assured. But few people nowadays feel contented to follow Paul's edict, "Having food and raiment, therewith be content," not even when houses and bank books are added, for these modern rebels, especially the female half of them, contend that THE LUXURIES OF ONE AGE ARE THE NECESSITIES OF THE NEXT, and that so far from being content with food and raiment, houses and bank books, they count all those as naught and less than naught if they are not accompanied by sympathy, delicate consideration, harmony of temper and taste, and that peace and sweet content only to be found in CONGENIAL companionship.

These women, having married an ideal hero of their own imagining, and suddenly waking to the consciousness that they have played upon themselves just such a trick as did Titania when she crowned an ass' head with flowers, when their "dream of bliss" all of a sudden resolves itself into an "eternity of woe," naturally seek to EASE THE SHOCK of the discovery by an outcry more or less audible, and it is very natural that they should.

DO YOU HAPPEN TO KNOW THAT THE SURGEONS AVER THE DEADLY EFFECTS OF PAIN TO BE VERY MUCH MITIGATED BY OUTCRIES? ONE OF THE MOST DIABOLICAL REFINEMENTS OF TORTURE IN THE INQUISITION WAS TO GAG THE VICTIM SO THAT HE REMAINED PERFORCE MUTE. MEN HAVE THUS DIED UNDER SUFFERING THEY MIGHT HAVE SUSTAINED HAD NATURE BEEN ALLOWED HER FREE COURSE.

And so with the woman who feels that life has become too complex and too painful to be governed by the motto, "Mum's the word." Matters have come to such a head with her that the question now is, CAN I pay up, and if I cannot WHAT THEN? Why, the alternative is shut up, and most women, some of them with full intention, and some of them with the defensive instinct that makes even a dove peck at the cruel hand that squeezes it, will begin the process of paying up by telling their causes of complaint and putting their intimate enemy to an open shame. I say OPEN, for it is sure to come so, even though at first the secret is only breathed in the ear of an intimate friend.

Some cynic inquires, "Why should you expect your friend to keep a secret when you could not keep it yourself?" And why, indeed?

Perhaps it is not only told to one intimate friend; perhaps it is to several—to everybody, to the newspapers, to the divorce court. In either way or in all ways IT EFFECTS ITS PURPOSE, and the unhappy and wronged wife—weak and timid though she is—PAYS UP her tyrant.

Do you blame her?

HAVING SHUT UP AS LONG AS SHE WAS ABLE, IS SHE NOT RIGHT TO PAY UP IN THE END? I THINK SO.

Japan Is Fighting the United States' Battle

By POULTNEY BIGELOW, Author and Traveler

WE should be ASHAMED to let Japan fight our battle. We have the bulk of trade in the affected territory. We have been backing down before Russia just as England has done, and JAPAN IS FIGHTING THE BATTLE for American trade. Next to the American consuls nothing has done so much damage to American trade there as the Russian occupation of Manchuria.

Russia has never conducted a really FIRST CLASS campaign. We are the only nation that has ever conducted so brilliant a campaign as the Spanish-American war, in which we brought back the whole army as heroes—EXCEPT THE REGULAR ARMY. But for God's providence the rough riders would have been chewed up at Santiago had it not been for these UNTHOUGHT OF regulars, who crowded around them on the hill.

What University Freedom Means

By ANDREW S. DRAPER, Commissioner of Education of New York State

PERHAPS the most gratifying development in recent university administration is a more RATIONAL management of students. The one thing every one in a university demands is freedom. There can be no sound administration without administrative freedom. Student freedom is VITAL to normal and healthful student growth. Administrative freedom does not include the right to be unjust. Teaching freedom does not cover the privilege of talking to the public more than to the students, and on top of that TO INSIST ON TALKING LIKE A FOOL. Nor does the student mean that one may go to the dogs without let or hindrance.

All university freedom is to be exercised sanely and with good purposes, or the place must cease to be a university. The lines in American universities are setting for CHARACTER quite as much as for scholarship. German university ideals are being repudiated, as must be the case in this country. A student who hazes his fellow or goes to excess over an athletic victory DESERVES discipline for it, but a trustee who demands a place for his son, a president whose favor turns upon favoritism or prejudice, and a teacher who runs to the newspapers for notoriety, or scoffs at things many people revere, is entitled to NOTHING SHORT OF A FIGHT.

COLONEL MONROE

The Lincolnville Philosopher Suggests a Plan by Which a Benevolent Billionaire Could Dispose of His Wealth to the Highest Possible Advantage

By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

Copyright, 1904, by Frederick Upham Adams

"WHAT would you do if you had a billion dollars?" asked Postmaster Jenkins.

"What would you do, Jenkins?" returned Colonel Monroe.

"I'd make some of those New York millionaires look like 30 cents," declared Jenkins. "I'd buy the Waldorf-Astoria and make a private residence out of it. I'd have a yacht bigger than the biggest ocean liner. I'd have a private train on every road in the country. I'd buy the upper half of the state of Maine and use it as a hunting preserve. I'd have a bathtub big enough to swim in and a stableful of the fastest horses. There's lots of other things that I'd do, and you can bet that none of them would put on more style than Jenkins."

"I have no doubt of it," said the colonel dryly. "How would you use your billion, judge?"

"I do not believe that a man is entitled to such an amount of money or any considerable part of it," answered Judge Sawyer. "If suddenly put into possession of so absurd a fortune I should attempt to find those from whom it was taken and make proper restitution. If that were not possible I should attempt to devise some way in which it could be expended for the benefit of the greater number of people. I sometimes think that Mr. Carnegie's plan is as good as any. The man who expends money in an attempt to help people read and think has done a real service."

"I have a great deal of admiration for Mr. Carnegie," said Colonel Monroe, "and resent the slurs which are directed against him. There is a class of millionaires who look on Mr. Carnegie as the most dangerous character in Christendom. He is the renegade in the camp of grab and hold. He is hated because he is honest enough to declare that the man who uses a fortune for his exclusive benefit is not entitled to the respect of his fellows and that it is a disgrace to die rich. These are hard words coming from a man who has acquired $400,000,000 by methods which have been recognized as honest. The influence of the class offended by Mr. Carnegie's remarks and horrified by his acts is such that it has become the fashion to speak and write sneeringly of his effort to devote his fortune to the public good. There is one unpardonable offense against the money hog. You must not hint that a limit should be placed on his greed. If Mr. Carnegie were so foolish as to wish to give away the millions he had 'earned,' well and good, but why insult the feelings and sensibilities of those who wished to retain all they had and to grab all there was left?"

"I suppose you would spend your billion on library buildings," said Jenkins in some disgust. "I never could see how a man could have any fun that way."

"I agree with you, Judge Sawyer," said the colonel, ignoring the postmaster. "No man should own a billion dollars' worth of property, and I sometimes doubt if any individual is of enough value to the state or community to be permitted the possession of a million. No man ever earned that amount of money or rendered a service for which it is a fair equivalent. But we will not discuss that. Whenever the thought of Mr. Carnegie's public benefactions comes to me I cannot help but think that with the rise of vast fortunes there has come a loss of that sturdy self reliance and respect which was once the proud and justifiable boast of the American people. I can understand the motive which would inspire such a man as Mr. Carnegie to give away all but a remnant of his fortune, but should have thought that there would have been more hesitancy on the part of communities in accepting his gifts. Instead of any such sentiment of diffidence or hesitancy hundreds of cities have authorized representatives to beg for his bounty. A self respecting community would as soon ask a stranger to pay for the building of their roads as for the erection of their libraries or places of education.

"If a man has honestly and fairly acquired a certain amount of wealth he is under no financial obligation to the community in which he lives or to his state or nation except to pay his share into the commen treasuries in the form of taxation. His relations to the public are the same as to his neighbors. Those whom he meets as equals do not solicit alms from him. The man who needs charity is to be pitied; the man who accepts charity does so at the sacrifice of his self respect, but the man who asks for charity has forever surrendered his claim to independence. The same is true of a community."

"But libraries and things like that are different, it seems to me," suggested Postmaster Jenkins. "If a man has got so much money he doesn't know what to do with it and wants to give Lincolnville a library, let him give it, I say. But I wouldn't vote to accept an engine house or a city hall, for instance. Those are necessities, and libraries are luxuries. That's the way I look at it," concluded Jenkins, with an air which expressed entire satisfaction with his position.

"I may be entirely wrong," reflected Colonel Monroe, "but if Mr. Rockefeller or any other man of wealth were to offer to pay the running expenses or take up the debt of the average American city I would give odds that his proposition would be accepted by a decided majority of the voters and taxpayers. There must be some reason for this. Is it not found in the fact that such gifts are accepted not with gratitude, but with the feeling that they are a form of restitution? I sometimes think so. In ancient times robber chiefs endowed churches and schools, and these donations were accepted as a matter of course. It occurs to me, however, that in this country, in this day and generation, if there is one institution which should be supported from the public treasury it is that of education. The citizen should be made to feel that the opportunity for the education of his children comes not as a privilege, but as a right; not as the result of gifts from those who have been uncommonly successful, but from the foresight and enterprise of the community of which he is a part."

"You have not answered the question as to what you would do with a billion of dollars," reminded Judge Sawyer.

"I would turn it into the conscience fund of the United States government, with a recommendation as to how it should be expended," replied Colonel Monroe. "By adding it to this fund it could be used without that condescension which goes with charity. Since a billion can be obtained only by the collection of unjust assessments against the producers I should aim to return it to the victims by a method which I should strongly recommend."

"I'd rather have mine in money," said Jenkins.

"When I get the billion you shall have your share in cash, Jenkins, but the rest of them will get it in books," declared Colonel Monroe.

"You will establish libraries?" asked Judge Sawyer.

"Fifteen million of them," said the colonel calmly.

"Fifteen million libraries!" exclaimed Jenkins. "What are you thinking of, colonel? That's only $66.67 apiece. You couldn't build much of a library with that."

"My idea of a library is one of bound books and not of brick, stone and mortar," said Colonel Monroe.

"I think I grasp your idea," said Judge Sawyer. "You would offer a collection of books to every voter or head of a family in the country?"

"That would be my recommendation."

"But you could not buy and distribute many books for that amount of money," objected Judge Sawyer. "The class of books required could hardly be secured for less than $2 apiece. Allowing for expenses of distribution, this would permit of a collection of thirty books. That is a nice little nucleus of a library, and if the books were properly selected an incalculable amount of good would result. If I could have had access to that many books when I was a youngster I should have esteemed myself very fortunate. Of course it is your theory that books acquire an added value from the fact of possession. Most people have neither the time nor the inclination to study books of permanent value if compelled to seek them in a public library. And then, again, the man who owns and has read thirty good books develops an ambition to acquire more. The more I think of it, colonel, the more I am impressed with the belief that your method of expending this billion of conscience money is a good one. Fifteen million collections of thirty books each would mean a distribution of 450,000,000 volumes."

"I had figured on 150 books," said Colonel Monroe. Judge Sawyer looked up in mild amazement.

"You would prefer quantity rather than quality, I assume," he said. "Of course this is your billion, and you can do as you choose with it, but I should prefer a few well bound books on good paper to 150 of the class which would be obtained for 40 cents apiece."

"I would furnish better books than now retail for ten times the money," declared Colonel Monroe. "They would conform to the best standards of the printing art in every respect. In fact, they would be as good books as can be produced for money. The most exacting lover of fine presswork would be glad to give room to them on his shelves."

"At 40 cents a volume?" exclaimed Judge Sawyer.

"At an average of 40 cents a volume," replied Colonel Monroe.

"If you are in earnest, I should like to hear your solution of this mystery," said the judge.

"I have an engagement this evening, but will show you the data at our next meeting," said the colonel, putting on his overcoat. "I think I can convince you that my estimate is well within reason."

"I'd rather have the money than the books, at that," asserted Jenkins. "Books are all right in their place, but money's the thing."

The Man Who Makes

A STUDY OF HIS APPEARANCE

Is the man who best appreciates the detail of the tailoring we turn out. The workmanship passes without a question, the fit is naturally a matter of course, but the shape we mould into the garments give them a character that finishes them off and makes the satisfaction of the owner complete.

All this is a bid for your next tailoring order. We know we can make you the best clothes you ever wore. We want you to know it. That order is the best and only sure way to settle the question.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. C. F. Dawson is painting Allen Hurst, and the S. L. Allen cottage. He has also the contract to paint Mrs. E. T. Talson's cottages.

Mr. and Mrs. Carrol, of Piedmont, W. Va., were at the Park a few days ago inspecting their cottage and while here gave Mr. U. G. Ford the contract to paint the house.

W. M. Frysinger, D. D, writes that he will be at the Park next Saturday to occupy his cottage.

Mrs. N. J. Haymond, of Clay Center House, has moved into her summer home at this place.

Rev. G. Blakesley, of Wheeling, was a guest of the Asembly house Friday last.

M. B. Freman, Supt. of Agencies of the Mutual Life insurance Co.of New York, was a guest of L. A. Rudisill Thursday last.

Mr. Jno Hipsley and son have the contract to paint Dr. Thistle's house on Deer Park Drive.

Mr. Levi Schnopp made a business trip to Deer Park on last Monday.

Mrs. Fannie Reed has rented the Dixie Cottage for the coming summer.

Messrs. A. G. Moon and F. H. Hudson have rented the store room in the Kalbaugh building and will open in it, shortly, an art studio.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Sheats, of Pittsburg, Pa., were at this place Tuesday inspecting the repairs on their summer home.

KENDALL.

A very heavy rain fell in this community last Monday night, which proved quite beneficial to the grass and grain. What we now need, if the good Lord will pardon us for the suggestion, is lots of sunshine.

The Yough Manor Lumber Company shut their big mill down for two days this week in order to devote that time to some needed work at the upper end of the line.

Miss Grace, daughter of Mr. S. A. Kendall, president of the Yough Manor Lumber Co., who has been a visitor here during her school vacation, is seriously ill with typhoid fever at her home at Meyersdale, Pa.

Mr. Hillery Johnson, one of the best citizens of District number Two, visited this town last Monday. Mr. Johnson is always a welcome caller here not only because he is a good man, but because he brings good butter and eggs.

Mr. Jesse Reed, supervisor of the Manor Land and Oakland Railroad, who has been to Outcrop, Pa., for ten days on business connected with the H. C. Huston Lumber Co., of Pittsburg, returned to Kendall last week and is now with a large force of men looking after his duties here.

Judge U. S. Kendall, of Fairmont, W. Va., arrived here Monday. The Judge does not spend all of his time holding court at Fairmont. Inasmuch as he is a bachelor it is rumored that he holds court in a small town near Confluence, Pa., where he has a jury of one, instead of the regulation number of twelve.

Paddy Spencer has secured a position as clerk for Jas. T. Wilson.

The Odd Fellows' Lodge at Friendsville will have a supper and festival this week. Quite a number of our people, some of them members of the Lodge, will be in attendance.

A large number of city visitors are expected to pitch their tents between Kendall and Swallow Falls as soon as the weather becomes pleasant. The fishing along the Youghiogheny River is the chief attraction.

HOYES AND VICINITY.

Housecleaning is the order of the day.

Farmers are busily engaged at their usual spring work on their farms.

Mrs. W. A. Maffett and children, of Oakland, is visiting her mother, Mrs. Wm. DeWitt.

Mr. M. Mattingly purchased a very fine horse from George Seabold.

Mrs. George Bishoff, who has been suffering for several weeks past from a severe attack of erysipelas, is not much improved.

Miss Olia Mattingly is visiting friends and relatives in Connellsville and Uniontown, Pa.

Miss Blanche Callis is making an extended visit to relatives near Hazelton, W. Va.

Mr. G. W. Sisler, of Stewartstown, W. Va., was a pleasant caller at the home of Mrs. Maggie DeWitt Monday evening, this week.

Misses Lizzie and Edna Welch and brother Norris are all attending normal at Accident.

We are much pleased to state that Mrs. M. Mattingly is able to be around again after suffering from a complication of diseases for severel weeks.

Mr. Roy M. Custer has been suffering for some time with a very sore hand from the effects of a cut. Roy says has many things to be thankful for, and one is that it's his left hand instead of his right.

Miss Ella Bowser, who has been confined to her room for several months, is still dangerously ill.

Mr. Lorenzo DeWitt, of this place, is employed as clerk in a store at Dunbar, Pa.

Miss Margaret M. Browning, of Friendsville, was visiting Mrs. M. Mattingly recently.

Mrs. George Thayer and children, accompanied by Gorman Thayer, all of Thayerville, spent last Sunday with W. A. Smith and family.

Miss Mae DeWitt left here Tuesday evening, this week, for Dunbar, Pa.

Ex-Sheriff W. A. Maffett spent Sunday last with his many friends in Hoyes.

Mr. John DeWitt, of near Crellin, is visiting in this community.

Mrs. S C. Smith and daughter Mildred, of Oakland, were visiting in this neighborhood a short time since.

Misses Clara, Ethel and May DeWitt, accompanied by Mr. Ralph Brenneman, were guests of Miss Sadie DeWitt Sunday last.

Mr. W. A. Smith made a business trip to Oakland last week.

Any young lady in this neighborhood having a broken umbrella should apply to Ralph Brenneman who will mend them and take them home at once, free or charge.

Miss Bernadette Mattingly is the champion equestrienne of Hoyes.

DEER PARK JOTTINGS.

Again, after a silence of some time, we resume our scribbling and hope to give you and your readers items—some of which are both joyful and sad. The former is that springtime has come, which is hailed with joy, and "exceeding great joy," after the long, cold winter with its depressing effects owing to smallpox in different places, thus marring social intercourse with friends and neighbors.

The latter has been fully realized in our little town and made some sad homes, and especially that of the late Joseph Lashorn, who died on last Thursday at 11.15 a. m., after a lingering illness of over two months, suffering untold agonies, but bearing it all with Christian fortitude, and as he neared the end gave every evidence of being prepared for the journey to the Better Land; and at his funeral on Saturday last we noted friends and relatives by the score from Martinsburg, W. Va., Cumberland, Keyser, Piedmont, Bayard, Gorman and Morgantown, and quite a number of close friends of Oakland and Mountain Lake Park. We feel like saying more about this hospitable neighbor, loving husband and devoted father, but as an obituary will appear in your and contemporaneous papers this week and a tribute by a friend later, we simply say, "peace to his ashes."

Mrs. P. M. Stemple, of Morgantown, W. Va., is spending a few days with her bereaved sister, Mrs. Lashorn, and other relatives of this place.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Engle arrived from their late western home some ten days ago, and expect to make their future home in our town, where Mr. Engle purchased some real estate over a year ago, and on Monday last broke ground for the erection of a cottage, on Oak street. We welcome them both back to their native heath.

We are just in receipt of the news from McHenry that Miss Nora, daughter of Mr. S. P. Specht, is quite ill at the home of her grandfather, ex-county treasurer Mahlon Glotfelty, where she had been visiting the past few weeks. We hope for the speedy recovery of this only child, bereft of a mother only a short year ago, and the idol of a good and loving father, our worthy fellow-townsman.

As usual, our enterprising manager of the Deer Park Hotel, has quite a force of painters and carpenters at work on this popular hotel, making it year by year more attractive. Col. Burwell as a Western man has the push peculiar to the West.

We were called to visit our old friend, Mr. Richard N. Murphy, Sr., of near Glade Valley, to attend to some legal business and found him quite feeble, and with his almost eighty years of age, have but little hope that this hard working and truly honest man can be spared to his sons and daughters long, but we can say living or dead, he is one of God's noblemen, an honest and upright citizen Garrett county can feel proud of and will miss.

As we glanced over our daily paper this afternoon we were surprised to see the announcement that the Hon. John K. Cowan is dead. Truly the past year has carried many of our prominent men to the tomb.

Mrs. Acherman, the aged mother of Mrs. William Hennen, whose popular husband is a trusted engineer of the B. & O. company, is critically ill at her home on Main street. She is also the grandmother of Prof. Chas. Hennen, of Keyser, W. Va.

Mr. Philip Hess and Mr. George Marley are both erecting substantial buildings on their respective lots on Church and Main streets.

Col. George Truesdell was up a few days since looking after his vast interests on the "Heights" and other possessions in and around this place. The Colonel is one of our most useful summer guests and a friend to all worthy laboringmen, and with his energetic manager, Wm. H. Chadderton, does much for the material welfare of Garrett county.

Mr. Henry Bobet has purchased one of the Perry lots on what is known as Lot No. 12, on the Vacaney, and report says he is going to build a palatial residence on this much desired locality.

Rev. E. Manges of the Ev. Lutheran church, preached to one of the largest and most attentive audiences on last Sabbath that has greeted him since his coming among us, and one of the most impressive and spiritual sermons of his ministry, and we feel is accomplishing much good. He is a Godly man and should receive the earnest support of his people.

Letter to E. H. Sincell.

Dear Sir: As your business is to get people into and out of trouble, suppose you consider their paint; it makes 'em almost as much trouble as money, except of course matrimony.

They buy poor paint a good deal; they don't mean to; they don't know any better; they buy without thinking. Bad paint isn't good. It looks good-enough for a year; then begins to get rusty; but changes so slowly, one don't notice it.

Looking isn't all. The business of paint is to keep a house dry inside, of the wood and iron of it keep it from rotting and rusting. Takes good paint to do it.

Good and bad paint are sold at one price or about that. One can't go by the price at all; as with lawyers, the price has nothing to do with goodness or badness; and costs are worse yet; the painter and sheriff come-in for their share.

But the probability is that a man, who paints Devoe, will come-out on top.

Yours truly

MUNICIPAL TAX RATE WILL BE 65 CENTS.

Of this Amonnt 45 Cents Will Be For Municipal Purposes and

20 CENTS FOR BOND REDEMPTION

And the Payment of Interest on Bonds as It Shall Accrue.—Other Business Transacted by Council.

The City Council met in regular monthly session on Monday evening of this week with all the members of the body present, A. G. Ross, the president, presiding, and Clerk John C. Dunham.

A number of bills covering the expenses of the month of April were presented, approved and ordered paid.

An order was passed instructing the street commissioner to immediately clean up all the streets and alleys.

The cow ordinance, prohibiting the running at large of all animals, more especially cows, was discussed to some extent and it was consensus of opinion among the councilmen that this law should be rigidly enforced and the policeman was instructed in accordance therewith to impound all animals found wandering along the streets or in the alleys of the town.

A list was submitted to Council designating the out-of-repair platforms fronting property in all sections of the town and it was ordered that notices be served on the respective property owners to repair at once their walks.

It was also ordered that the elevated walk from Second street to Railroad street be put in thorough repair at once.

The tax rate was also fixed by the Council, amounting in the aggregate to 65 cents on the $100 of assessable property within the town. Of this amount 45 cents is set apart for municipal purposes and the remainder, 20 cents, will be used to pay off bonds as they may come due and to meet the semi-annual payment of interest on bonds.

TO INSPECT TURNPIKES.

Engineers From Massachusetts to Come to This State.

With the purpose of making a thorough study of the turnpike road system, which furnishes certain data valuable to road-builders, of which the State of Maryland furnishes the best facilities for study, a part of four from the Massachusetts Highway Commission, including their secretary and managing engineer, will take, early in May, an extended tour through the western part of this State, under the guidance of the Highway Division of the Maryland Geological Survey. While the Maryland survey will appoint Mr. A. N. Johnson, highway expert, to accompany the party, and will assist the visitors and welcome them in every way possible, all the expenses of the trip will be borne by the Massachusetts Commission.

The gentleman who have been assigned to visit this State are Messrs. W. E. McClintock, chairman; Harold Parker, John Manning and A. B. Fletcher the secretary and managing engineer. The tour includes an automobile ride from Harper's Farry to Hagerstown over the mountains. The trip will start practicalty with a ride over the National turnpike, which begins at Cumberland and runs westward through Frostburg and Wheeling. The start will be made from Baltimore on May 3, when the little party will leave for Cumberland by train. Carriages will be taken for a ride over the remainder of the day, and the party will stay overnight at Cumberland. The next day they will return to Harper's Ferry, and will take two automobiles for Hagerstown, and on Thursday the party will push on to Frederick. The return to Baltimere will be made the next day.

Sub-District E. L. Convention.

There will be a sub-district Epworth League convention at Hoyes, May 10th and 11th. THE REPUPLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

Met In Oakland Monday to Elect Delegates to the Congressional and State Conventions.

RINGING RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED.

Nearly Every District was Represented and a Most Harmonious Meeting Resulted.—Mr. P. E. Finzel was Chairman.

Monday at 1 o'clock Republicans from nearly every district in the county met at the court house for the purpose of electing delegates to attend the Congressional convention to be held at Rockville, Montgomery counry, on Tuesday, May 11th, and the State convention to be held in Baltimore on Wednesday, the 12th inst.

The convention was called to order by Hon. U. G. Palmer and upon motion Mr. P. E. Finzel was made its chairman and Mr. N. S. Heindel, the secretary. Upon assuming the chair Mr. Finzel stated the object of the convention and within a few minutes the various committees were appointed and without any preliminaries other than those necessary a permanent organization was effected by the election of the temporary officers and the seating of the delegates from the various districts as follows:

District No. 1.—W. W. Sweet, L. H. Friend, Theo. George.

No. 4.—N. U. Bond.

No. 5.—W. Ravenscroft, Joseph A. Beeghley, Geo. F. Ault, W. H. Gnagey, Reuben Enlow.

No. 6.—D. H. Friend, John Friend, George W. Moon, W. A. Smith, F. O. Glotfelty.

No. 7.—E. E. Friend, L. A. Rudisill, H. N. Cuppett, F. A. Thayer, A. G. Ross.

No. 8.—James Aronhalt, C. E. Hilleary, E. C. Harvey, Jonas Yutzy, Burt Wilson.

No. 9.—P. E. Finzel, Robert Minnick, Thomas H. Lavman, Jos. Finzel, William Brown.

No. 12.—G. W. Engle, S. O. Wiley, Jonas Bittinger, Joel Orndorf, A. J. Oester.

No. 14.—Hon. U. G. Palmer, Austin Brown, Dr. John E. Legge, B. H. Sincell, N. S. Heindell.

The committee on resolutions reported the following which was adopted as read:

We, the Republicans of Garrett county, in convention assembled, do hereby declare the following to be a declaration of our principles and believing that the best interest of our country to be best subserved by the practice and declarations of the Republican party, do hereby affirm our allegiance thereto.

We heartily endorse the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt and commend his statesmanship as manifested by his political policies, both foreign and domestic; and we hereby further declare that the best interests of the Republican party and our country demand his nomination and election.

We endorse the course pursued by Senator Louis E. McComas for his bold stand in upholding the Republican platform and Republican principles in the United States Senate.

We endorse the course of our Representative, Hon George A. Pearre, for the faithful discharge of the trust committed to him by the people of this Congressional District and especially for the services he has rendered to the veterans of the Civil War, and we hereby instruct the delegates to be selected by this convention to the Congressional Convention to do all in their power to secure his renomination, and we hereby pledge him the loyal support of a united Republican party in Garrett county.

We also endorse the attitude and conduct of our State Senator, Hon. U. G. Palmer, and Delegates Elliot C. Harvey and R. A. C. Howard in the stand they have taken in opposition to the corruption and blind partizanship of the last Democratic Legislature and especially for their efforts in trying to prevent the party emblem from being taken from the ballot in Garrett county.

We condemn in unstinted language the squandering of public money and the excessive appropriations of the Democratic Legislature of 1904, and especially the raising of the State tax rate as the result therof from 17½ to 22½ cents on the $100; we hereby declare the proposed amendment to the State Constitution to be the most corrupt and partizan piece of legislation ever enacted and hereby call upon all decent honest people, irrespective of party, to place the seal of their condemnation thereon whenever opportunity offers.

Resolved, That the U. S. Senators and Representatives in Congress call the attention of the President and the Civil Service Commissioners to the fact that large numbers of appointees from various other states credited to Maryland should be accredited to the state from which they are appointed, and residents of District of Columbia be credited to District and not to the state.

Resolved, That one member of each District represented in this convention be and they are hereby elected Delegates to the Congressional convention at Rockville, May 10, and the State convention at Baltimore, May 11th.

Resolved, That the temporary organization be made permanent.

In accordance with the resolutions the following delegates were elected to attend the Congressional and State Conventions:

W. W. Sweet, N. U. Bond, R. A. Ravenscroft, W. A. Smith, A. G. Ross, Burt Wilson, P. E. Finzel, George W. Engle, U. G. Palmer and Benj. H. Sincell.

Immediately after the election of the aobve delegates the convention adjourned.

The meeting throughout was most harmonious and the best of good feeling prevailed among the delegates.

INVESTIGATE the difference between "Griffin Brand" Clothing and the so-called "medium priced clothing."

You'll find that the "Griffin Brand" is far superior in every way. But, of course, you will have to see the goods to make the comparison. The best way to "see them" is to call at our "Clothing Department" and if you don't buy we are mightily mistaken. We have never had a customer who was'nt delighted with our clothing and who did'nt continue to buy from season to season. You'll know the reason when you see the goods.

It's your move next.

The accompanying cut represents the interior work of the Griffin Brand clothing, every garment is made with interlining of the best quality, which places us in a position to guarantee every garment leaving our store to retain it's shape and give general satisfaction.

Our line this season comprises the best styles to be obtained and prises to compete with the so-called medium clothing.

The Shoe Department in this house has a wide reputation for excellency, style, fit and comfort. We do not handle a cheap line of foot wear, but do handle the best of the leading shoe factories in the United States.

The QUEEN QUALITY SHOE FOR WOMEN

is the highest standard to be had in dainty foot wear. These shoes fit and wear where all others fail. Every pair guaranteed to give satisfaction or money refunded.

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

The delegates chosen to represent this district in the convention at Oakland, Monday May 2nd, were G. W. Engle, S. O. Wiley, Jonas Bittinger, Joel Orendorf and A. J. Oester, all of whom are well known, staunch Republicans.

The out-of-town visitors-noticed in this village during the past week were Prof. Smith, of Oakland, Mrs. P. P. Lohr, of Oakland; 'Squire W. H. Lohr, of Swanton; Miss Lavina Holliday, of Somerset county Pa.; Mr. Cyrus Holliday, of Cove, and Mr. John L. Brenneman, of near Oakland.

Mr. G. W. Engle is enjoying a leave of absence from his post of duty in Baltimore, which he is spending with his family here.

Mrs. Laura Emory, having been appointed post mistress at this place, entered upon her duties in that capacity last Saturday.

He Heard and Heeded

By HUGH WAKEFIELD

Copyright, 1903, by Hugh Wakefield

THE veteran war correspondent, Phil Conrad, sat on deck, smoking and talking old times with the captain, who once commanded a government transport and wore the "R. N. R."

"Colonel Quartermain says he owes life and everything else to you," said the captain.

"Which I deny," Conrad replied. "I simply held my tongue where he was not at fault and I had no business to meddle. I'd just come through the enemy's lines with dispatches in the Afghan war. I was near the British position when, quite unexpectedly to us both, I ran plump into Khabeer Khan, the most dangerous leader in the district, also alone.

"It was only a question of first call. I got it. The khan surrendered without a protest and walked humbly before me into camp.

"It was a big plume for me, of course, however little I deserved it, when early in the evening I handed over my prisoner and delivered my dispatches. I'd been twenty hours on foot, and after eating all I could conveniently cover I went to bed in the tent allotted me and was asleep in no time.

"Heavens, how the fellow shook me before I dragged my eyes open! And there stood Quartermain, holding a lighted vesta and looking like a ghost. It was his first commission, and he was the scaredest thing I ever saw. He simply gasped, 'Khabeer Khan has escaped!' and stood staring till the vesta burned his fingers. Then he jumped, threw it away, lighted another and began to stare again.

"I didn't care. It was rather pleasing that I had captured him and brought him to camp alone when the whole detachment couldn't keep him there a single night, but it worked the mischief with me to be pulled out of sleep that way by a green junior lieutenant, and I swore at the youth. You ask him. He'll admit it in spite of the epaulets he wears today. I swore till he dropped his second vesta and didn't dare to light a fresh one. 'What the deuce ails you anyway,' I asked, 'coming round to wake me up? Do you think I've got him here under the bed or will go out again and find him for you?'

"He was meek as a lamb and replied: 'I didn't come for that. He's gone for good. I only came to ask a favor of you for my mother and sister. I'm all they've got, you know. They gave up everything to purchase my commission, and at the very start this beastly fluke will knock me out of it. God knows I would keep still if I could suffer alone, but on top of the rest to have them buried in shame is tough, and I thought if I could explain it to you you'd let me down easy in the papers for their sake. This is the last chance I'll have free, so I had to wake you up. I'm sorry.'

"I'd have promised anything, hands down, to get him away, but the poor fellow had to rehearse the whole or collapse. The khan had been ironed and put in the two room hut used as a guardhouse, and Quartermain with four sepoys—for goodness knows why—detailed as special guard.

"One of the sepoys, named Balaya, confessed that he was a relative of the khan and asked to be relieved. It was an extremely honorable thing for him to do, don't you know, for a Hindoo is bound by every law he knows to defend a relative, even if it includes the murder of an English officer. Quartermain understood it and sent word to the colonel commanding, asking that Balaya be removed. But that colonel was an ineffable ass who considered himself another Suvarrow. He attended to every detail himself with the utmost idiocy possible, and woe to him who dared to suggest a change. He sent back word that Quartermain could obey orders or go into the guardhouse with the khan for insubordination.

"FOR A MOMENT I SAT AND STARED."

"Quartermain had to watch the four sepoys, especially Balaya, as closely as he watched the prisoner. It was a hard position. He hung the lantern inside and stationed himself at the window, while the khan paced up and down and finally threw himself on the floor under [illegible] all-native fashion.

"Quartermain knew his life was in danger from those outside every time he looked away from them and through the window, and as long as the khan was quiet on the floor he thought he'd be safer in the room with him with his back against the door. An hour later something possessed him to wonder if the prisoner was dead. With his pistol in one hand he drew back the blanket with the other. The khan was gone, irons and all, and Balaya was under the blanket.

"Of course I promised what Quartermain asked and told him that if it really came to anything serious I could do a good deal more; so he went off comforted and I was asleep in a second.

"Hours later—that didn't seem minutes—I started up, wide awake and clutching my pistol. I knew that some one out of order was in the tent. It was the first gray light of morning and as soon as my eyes were used to it I discovered a figure, wrapped in a woman's sarai, outlined on the other side. One of the officers had given up his bed to me for the night and it was probably some camp follower accustomed to coming there at that hour. Angry over another disturbance I threw my head down on the pillow, muttering that I was the wrong man. But the woman replied:

"'It is the sahib whom I seek. Bhowanee give him rest.'

"'She will without your help,' I retorted, but the voice went right on: 'It is the sahib who made Khabeer Khan prisoner. He is gone again. The trail of the serpent has crossed his track. A hare leaped upon the right. An ass brayed at the starting. He is safe.' Her voice was nothing if not musical and oriental courtesy is always soothing. I was dropping off to sleep again when through the fog I caught the words, 'I went with him, sahib, until he sent me back to you.' Then I was up again instantly.

"'Sent you back to me to kill me, did he, because he couldn't do it himself? Well, why didn't you make a try while I was asleep? Did I wake up too quick for you? It isn't the easiest thing in the world to do while I'm awake. Get out of those shadows. Pull the flap and stand in the light where I can have a look at you. We might meet again.'

"She did just that, and as the light fell over her—my word, she was a beauty! For a moment I sat and stared. I never saw a handsomer woman in my life. She held the curtain back with a bare arm as perfect as ever sculptor modeled and in the same soft music said: 'It was you, sahib, and not the khan who spoke those words; but if it would save the life of one I love to kill you I would not wait Khabeer Khan's bidding. I would do it now, while you are awake and armed. I'd do it with these empty hands.' And with all respect to my proverbial powers of self preservation I honestly believe she could and would. Heavens, how her eyes flashed and her teeth clicked and glistened! Then she went on, like a summer breeze: 'These are the words of Khabeer Khan. He said: "The sahib is both brave and kind. Go to him. He will hear you and help you to save Balaya if he can."'

"'Balaya!' I muttered. 'The fellow who took the khan's place last night?' And I saw tears glisten like diamonds on her cheeks as she replied, 'He is the light of my eyes, the breath of my body, the father of my children.'

"'Yes, yes; but he's a traitor!' I interrupted, for the thing was getting too sentimental for me. 'What would your khan say was right for a man who cheated him as Balaya has cheated us?'

"She answered instantly: 'Death. But, sahib, I am not the khan; neither am I Balaya. They do not speak. It is I who plead for him. Balaya expects to die. He told the English officer what he was and asked to be sent away. He might have killed the officer or fled with the khan. He did his duty to a relative, then waited to die for it as a British soldier. It is I who am pleading for his life.'

"I knew that I had not one spark of influence with the colonel. I did not think she would have, but I advised her to go to him. She replied: 'I went to his bed, sahib, as I came to yours, and looked into his face, but there was nothing there for me.'

"'And after that you want me to try?' I exclaimed. 'My word, he'd only laugh at me.'

"Her reply was peculiar, but there was a certain wisdom in it that was profound. She said: 'He will answer, "Let him die!" But go to him, sahib. Let him once be truly told that Balaya is not a traitor deserving death. Give him the opportunity to show mercy. He will not show it, but then, when the time arrives that the sun of my heaven must be touched by clouds that shall darken it, the voice of a woman will speak to him. He will hear and will heed it. He will bow his forehead in the dust to me, and the fountain of my life shall not be unjustly quenched.'

"If I were an artist my life would not be endurable till I accomplished the impossible and portrayed that woman as I saw her then, her head thrown back and her long hair like a living thing caressing her bare shoulders and throbbing throat. Her fingers tightened on the curtain and her breasts heaved till they almost burst the silk chouli restraining them, and her whole body shook in a deep, quivering sigh. Her olive cheeks were crimson; her eyes were like fire; her dark lips parted over teeth that glistened like snow.

"Suddenly it changed. She fell on her knees beside the bed, clutched my hand and sobbed: 'Oh, sahib, promise me that you will go to him! Give him the chance to be merciful, for I do not want to speak.'

"I said, 'I'll see the colonel the first thing in the morning, but I warn you now that it will amount to nothing.' And I pushed her away. It was getting too much for me. She reached the curtain, lifted it and, pointing to the reddening east, said, 'It is decreed that an hour after sunrise Balaya shall be shot.' Then the curtain fell behind her.

"I never got quicker into my clothes. The colonel received me with a surly grunt and heard me through because I would not stop. By way of reply he detailed his fiendish plan for the execution. It was to take place in the presence of the entire force, he himself to give the signal from a raised platform. And Balaya was to be shot, not by a squad, but by his own sepoy brother, standing alone, in front of a squad with fixed bayonets! 'To teach the natives that it is not blood relatives, but friends or foes, in the British army.'

"It seems incredible, captain, but I assure you it is true. Choking with indignation and regardless of everything, I remarked, 'Of course you can execute such plans as you arrange while alone in command of a division, but there are two important elements which may be disaffected to your injury.'

"'For example?' he grunted. And though I knew it was serious business for me I was too mad to care and replied: 'You have five sepoys here to one English soldier. Suppose they rebel. Then there are those in the seats of the mighty at home who will not indorse your course.'

"You should have seen the devil in his eyes as he answered, 'I'll attend to my sepoys without your aid, and I'll give you a front place on the platform where you can take in the whole and make a grand account of it for your friends in the seats of the mighty.' How much more he intended or could have accomplished I don't know. Possibly he could even have found a way to give me Balaya's medicine. He was ominously civil and kept me close to him on the raised platform.

"Balaya was blindfolded and bound to a post a little to our right. As far on our left stood a line of regulars and in front of them one poor sepoy, his cap, covered with a deep, white puggery which almost hid his face and fell in heavy folds over his shoulders and around his throat, the native insignia of mourning. The sepoy regiments were drawn up next, to receive the full force of the object lesson, and behind them the home regiments.

"The colonel made a brief address, and not a bad one, on the duty of the soldier to defend the queen and empress even against his own father and mother. Then the poor sepoy in white stepped three paces forward and threw his rifle to his shoulder. We could only see his eyes through the folds of his puggery, but they were riveted on the colonel, watching for the signal, when he counted three and dropped his handkerchief—which was to be the fatal sign.

"It was fiendish—hideous! And the eyes of that poor sepoy seemed to flash fire through the white folds of the puggery. I thought of the woman and looked about for her, but she was not there. It would have been dangerous for her to have spoken then. I thought how fortunate that she had realized it; more likely that what she said to me was but the poetic imagery of oriental fiction. Yet cold perspiration dripped from my forehead, and I shut my eyes as the colonel said 'Three!' and dropped the handkerchief.

"The report of the rifle was followed by a groan, a heavy fall on the raised platform and a gasp of horror from those about me. I opened my eyes to see the colonel shuddering in death agony at my feet and, like the handwriting on the wall, to hear again: 'The voice of a woman will speak to him. He will hear it, and he will heed it. He will bow his forehead in the dust to me.' Verily, he heard and heeded!

"Before a soul could recover from the shock, Khabeer Khan's savage followers burst upon our rear with their blood curdling battlecry. Led by the khan they had crept up close, under cover of the excitement.

"We were fortunate in being able to make a successful retreat with only a 'heavy loss' to report. Balaya, his wife and brother disappeared. I simply reported the colonel among the dead. It was quite sufficient.

"Quartermain was promoted for valiant conduct, which he foolishly credited to the reports which I sent home. The conduct was his. Nothing but the reports was mine.

"Not another soul knew that it was Balaya's beautiful wife, disguised as his sepoy brother, who fired the shot, and I did not see it. My eyes were shut. There would have been no sense in my raking up the ungodly facts as I knew them. It would only have roused ill timed indignation at home. The colonel was dead, and he alone was to blame.

"Quartermain deserved promotion, as he has shown ever since. It was the voice of a woman that saved him, if he was really in danger, and you can tell him I said so."

All men are liars, but some men are much more artistic about it than others.

If prisoners in the penitentiary had their choice of trades those of them that did not choose to be burglars would probably pick the brakeman's calling.

Perhaps if men would worry more over the troubles of other people their own would not bother them so much.

Free advice may be the most expensive.

Trouble may come when we are looking for it, but not from the direction in which we are looking.

The Best Joke.

Somehow the joke that suits you best,
The story, smile compelling,
The brightest quip, the neatest jest,
Is one of your own telling.
The incident is pat and bright,
The moral always fitting,
And all in all the thing is quite
Amusing—nay, side splitting.

Something that happened by the way
Reminds you of a story,
And you proceed without delay
To spring one old and hoary
That strikes you on the funny bone
And seems so cute and witty
That when your hearers want to groan
They laugh, too, out of pity.

Alas, alack, the brightest tale
That seems to you a killer
Is one that on the ark took sail
And antedates Joe Miller,
But still you fold it to your heart
As though it took the money
And spring it when you would be smart
And wish to be real funny.

But, oh, your punishment is swift!
Your hearer will not suffer
In silence, but his voice will lift
And tell you one that's tougher.
Straight faced, though laughing in his sleeve,
The man his heart will harden
And tell one Adam told to Eve
While walking in the garden.

Where They Were Different.

A consumptive individual with one foot in the grave and a bunch of corns on the other was standing on the street corner sunning himself and wondering if the last three bottles of sure cure would do the trick when he met up with a Smooth One wearing Vandyke whiskers and new clothes.

"Haven't I seen you somewhere?" asked the Smooth One after a cordial greeting.

"Possibly," replied the consumptive dryly. "I have been somewhere quite frequently."

"But, joking aside," returned the Smooth One, "you remind me of a gentleman I met in New York who owned three banks and a match factory and who had been mentioned for congress."

"Was his name Flanders?" asked the consumptive cautiously.

"Come to think of it, that was the name, Flanders. He may have been your uncle."

"Hardly," replied the consumptive, edging away. "My name is Jones, and if Flanders ever loaned you a dollar the resemblance does not go that far by any means."

Constant.

They swore their love would never dim,
So ardent was the flame;
In six months she'd forgotten him
And couldn't call his name.
And did he pine away and fade?
Nay, he had found another maid.

One of Their Kind.

"It is so annoying to have borrowing neighbors."

"Not for me. I always call the next day and beat them at their own game."

Nothing Else Will Make Them Quit.

"He won $10,000 on the races and retired."

"That so? What was he arrested for?"

Reciprocity.

On candy he was good and strong,
He brought her many a pound,
And she was sweet on him as long
As he brought sweetness round.

Naturally.

"How is the can business this spring?" asked the inquisitive man of the tinner.

"Rushing" replied the cheerful mechanic.

Watchfulness.

Argus lost his head when he closed the last of fifty pairs of eyes. While Ulysses slept, his sailors loosed the baleful winds of Aeolus. So the classics are woven and interwoven with legends strikingly illustrating the necessity of eternal vigilance. It remains, however, for the Divine Teacher, divesting the subject of quaint fiction, to define the ethical principles involved, and ground the necessity upon a moral basis. This Jesus does when He reveals the truth that man is God's servant. What he has he holds in trust for his Maker. He is not an original, independent proprietor. He holds nothing in fee-simple. He is to occupy, use, and increase. But an account of stewardship is ever impending. This accounting-time is the assize of the soul. It is to be kept always in view. One is to be instantly ready for it.

Here, however, is no harsh, unreasonable, and purely technical reckoning. Nothing can surpass Jesus' radiant portraiture of Him with whom all souls have their final dealings. Nothing is hid from His omniscience, true, but it is a benevolent knowledge. It is so all-inclusive as to descend to the very hairs of one's head. It bids the child of God take no anxious care. He who sustains the soul in being will provide bodily comforts He who notes sparrows and lillies will not neglect immortals. The principles of absolute equity will be observed in the final accounting. He will not attempt to reap where he has not sown. A reasonable increase only will be demanded. The ratio between the knowledge and the stripes will be accurate.

Yet all this does not muffle the alarm. Jesus sounds it unequivocally. "Gird your loins. Light your lamps. Be ready. Blessed is the faithful and wise steward." The reward of Christian fidelity is rich and enrapturing. As in the Saturnalia host sometimes turned servant, so in the festival of salvation, as a token of regard and appreciation, Jesus will serve in person, and exalt to higher stations those who have been persistently trustworthy.

As in Oriental cities there is no organized or adequate police, each householder must be his own patrolman. Ignorance of the hour when the thief will seek to effect an entrance necessitates an instant and perpetual alertness. The Lord's coming shall be equally unannounced. As the interests at stake are infinitely greater than worldly goods, so should the vigilance be proportionately greater. The Lord's good servant, in whose heart the principle of stewardship is fregnant, and who rules the Lord's household, not as one who is ministered to but ministers, rightly dividing the word of truth, so that every one "gets his due, undiminished and unadulterated"—happy that servant! He shall be promoted.

But there is subtle temptation in the delay of the Lord's coming. One begins to feel himself proprietor rather than steward. Extremes meet in such an evil servant. He is tyrannous towards his fellows; indulgent toward himself. To such a one the unannounced coming of the Lord will be a dread surprise. He shall be cleft in twain. He shall suffer that punishment which puts the victim in "the everlasting contradiction of dying, yet not dying—misery."

Could even the infinite Lord show greater fidelity in the caution of his disciples? It is impossible for human language to convey more significantly or powerfully the Master's appeal for watchfulness. Speech of man would have broken down had he laid any heavier burden upon it. Until he comes, His high, moral bugle-notes will keep ringing, "Endure to the end!" "Watch, therefore!"

The spirit of true Christian watchfulness is sometimes lost in the mazes of arithmetical calculations of the date of the second coming of Jesus. He watches best, who serves most diligently.

Wesley's reply to the question what he would do if he knew he was to die next day at midnight was characteristic: "I should do just what I expect to do. Preach tomorrow morning at B. and meet the leaders. Preach in the afternoon at F., and ride over to M., where I should preach in the evening. Then I should go to bed to sleep, and awake in glory." That is an awaiting the Lord's coming, ideal and glorious.

The use of the probationary life as related to the life immortal is finely expressed in the lines,

"Since I am coming to that room,
Where with the choir immortal,
I shall make Thy music when I come,
I tune the instrument here at the door,
And what I must do there, think here before."

Jesus' faithful servants are to be exalted in highest rank conceivable. The revelator saw thrones for the faithful. They shall be rulers.

The wisdom learned in humble spheres shall be useful to the mighty Governor of a universe. His stewards, exalted, shall share with Him in some form of dominance over all intelligences. "Such a promise let no one contemplate except when clothed in the profoundest humility."

Drunkenness is the fruitful cause of a misspent probation, and an unpreparedness for the Lord's advent. A physician aptly defines drink as the devil in solution. Devilish deeds are the correlate of devilish drink.

Jesus described proleptically a haughty and arrogant hierarchy, a set of ecclesiastical despots, which has since appeared to disgrace His name and afflict His Church. Woe to them when they fall into His hands!

Robin Fitzpatrick was a local celebrity, whose fame survives in Highland County, Ohio. He happened to awake during that phenomenon familiarly known as the "falling stars." He sprang out of bed, exclaiming, "Betsey, get up! The Lord has come!" Standing a moment, gazing at the splendid scene, he cried; "I'll just run over and tell Neighbor Holt. Perhaps he doesn't know the Lord has come." In an instant he was vaulting a "stake-and-rider" fence, and running across the field like a deer. He set up a violent knocking on his friend's door, all the while calling, "Get up, Neighbor Holt; get up; the Lord has come!" Truth is, "Neighbor Holt" had already gotten a glimpse of the celestial pyrotechnics, and not feeling as well prepared for the Lord's coming as Fitzpatrick, he had ignominiously crept under his bed. The childlike joy and preparedness of the eccentric Scotsman is to be admired.

Christian mothers of the early centuries delighted to call their sons Gregory or Vigilantus. The one is the Greek form, the other the Latin of our Lord's imperative "Watch!" Thus the frequent and familiar repetition of the name resounding throughout the household would remind them of the Master's injunction "Watch!" "Watch!"

There is a sense in which the coming of Jesus is iminent. He is ever at hand. Individuals, homes, communities, cities, states, nations, must be on the qui vive for his appearing. They must be ready at a moment's notice to enter into account with the great Head Steward. There is a progressive judgment—an assize that never adjourns. This continuous coming of Jesus in providence and in the sphere of the conscience is our second advent. We represent those who shall be alive at the millenial appearing. Emotions and purposes which are suitable for the last age should characterize each successive generation.

The parables of the Goodman and the Evil Servant represent, of course, primarily the ministry. They are enough to raise that inquiry, first heard at the Last Supper, among the clergy of each successive age: "Lord is it I?" "Who is the faithful, who the wicked servant?"

LIVER TROUBLES

"I find Thedford's Black-Draught a good medicine for liver disease. It cured my son after he had spent $100 with doctors. It is all the medicine I take."—MRS. CAROLINE MARTIN, Parkersburg, W. Va.

If your liver does not act regularly go to your druggist and secure a package of Thedford's Black-Draught and take a dose tonight. This great family medicine frees the constipated bowels, stirs up the torpid liver and causes a healthy secretion of bile.

Thedford's Black-Draught will cleanse the bowels of impurities and strengthen the kidneys. A torpid liver invites colds, biliousness, chills and fever and all manner of sickness and contagion. Weak kidneys result in Bright's disease which claims as many victims as consumption. A 25-cent package of Thedford's Black-Draught should always be kept in the house.

"I used Thedford's Black-Draught for liver and kidney complaints and found nothing to excel it."—WILLIAM COFFMAN, Marblehead, Ill.

THEDFORD'S BLACK-DRAUGHT

"Don't"—Is the Best Advice to Stage Struck Girls

By JESSIE MILLWARD, Prominent Actress

DON'T! That's my advice to your stage struck girl. The stage is overloaded today by second and third rate material, but good, efficient women in both CLERICAL AND DOMESTIC POSITIONS are in demand. And it is far more honorable to be a first class bookkeeper or stenographer than to be a second rate actress. Your pride will suffer less, your feelings will be better guarded and your pecuniary return far more sure and at least as great. And as for the public, well, from being a public charge you will become a public benefactor.

Of course there have been women who have made splendid actresses—women like Mme. Bernhardt, Miss Terry and Mme. Rejane, but these are not ORDINARY women. Here you have women with heaven sent missions, women who have the divine gift, women who, had they disregarded this gift, WOULD HAVE COMMITTED A CRIME. But these are not your young girl who thinks to become a star in a day, who, without training and innate ability, often without common intelligence, "has an idea that she wants to go on the stage." Such women as Bernhardt, Miss Terry and Rejane have bought the right to their positions by years of the hardest sort of work in training schools of practical experience. One and all, they have had to work years upon years and SUFFER years upon years in order to know the technique as well as the meaning of their craft, for acting is like any other art—like sculpture, like painting, like music even—YOU MUST LEARN THE TECHNIQUE.

The ordinary young woman has an altogether perverted idea of the stage. I receive dozens of letters from young girls asking my advice. Most of these girls are in good circumstances and are not forced by necessity to earn a livelihood.

THERE IS A GLAMOUR TO THE STAGE WHICH QUITE BEWILDERS THEM. THEY SEE THE SUCCESSFUL ACTRESS AND THEY HEAR THE APPLAUSE, AND THEIR MODICUM OF INTELLIGENCE GOES NO FURTHER. THEY DO NOT REALIZE THE YEARS OF WORK WHICH WENT TO MAKE THAT SUCCESS.

Here is an example which, while it may strike you as somewhat overdrawn, is absolutely true:

The other day a maid came here with a message from a friend who lives uptown. She was a new maid and perhaps rather raw. While I was writing a reply she went to the mantel and looked over the photographs. Suddenly she blurted out, "Are you an actress?" "I sometimes have been called so," I answered. "Well, do you know," she said, "I've always wanted to go on the stage, and NOW THAT I'VE SEEN YOU I think I will"—and there you are.

THAT GIRL'S IDEAS, LUDICROUS AS THEY SEEM, ARE NO MORE ABSURD THAN THOSE OF DOZENS OF OTHERS WHO SHOULD HAVE MORE INTELLIGENCE.

The Necessity For a Higher Thought Level

By S. R. THAYER, Ex-United States Minister to Holland

SIXTY years and more have passed away since Mr. Webster, in that interesting controversy with Lord Ashburton over our northeastern boundary question, voiced the sentiment of the people of that time when he defined diplomacy in its highest conception to be nothing more or less than FAIR AND HONORABLE DEALING AMONG NATIONS. Mr. Seward, at a still later day, said he did not believe it possible for the United States ever to be involved in war with a foreign power, for we would not KNOWINGLY do injustice to any other nation; hence a simple statement of our grievance would in any case bring the offending party to terms.

THE PUBLIC SENTIMENT OF THE CIVILIZED WORLD WOULD BE WITH US, AND THAT WOULD BE IRRESISTIBLE.

I presume no one would be willing to admit that there has been any decline of national virtue since the days of Webster and Seward, but if there should chance to be one who feels that our moral position has been in any sense weakened since The Hague convention, in which we were so prominent, by reason of events that have occurred since that day, permit me to say that I do not believe such fact furnishes any ground whatever for DISCOURAGEMENT, but rather should have the effect to stimulate us to renewed effort to bring the American people up to HIGHER LEVELS OF THOUGHT AND ACTIVITY, and so avert the modern tendency to place questions of national honor before the more important considerations of right and duty.

The Interisland Traffic Of the Philippines

By W. H. TAFT, Secretary of War

HAD not the civil government of the Philippines winked at the assimilation of native and foreign vessels—that is, of foreign corporations transferring their vessels to American or Filipino companies—the interisland trade of the Philippines COULD NOT HAVE BEEN CARRIED ON.

The situation is that of feeding a starving man. The interchange of commodities of the different islands is a necessity. It is likely that if a system of small fines prevailed the SAME ships that are now engaged in the traffic would continue to handle it in violation of the coastwise laws. If the vessels that have been permitted in this fashion to carry freight were shut out, I don't know what would happen. THE PEOPLE COULD NOT GET ALONG.

COLONEL MONROE

The Lincolnville Philosopher Doubts the Wisdom of Permitting One Citizen to Become More Powerful Than the National Government

By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

"I HAVE been making a rough calculation," said Colonel Monroe, studying a slip of paper covered with figures, "and it looks to me as if Mr. Rockefeller were worth more in wealth than our old friend Uncle Sam."

"That cannot be possible," declared Judge Sawyer. "Do you mean to say that the assets of the national government do not foot up to more than a billion of dollars?"

"That's the way I figure it," answered the colonel, "but it is possible that I am in error. The various departments do not make an annual inventory or issue statements giving the money value of the property under their control, so it is impossible to say just what Uncle Sam is actually worth in dollars and cents, but I am satisfied that it is less than a billion. In other words, we have lived to see the day when one private citizen can list more property than the government of what claims to be the most powerful nation on the face of the globe."

"I thought that our navy alone cost more than a billion," said Postmaster Jenkins.

"Well, it didn't," said Colonel Monroe. "In this instance we have the figures, and they show that the cost of the 163 vessels which constitute our navy was about $173,000,000. If we add the various navy yards and other property the total may be placed at $200,000,000. Mr. Rockefeller could duplicate our navy five times and have plenty of money left. There are 143 custom houses, but they certainly did not cost more than $50,000,000. I don't believe that all of the postoffices in the country cost more than $100,000,000, but to be on the safe side we will call the item $150,000,000."

"There are 75,000 postoffices in this country," declared Jenkins, proud to display his knowledge.

"And at least 70,000 of them, including this one here in Lincolnville, are located in buildings rented by the government," returned Colonel Monroe. "The amount I have named would rebuild all of the postoffice structures owned by the government. If the army has $100,000,000 worth of property I do not know where it is. Suppose we put the forts in at the same figure and add an extra hundred million for the lighthouses and life saving bureau. What else is there?"

"The public buildings in Washington," suggested Judge Sawyer. "They constitute quite an item."

"Not when you are dealing in billions," said the colonel. "I would like to take a contract to duplicate the national capitol and all the department buildings, including the Smithsonian institution and the National museum, for the sum of $75,000,000, but in order to be on the safe side we will call it $100,000,000. What else is there?"

"The public school buildings," suggested Postmaster Jenkins after a pause. "There is the biggest item of all. Why, the school buildings alone must have cost more than $1,000,000,000!"

"In the first place, the national government does not own the public school buildings, and, in the second place, their value is far less than $1,000,000,000," asserted Colonel Monroe. "I cannot state offhand the number of these buildings, but I do recall that there are about 420,000 teachers. Let us assume that there are more than 300,000 school buildings and then see how many of them we can build with $1,000,000,000. First, we will erect fifty, each costing $1,000,000; then we will build fifty more, each costing $500,000; then we will contract for 200 buildings at an average price of $250,000, 1,000 school buildings at an average price of $100,000 and 10,000 school buildings at an average cost price of $25,000. This is a great country, Jenkins, and we are properly proud of our public school system and of the lavish way in which we have expended money on them. But do you think that there are many fine school buildings on earth? There are not 100 cities in the United States which can show a school edifice costing $100,000, and there are not 1,000 which can boast of $25,000 school structures.

"But we will let the figures stand as I had them. I wish to show you what Mr. Rockefeller could do with his $1,000,000,000. Now, we will put up 25,000 school buildings at a cost of $5,000 each, 100,000 buildings, each costing $1,000, and 200,000 at an average expense of $500. That should be enough to house all of the children in the United States."

"I'll bet you are way over your $1,000,000,000!" exclaimed Jenkins, looking over the colonel's shoulder as he tabulated his estimates.

"Perhaps so, but I have been very liberal," said Colonel Monroe, jotting down the figures. "Of course the school property of the United States is not so extensive as that for which I have allowed, but $1,000,000,000 is an awful sum of money, and I think I am inside of it."

The colonel figured for a minute in silence and then handed a slip of paper to Judge Sawyer. On it was the following tabulation:

A NATIONAL SYSTEM OF SCHOOL AND UNIVERSITY BUILDINGS ERECTED AT AN EXPENSE OF LESS THAN A BILLION OF DOLLARS.

50	buildings at $1,000,000 each	$50,000,000
50	buildings at $500,000 each	25,000,000
200	buildings at $250,000 each	50,000,000
1,000	buildings at $100,000 each	100,000,000
10,000	buildings at $25,000 each	250,000,000
25,000	buildings at $5,000 each	125,000,000
100,000	buildings at $1,000 each	100,000,000
200,000	buildings at $500 each	100,000,000
336,300	school buildings at total of	$800,000,000

"You will observe that I have a margin which would be sufficient to duplicate all of the great universities and colleges in the country," said Colonel Monroe. "This gives one an idea of what a billion dollars means. If we allow each of these buildings a plot of ground with a frontage of 100 feet, the average width of a school lot, we would have a row of them 6,370 miles long. It would form a street lined on both sides with school buildings extending from New York to San Francisco. That is one thing that Mr. Rockefeller could do with the money he has 'earned' since he evolved the trust theory of industry."

"That is the most astounding illustration of the significance of a billion dollars that I ever heard given," declared Judge Sawyer. "It seems almost incredible. Are you sure there is not some mistake in your figures, colonel?"

"You can verify or disprove them at your leisure, but I think you will find them accurate," replied Colonel Monroe. "It enables one to understand how Mr. Carnegie, who has only a paltry quarter of a billion at his disposal, is able to give away hundreds and thousands of library buildings and hardly impair his original holdings. We know that Mr. Carnegie is 'worth' from $250,000,000 to $400,000,000. He not only admits it, but is proving it. Compared with Mr. Rockefeller he is a man in modest circumstances. I very much doubt if Mr. Carnegie could buy out Uncle Sam. I was attempting to show that Mr. Rockefeller could do this when our friend Jenkins interrupted with his school proposition. You still think, do you not, Jenkins, that a man is entitled to all that he can get?"

"I don't know what to think," said Jenkins, gazing hopelessly at the figures. "My head is all in a whirl. Your figures must all be wrong, colonel. No man can be worth so much money as that."

"Mr. Rockefeller received known dividends in an amount exceeding $40,000,000 during the last year," stated Colonel Monroe. "That is at the rate of 4 per cent on a billion of dollars, and in these days that is a fair rate of interest. There is no more doubt that Mr. Rockefeller possesses more than a billion dollars' worth of paying property than there is that I own this postoffice building and get rent from the government. But we are attempting to find out about how much Uncle Sam is worth. His principal assets are the navy, the custom houses, postoffice buildings, army supplies, stations, etc.; forts, lighthouses and the public buildings in Washington. Let's see how much they all figure up to on a rough estimate."

Colonel Monroe was busy for several minutes, finally handing to Judge Sawyer the following table:

ESTIMATED ASSETS OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Navy	$200,000,000
Custom houses	50,000,000
Postoffice buildings	150,000,000
Army supplies and stations	100,000,000
Forts and arsenals	100,000,000
Lighthouses and life saving service	100,000,000
National capitol and public buildings in Washington	100,000,000
Total	$800,000,000

"You see that there is a balance sufficient to cover many scattered items," said Colonel Monroe. "I very much doubt if an expert appraiser could discover assets in excess of the amount I have named. We therefore are the living witnesses to something never before experienced since the development of civilization—viz, a private citizen secure in the possession of more property than is collectively owned by the nation of which he is a member. One man has legal and valid title to more property than is required to protect and conserve the honor, liberty, safety and orderly administration of the affairs of 80,000,000 of people."

"Perhaps Mr. Rockefeller will buy the government," suggested Postmaster Jenkins.

"Possibly," assented Colonel Monroe. "Again it is possible that the government will buy Mr. Rockefeller. It is inevitable that one or the other buys or sells."

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1904.

EX-GOV. J. S. HOGG, of Texas, is not the only prominent Democrat, by a great many, opposed to Judge Alton B. Parker, of New York, as the party's candidate for the Presidency. Col. William J. Bryan, the leader of the free silver, 16 to 1, element of the party, has announced his bitter hostility to Judge Parker and to the platform adopted by the New York convention which endorsed his candidacy. Col. Bryan hired a hall in Chicago, that he might be free from all entanglements with local Democratic factions. He invited Chicago Democrats to his meeting, and they went in such numbers that the hall would not hold them. His meeting was without a presiding officer and he introduced himself. And then he "let loose" in his usual trenchant style against the plutocratic influences behind Judge Parker, whose candidacy he utterly condemned. Evidently the Democrats do not constitute a very happy family.

IN ADDITION to pointing out the weakness of the Democratic party the speech of Mr. Bryan at Chicago in denunciation of the New York Democratic platform points directly to a breach in the Democratic party. It cannot be supposed that Mr. Bryan made such a deliverance without deliberately measuring and accepting its consequences. After this speech he could not support Judge Parker without gross "stultification," and his repudiation applies equally to any candidate who stands on a similar platfrom.

Mr. Bryan did not content himself with simply rejecting some leading features of the Hill-Parker platform, but contemptuously spurned it in all its length and breadth. He denounced it as false to every cardinal idea of true Democratic policy, and as a complete and object surrender to all the interests which Democracy should resist. Beyond that he stigmatized Judge Parker as unfit to be a candidate for the Presidency. This unfitness, in his estimation, is not personal, but is based on his willingness to run on such a platform.

The Democratic National Convention must either reaffirm the Bryan platforms of 1896 and 1900 or it must in substance adopt the New York platform. After past experience and after repossession of control by the saner element, the former is now inconceivable. But against the latter and aginst any candidate standing on it Mr. Bryan publicly commits himself. As his objection to Judge Parker is not personal, but is founded on the ideas he represents, it applies with equal force to any other man who may hold the same relation. It is equivalent to a declartaion that the Democratic National Convention must accept Bryanism or face an open bolt on Mr. Bryan's part. It means an irrepressible conflict.

If this prospect involved Mr. Bryan alone it might not be serious. How many of his old followers he could carry into a repudiation of the Democratic ticket may be problematical. But Mr. Hearst and his newspapers are in substantially the same position. The character of their contest against the elements now in control of the Democratic party is such as to involve an open conflict. There is little doubt that Bryan and Hearst have a complete understanding, and that Bryan's extreme utterances are in harmony with their common policy. If they cannot handle the Democracy their aim appears to be to create a party of their own of the most radical socialistic character, and all their movements point in that direction. Bryan's speech means a bolt and Hearst's acts can have no other intelligent interpretation. If there was any chance of Democratic success before, this development destroys it.

Republican Situation In Maryland.

President Roosevelt will be the Republican standard bearer in the national campaign. Maryland Republicans of all shades of opinion are for him and will labor together to again cast the vote of our state in Republican column. It is fortunate that we have Roosevelt to lead the fight. His administration has not only been a marked success but the man himself has won a place in the hearts of the people. If he is abrupt in manner, he does things, and whatever he does, experience shows he was right and the people like an open, square, manly fighter. Whatever he does, the people from one end of the country to the other trust the man and admire him for his courage, simplicity and directness in his dealings with men and measures. Then, he is a young man with broad and liberal views and high ideals. The young men of our country can rally to his support with enthusiasm and feel in so doing that they are helping the cause of honest and decent government by keeping a man like Roosevelt at the head of the government for the next four years. Mr. Roosevelt can carry Maryland, we believe, but to do so we must be together ourselves and thus inspire men of independent views who are in sympathy with the national policies of the Republican party, with confidence that we can accomplish something. We must first of all get rid of narrow personals politics. There is in Maryland a very large and influential element who are Republicans from conviction and not for profit. Men whose active interest in its welfare has done much to give the party higher standing in the estimation of the thinking people. These men think for themselves. We want the counsel and moral support of these men of standing and experience and we want the earnest zeal and enthusiasm of our young men. The highest function of the party organization should be to rally and unite all force in this state who believe in the principles of the party. The executive officers of our State Committee have proceeded on this line and they will not stop to inquire whether a man is a Brown man or a Jones man. The interests of the Republican party as a whole are vastly superior to the fortunes of any individual—Belair Times.

FAITH IN AMERICAN PEOPLE

Secretary Taft, who represented the President at the opening of the St. Louis Exposition Saturday, could not fail to speak on expansion. The occasion commemorated the first great expansion of the country, and his most conspicuous public service is identified with the last inevitable.

The Louisiana purchase involved large problems which were courageously and unhesitatingly faced. The Philippine acquisition involves problems, possibly still larger and more difficult, certainly widely different, and they must be faced with equal courage and resolution. Secretary Taft reflected the public feeling when he said that they will not be solved by conferring statehood on the new territory is probable." Those who shrink from the responsibility discredit the American people. And then he added: "Without being blind to the difficulties or the dangers, it gives me the greatest happiness to know and to say that the President of the United States is glad to take his stand among those who believe in the capacity of the American people when aroused by the call of duty to solve any problem of government, however new, which depends solely on the clear-headness, the honesty and the courage, the generosity and the self-restraint of the American people."

These words go to the heart of the vital issue. There are two grounds upon which hesitation and unwillingness to accept the Philippine problems may be based. The first is a feeling that the United States should not under any circumstances go beyond its own continental confines and should not take any direct part in the development or advancement of the world outside. This is at least intellegible ground. It can be understood even if it cannot be approved. It is the position which belongs to the little Americans. It rests upon the idea that we were big enough without any island or exterior possessions, and that it is not desirable to extend beyond our natural borders which embrace only contiguous territory homogeneous population and questions of ultimate statehood. There are those who believe in this limited America, and, however objectionable, it is a view which is early comprehensible.

The other ground is that the American people are unfamiliar with questions connected with the administration of dependencies or colonies and are not capable of dealing with them. This is an impeachment of the ability of the American people to handle that class of problems. It is some times added by way of extenuating this view that American institutions are not adapted to colonial government. This answer is beside the question. It would be just as reasonable to say that British institutions are not adapted to the government of India or South Africa. These dependencies do not have the same political system which prevails in England—parliamentry government and absolute selfe-rule. British institutions are one thing in Great Britain and another in greater Britain. So American institutions sre adaptable to different conditions. Their essence is liberty compatible with the the welfare of those to whom it is extended. American rule in the Philippines means the administration of the islands for the highest good of the Filipinos. To say that the American people are incapable of such work is to discharge them in compariron with other peoples, and Secretary Taft honors himself and honors the President in declaring that they stand with those who have no such distrust.

KILLED NEAR DEER PARK.

A Man, Supposed to be John Wagas, Home Unknown, the Victim.

Another unfortunate has been added to the death list by being killed by a freight train, the man meeting his death at a point one mile west of Deer Park on Monday morning presumably about 12.30 o'clock, as a watch found upon his person had stopped at this hour.

The man was going east on a freight train and at the point indicated he is supposed to have fallen between the cars and his life crushed out.

The body was discovered by some railroad man and reported to the authorities at Deer Park. Dr. Lininger was called and upon examination he found that the man's neck had been broken and numerous other injuries inflicted. Upon his person was found $17 in money, a ladies' hunting case gold watch and a pass book bearing the name of John Wagas. Nothing was found to indicate the man's home.

His body was taken to Deer Park and there interred in the semetery.

Wreck at Snowy Creek.

Monday afternoon one of the wheels under a car of an east bound freight train broke as it was coming around Snowy Creek Curve, west of Oakland, and in the mix-up which followed four hundred feet of track was torn up and five cars filled with merchandise derailed and wrecked. Traffic was delayed several hours in consequence.

NICE SORT OF MAY PROMISED.

By the Rev. Irl R. Hicks—Temperature Jumps Extreme.

Rev. Irl R. Hicks, St. Louis, for May predicts:

First storm period is central on the 3d, covering the 1st to the 6th. At the opening of the month there will be a manifest change in the direction of storm conditions. Wind will shift to easterly and southerly, growing fitful and restless as the period advances, and from about the 3rd to the 5th, many storms will break forth with violence in sections of the country.

Terrific rains will fall in many sections, accompanied with hail and heavy thunder especially along the Southern to Central states. A very decided boreal feature of these disturbances will come out of the northwest as the storms work westward, bringing a high barometer and high gales, with great probability of late snow in the north and west. After the storm area has moved off to the east a very low drop of temperature will follow, bringing frosts at night northward and spreading far toward the East and South before the effects of the next storm period check the boreal tendency.

The 8th, 9th and 10th are the central days of the second storm period. A return to storm conditions will appear about the 8th, in rising thermometer falling barometer, easterly to southerly winds and growing cloudiness. Decided disturbances may be reasonably expected about the 9th to 10th, with electrical storms and high winds on and touching the 10th. Another sudden and marked change to cooler will follow after these storms. If a cold wave and frosts should not follow the first storm period, look for much with heavy frost northward about the 10th to 12th.

From the 12th to 17th and until the end of the month the solar energy will be focalized along a tier of states running east ahd west across the central part of the country.

As we enter this period look for change to warm and balmy weather.

The winds will shift to southerly, the barometer will steadily fall, and the skies soften into the serenity that foreruns active storms. By the 15th wide areas of cloud and storm, with very warm and ominious atmosphere, will be well in motion from west to east. Heavy rains, thunder and hail will follow in many parts of the country, as the storm centers advance. Change to much colder, with probable frost in the North, will certainly come when the storms are over.

If at the previous May periods heavy and prolonged disturbances occurred, the same character of phenomena, only much lighter, may be looked for from 20th to 23rd. But if disturbancs fail to take on the violent forms mentioned in previous periods this fourth period may be counted on as one of the general and severe storms, after which look for rising bar ometer and change to much cooler.

From 24th to 28th will bring a regular return to storm conditions—higher temperature and falling barometer and change to much cooler.

From 24th to 28th will bring a regular return to storm conditions—higher temperature and falling barometer, and rain and thunder storms. Violent if not tornadic storms are among the probabilities at this, as well as other May periods. Change to much cooler will come as May goes out.

Scaffold Broke.

Yesterday a scaffold at the residence of Mr. D. E. Offutt on Second street upon which were a number of men working, among them being Mr. S. E. Bolden, suddenly gave way and precipitated Mr. Bolden to the ground, a distance of more than twenty-five feet, where he struck upon a pile of brick and rock. He was painfully though not seriously injured, his most serious hurt being a badly sprained ankle. This morning he feels the effects of his sudden flight in every joint and muscle.

In Memory of Howard E. Hinebaugh.

Dearest Howard thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel;
But 'tis God who has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.

Peaceful be thy silent slumbers;
Peaceful in the grave so low.
Thou no more will join our number;
Thou no more our sorrows know.

Yet, again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
And in Heaven with joy to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

Advice About Seed Corn.

An exchange publishes the following: "Growers of corn should take extra precautions in securing and testing their seed this year. Reports from many portions of the corn belt indicate a degree of vitality much below the average. No corn that does not show strong vitality should be planted. A simple method of testing is to wrap a sample of the corn that is desired for seed in a wet cloth or paper and place in a warm room. This should be moistened from time to time. At the end of five days it will be well sprouted if it is suitable for seed. Basing estimates on such tests, no poor seed need be planted."

Mr. Charles D. Smith, of Parsons, was in Oakland a few days recently. Last week he was nominated by the Republicans of Tucker county for Prosecuting Attorney in that county, much to the satisfaction of his Maryland friends, especially those of Oakland where he is so well and favorably known.

An old house was recently torn down in Marion county. It has a peculiar history. Although it was considerably over 100 years old, George Washington did not sleep in it while he was in this section. It is believed that it is the only house in the state which lacks the distinction of the claim.—Kingwood Argus.

Sunday morning and evening last Rev. J. H. Hathaway, of Toronto, Canada, who has been in this section several months engaged in evangelistic meetings, preached in St. Paul's M. E. church to large and thoroughly appreciative audiences. The following day Mr. Hathaway left for his home where he will spend the summer. He may return here in the fall.

Was business good or bad yesterday? What are the chances for tomorrow or next week? Is there an effort to make it better or is there just a hope for the best? The chances are surely against profit if the merchant is just letting the thing drift. In the old school days every business man no doubt remembers writing in the copy book, clear down a page, the alluring sentence: "Life is what you make it." Perhaps the average business men has not thought of the motto since. But that sentence can be applied to business and made to benefit the business man. There may be reasons why it can not be made as lively next week as it has been some times in the past, but there is every reason to believe that business will be better if the effort for it is stronger.

FRIENDSVILLE WILL HAVE LIQUOR

License Granted by Clerk Tower to the Crawford Hotel.

The municipal election at Friendsville Tuesday of last week when the "wet" ticket carried by a majority of twenty, as told in this paper last week, will not result in litigation whereby the temperance citizens of that town will invoke the aid of the law in restraining Clerk Tower from issuing license to those who are qualified to carry on the business of selling liquors as was intimated the day after the election.

On Monday Mr. Andrew Schlossnagle, one of the proprietors of the Crawford House, at Friendsville, was in Oakland and secured from Mr Tower a license to have an open bar on his premises. He will carry on the business as it should be, there is no doubt.

Mr. W. D. Collier, it is understood, will also apply to the Clerk for a license for his house.

The Justices of the Peace for Garrett county, who were appointed by Governor Warfield during the session of the Legislature, have received their commissions from Clerk Tower and entered upon the discharge of their duties.

The first of the series of lectures at the Oakland Normal was delivered by Rev. Miller on last Friday. His subject: "The value of method," was handled in a masterly manner. The thoughts given out during the lecture were such that would prove an incentive to all who had the opportunity of getting them. The lecture on Friday of this week will be delivered by Rev. Manges; subject: "Three R's" and Orthography. Mr. J. E. Harned will give a microscopical exhibition on the 13th.

"A family numbering 16 persons," writes a subscriber at Coon Creek, "are in the habit of kissing each other each night before retiring. How many kisses are exchanged each evening, supposing each kisses the other only once?" The question is an easy one but we are too busy just now too figure it out. We submitted it to the philosopher of Hungry Hollow but he got so mixed up after following the trail of six of the kisses that he quit in disgust. We have referred the question to the Cupid Social of Mountain Lake Park and we understand that the members will have a practical demonstration of the problem at their next meeting. When they arrive at solution we will inform our correspondent of the result.

Sunday was the first day of May and it was an ideal May Day. The last week of April gave us as varied an assortment of weather as one could wish, for the most part intensely disagreeable, and it is said by some who watch weather conditions very closely that during the entire week the sun shone but four minutes, thus occuring Saturday at noon. However this may be Sunday was a warm bright sunny day. The fields and woods are rich with the perfume of the backward season's flowers and many of the fragrant arbutus blossom were gathered which bedecked milady's dresser and the sweet scent permeated all parts of her boudoir.

Oakland Model Steam Bakery

To my Patrons and the Public:

Owing to the steady increase in my business and the determination to give my customers the best service and goods that can be produced anywhere, I have installed in my Bakery an up-to-the-minute steam plant by which the product of my establishment is more than doubled and in consequence no delay is anticipated in putting upon the market twice daily fresh, nutritious Bread, Cakes, Pies, etc.

The dough mixer in my establishment has a capacity of three barrels which is driven by an engine and is of the latest pattern and a model in every respect. The dough is mixed by this machine and turned upon the table without being touched by the hands, thus ensuring better mixed bread and cleanliness in every respect. "Cleanliness" is our motto.

I have also installed a power ice cream machine and am better prepared than heretofore to manufacture Ice Cream and sell at wholesale and retail on the shortest notice.

I respectfully invite the public to inspect my plant.

Very truly yours, HENRY LAUER.

Evolution OF THE Army of Japan

An English military authority recently witnessed the debarkation of Japanese troops at Chemulpo. It is generally accepted that the transportation of troops and supplies furnishes the supreme test of a nation's military efficiency. A great many armies poorly transported have fought well, but there is no case on record of a well transported army having fought poorly. The greatest military genfuses have grappled with this problem of transportation, and in proportion as they have solved it they have prevailed against their foes. It would naturally be assumed that the older nations would have quartermaster arrangements which are nearly perfect, but the facts do not bear out this assumption. When the United States went to war with Spain the problem of getting a handful of men to Cuba was found to be a most serious one. England found her resources, which on the water are remarkably strong, taxed to the utmost in her trouble with the Boers. And so it has been in every recent war.

But along comes the Jap, "a beginner in civilization," to demonstrate to western nations that the matter of getting troops from one place to another, even by water, where every ship must be convoyed, is not such a difficult task after all. The English military authority already quoted declares that there is no European nation which could disembark many thousands of men as rapidly and with as little confusion as it was done by the Japanese at Chemulpo. This statement, coming as it does from one who is competent to express an opinion, is really startling at first blush, especially since it is generally assumed that Japan's beginning as a serious military factor occurred only after the China-Japanese war, at the time of the rape of Port Arthur by Russia. While it is true that Japan's full awakening to the possibilities of a great navy may be said to date from the sea battle with the Chinese at the mouth of the Yalu river, her determination to possess some day a powerful army antedated that by at least twenty years. What is, in view of the present difficulty in the far east, even more significant is that it was Russia which first made the nervy little Jap determine to become a great military power, decades before the China-Japanese war, with its resultant Port Arthur episode, was ever thought of.

Theft of Sakhalin.

It is just twenty-nine years ago that Japan ceded to Russia in exchange for the Kurile islands, a group of about twenty barren rocks, the valuable island of Sakhalin, with its 46,000 square miles and its valuable coal mines and timber forests. Then it was that she, figuratively speaking, gave a gulp and determined some day to get even with Russia. At that time it would have been madness to attempt to fight her unscrupulous foe. The events leading up to this cession of Sakhalin were characteristically Russian. The island geographically is a portion of the Japanese group. It lies just north of Yezo, from which it is separated by the narrow strait of Soya. Japan's more southerly islands were not then so overcrowded as they are now, and the population of Sakhalin was very small. Russia saw this strip of land standing like a bar before her Siberian possessions and determined to possess it. This she did in her usual manner—by moving in. Naturally Japan protested, and Russia, even with her abnormal land grabbing propensities, had not the face to dispute the claim. She accordingly suggested that a joint occupation be tried, Japan being given the southern half. Of course this did not work—joint occupations never do—and Russia knew that in advance. The joint occupation in this case really consisted of Russia and—Russia. Japan protested, and Russia offered to give her a few of the Kurile rocks if she would get out altogether. Japan declined, and the joint occupation farce went on a little longer. Then the limit was reached. Japan protested again, whereupon magnanimous Russia offered to give her the entire bleak Kurile group in exchange for her claim to Sakhalin, which Russia has since used as a penal colony. Japan was furious, but she realized that if she did not take the Kuriles and get out she would get nothing and get out at the same time, so she accepted.

What then seemed a calamity for the island empire, which needed Sakhalin's sparsely settled miles as an outlet for her rapidly increasing surplus population, was really a blessing in disguise, for it caused the Japs to realize that if they were to preserve their national existence they must be prepared to support it by force of arms, which arms would almost certainly be used first against Russia. That did not prove to be quite the case, for China was the first nation to get a taste of the Japanese quality in fighting, but Russia was second on the list, and if there is anything certain, in case Russia should be the loser in the present struggle, it is that Japan will claim Sakhalin as a matter of sentiment and the Liautong peninsula as a matter of justice and naval and political expediency.

A Rapid Evolution.

The evolution of the Japanese army was rapid. The modernization of the military really began with the outbreak of the Satsuma rebellion or revolution in 1868, seven years before the cession of Sakhalin to Russia. This destructive war, in which several hundred thousand Japanese lost their lives, lasted until 1872, when the shogun was finally overthrown, his retainers killed or scattered to all parts of the kingdom and the mikado firmly established upon the throne. To make up for the destruction of the fighting bands of samurai under the daimios an army built on European and American lines was immediately raised. Japanese youths were sent abroad to study the military establishments of other lands. Trained officers from America, England, France and Germany were invited to visit the country and assist in training an army. These experts, with the returned students who had graduated from foreign institutions, started military academies throughout the kingdom, so that Japan shortly became one vast training school.

A very complete plan of fortifications was adopted. The work along this line has not been entirely finished, but all the more important points are well protected, especially against attack from sea.

It was in 1875 that compulsory military service in the army and navy was adopted. Since that time every male subject of the mikado between the ages of seventeen and forty is liable to active duty. The army is made up of four divisions, and the conscript is slated for a term of service in each—three years in the active army, four years in the reserves, five years in the landwehr and eight years in the landsturm. In times of peace, however, only a small number of those eligible are admitted to the active army, choice being made by lot. In the beginning the main stress was laid on the artillery and infantry arms of the service. The cavalry, which is Russia's strongest point, is Japan's weakest.

An Eventful Period.

The first period of Japan's military evolution extended from the beginning of the Satsuma rebellion in 1868 to the opening of the Chino-Japanese war in 1894. This struggle served not only to open the eyes of the world to the fact that a new military power had entered the field, but came like a revelation to the Japs themselves. The adoption of western methods had not been in vain. The careful and scientific drill of the men in both the army and navy, the marksmanship practice of the gunners in the artillery and on the ships, the years of study given to every military system on earth, the schooling imparted to Japanese officers and men by army experts from Europe and America—all these things had borne fruit. The island kingdom had not only overcome her hereditary and overgrown neighbor on both land and sea, but she had done it in a manner that reflected glory upon her arms. Her ambition to be the leader of the orient was given a fresh spur.

Russia's grab of the Liautong peninsula and Manchuria furnished a direction for the newly awakened military enthusiasm of Japan. Here began the second stage of the evolution. Efforts toward creating a great army and navy were redoubled. The army was increased and more rigidly drilled than before. So rapidly and thoroughly was this process carried forward that at the time of the Boxer outbreak in 1900 the military establishment of the island empire had almost doubled.

"The Little Beggars."

The conduct of the Japanese troops on the march to Peking and in the subsequent fighting about the Chinese capital was such as to still further awaken the admiration of the world. Prior to that time the little men had measured themselves only with the soldiers of China. Now they marched side by side with the soldiers of Europe and America. The Japs seemed to understand that much depended on the impression made. How favorable that impression was the reports sent back by newspaper correspondents and the soldiers of other nations amply testify. The praises of "the little beggars," as the Jap troops were called, were being sung from Berlin to San Francisco. They outmarched the other troops, were the first over the breaches, stood fatigue with less complaint and maintained better discipline than almost any other soldiers in the field.

The small arms used by the Japanese were invented by one of their officers. They are fine weapons, and the manner in which the little brown men are using them against the Russians demonstrates that their military advancement since the Boxer uprising has been as rapid as during the years between 1895 and 1900.

THE MODERNIZATION OF JAPAN'S ARMY.

1. Earliest inception of drill: Sergeant with cat-o'-nine-tails. 2. Growth in organization: Officer's instructions to sergeant major. 3. About 1870: European military tent and European caps, with regimental badge and neck protector; rice bucket. 4. About 1873: French caps, native sword, German rifles. 5. 1875-80: Full dress uniform of infantry officers—French kepi, tunic, white cock's feathers, gold chevrons, European swords. 6. Present day: Field cap, knapsack, greatcoat and mess tin of modern German pattern and fastening; so with cartridge pouches; French trousers and white gaiters; sword bayonet.

Miscellaneous Account	2,054 18
Coroner's Inquest	22 00
County Treasurer	1,846 67
Contingent Fund	5,925 28
Total	$75,647 35

To pay this amount it was ascertained that the taxable property as shown by the assessment books amounts to $8,047,580.00, which at 94c on the $100, will make the above amount for County purposes, $75,647.25.

Deducting $631,437.00 for Corporations paying direct to the State Treasurer, leaves the basis $7,416,143.00, at 22½ cents on each $100, makes $16,686.32, and this added makes the taxes for State and County purposes, $92,333.57.

The

will Keep you as dry as toast in the stormiest weather.

It sheds water like a duck's back and when the storm is over you can't find a spot on the coat.

It's far ahead of the old style mackintosh and it hasn't the least "rubber" smell about it.

The belted back model shown in the illustration is as "swagger" as the high-priced custom tailor's product.

It's the same in everything except the price—instead of charging $40, we ask only $15 to $25.

The style book will interest you—it's free.

Bonding Act to Build Court House and Jail at Oakland.

CHAPTER 471.

AN ACT to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether bonds, not to exceed the sum of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be issued by the County Commissioners of said county for the purpose of building and furnishing a new Court House and Jail, at the county seat, Oakland, in said county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the question of whether or not the County Commissioners of Garrett County shall issue bonds to an amount not less than seventy-five nor exceeding one hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing lots and furnishing and erecting and building a Court House, and a new Jail and furnishing the same, at Oakland, the county seat of said county, not to exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be submitted to the registered qualified voters at the next Congressional election to be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in the year nineteen hundred and four, the said ticket to be voted to be printed on the congressional ballot to be used at said election, the ballot to be used in said election shall have printed on them for issue of bonds as against the issue of bonds, and shall be counted and returned as other election returns are counted and made.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That if it shall be found by the returns of said judges of election that a majority of the votes cast in said county are for the issue of said bonds, then it shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Garrett County, within nine months after said election, to issue said bonds to an amount not exceeding one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars in sums not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars each, and shall bear interest not to exceed five per centum per annum; and within nine months after said election, if it shall be decided by the ballots cast at said election, if it be decided by ballot cast that said bonds shall be issued, the said County Commissioners shall issue bonds, which bonds shall be signed by the President of the Board of County Commissioners, and to be countersigned by the clerk of the said board, and the said bonds shall be made payable in the following manner, that is to say: five thousand dollars each and every year, beginning with the year 1907, and they shall have coupons attached for the semi-annual interest, payable respectively on the first day of February and the first day of August in each year; the said bonds shall be dated as of the first day of August, 1906, and shall be forever exempt from all taxation for any purpose, and shall have printed on them a reference to the Act authorizing the issue thereof.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That said bonds shall be issued to mature at such date as shall not require the payment thereof of more than five thousand dollars in any one year; but none of said bonds shall be issued to mature before the first day of August, 1907.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That in order to pay the interest on said bonds the County Commissioners shall annually, beginning with their levy laying session in 1906, levy on the assessable property of the county a sufficient amount to pay said interest until the said bonds shall respectively mature; and for the payment of said bonds they shall, beginning with the year 1907, levy on the assessable property of said county a sum of five thousand dollars to pay said bonds, which shall be paid in the order of their serial number, beginning with serial number 1 and in their successive order.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That of the whole issue of said bonds so authorized or so much as may be necessary, the said County Commissioners shall immediately after signing said bonds, as hereinbefore provided, sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which said sale of said bonds shall be made upon due notice by publication in such news paper or news papers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper and necessary.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be applied by the County Commissioners of said county for the purchase of such lots and the erection and furnishing of a new Court House and Jail building, at Oakland, the county seat of said county, and for no other purpose; and for the building and furnishing of said Court House and Jail, the said County Commissioners shall contract by sealed bids for which contracts advertisements shall be made in such newspaper or newspapers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper, giving notice of the time and place of the public opening of such bids, and they shall require such bidder to file with their bids a good and sufficient bond with a surety or sureties to be approved by them in such penalty for the faithful performance of the contract thereunder as they may deem proper; and upon the opening of such bids the said County Commissioners shall award the said contract to the lowest responsible bidders, but they shall have the power to reject any and all bids.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1904.

PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS.

To Reimburse School Tax.

CHAPTER 20.

AN ACT to appropriate the sum of two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents out of the public school funds, to reimburse Garrett county for an instalment of State School tax withheld from said county in the year nineteen hundred and three and also to authorize and direct the Comptroller to apportion to said county the installment known as the March installment of the state school tax for the year nineteen hundred and four, said installment being the apportionment made to Garrett county on the 15th day of March in each year. Whereas an instalment of state school tax amounting to the sum two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents, was withheld from Garrett county in the year nineteen hundred and three and said county not being able to keep open its schools for seven and a half months in the year, as required by the school laws of the state, as by said law required to forfeit the March instalment of said school tax for the year nineteen hundred and three, the said inability of said county has been subject to large expenses in the erection of school houses, and the fact that the small population is scattered over a large extent of territory, creating a large number of school houses for the number of pupils required to be taught therein; Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller be, and he is hereby directed, to issue his warrant upon the Treasurer of the State in favor of the Board of County School Commissioners of Garrett county for the sum of two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents, said sum, in addition to the amount to which said county is entitled to receive, to be payed out of the public school funds of the state under existing laws.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the Comptroller be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to apportion Garrett county its proper proportion of said school tax for the year nineteen hundred and four, known as the March instalment of said school tax to be made by the Comptroller in pursuance of law, on the fifteenth day of March in each year, in the same manner as if the schools of Garrett had been kept open seven and one-half months in the year ending December 31, nineteen hundred and four.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the Board of School Commissioners s' all apply the said sums so received by the provisions of this Act to the support of the public schools of said county in the same manner as the other portion of the state school tax received by said county are intended to be applied under the provisions of the existing laws of the state.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 3d, 1904.

Prohibiting Sale of Liquor in Districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12.

CHAPTER 103.

AN ACT to prohibit the granting of licenses for the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in Election Districts Nos 6., 10 and 12 of Garrett county, Maryland.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland, to issue to any person or persons or corporation a license to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in election districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12, commonly known as Sang Run, Deer Park and Bittinger districts of Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 18th, 1904.

Prohibiting Sale of Liquor at Bond.

CHAPTER 673.

AN ACT to prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Lower Savage School House in the village of Bond, Garrett county, Maryland.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, Maryland, to issue license to any person or persons to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Lower Savage School House, in the village of Bond, Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 12th, 1904.

Carrying of Firearms.

CHAPTER 177.

AN ACT to prohibit all persons under fifteen years of age from carrying or having in their possession firearms of any description within the limits of Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for all persons under the age of fifteen years to carry or have in his or her possession any shot gun, rifle, revolver or other firearm of any description within the limits of Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person convicted of violating this Act before any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than twenty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail for not less than ten nor more than thirty days for each and every offence.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all fines imposed and collected for violation of this Act shall be paid to the County Commissioners of Garrett county to be used by them in the improvement of the public roads of said county.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 25th, 1904.

Against Bringing Indigent Persons Into Garrett County.

CHAPTER 236.

AN ACT to prevent any person from removing and bringing any poor, indigent or insane persons from any state, county or town into Garrett county, with the intent to leave such person a charge and burden upon Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to remove, bring, or entice any poor, indigent or insane person from any state, county or town to Garrett county, with intent to make said Garrett county chargeable with the support of such poor, indigent or insane person, under penalty of a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the Maryland House of Correction for a period of not less than two months nor more than two years, or both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall have the power to return and remove such poor, indigent or insane person who shall come into Garrett county for the purpose of charging Garrett county for the support of such persons, to such state, county or town where such poor, indigent or insane persons reside; and the County Commissioners may recover from such person or persons, state, county or town such expenses as incurred by reason of the support and return of such poor, indigent or insane person.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage

Approved April 7th, 1904.

CHAPTER 5.

AN ACT to prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Fairview Church in Election District number Eight.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett county, Maryland, to issue license to any person or persons, association or body corporate to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county, within three miles of Fairview Church in Election District number Eight in Garrett county.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved February 18th, 1904.

PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS.

Incorporating Friendsville.

CHAPTER 300.

AN ACT for the incorporation of the town of Friendsville in District number Two in Garrett county; and for the amendment of article 12 of the Code of Public Laws of the State of Maryland, entitled Garrett County, by adding additional sections thereto, to be known as Sections 111A, 111B, 111C, 111D, 111F, 111G, 111H, 111J, 111K, 111L, 111M, 111O, 111P, 111Q, to follow immediately after section 111 of said article 12 and to be known by the sub-title Friendsville, and to exempt the town of Friendsville in district No. 2 in Garrett county, as herein bounded and described from the operations of the provisions of chapter 77 of the Acts of 1888, entitled An Act to "prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in election district No. 2 of Garrett county."

WHEREAS, At a meeting of the male citizens and residents of the town of Friendsville, in Garrett county, Maryland, held on the 14th day of January, 1904, it was decided by the unanimous vote of the residents of said town attending said meeting that an application should be made to the General Assembly for a charter for said town of Friendsville

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That 15 new sections be and the same are hereby added to Article 12 of the Code of Public Laws, title "Garrett County," under the new sub-title "Friendsville," to immediately follow section 111, to be known as sections 111A, 111B, 111C, 111D, 111E, 111F, 111F's, 111G, 111H, 111J, 111K, 111L, 111M, 111O, 111P, and 111Q, and to read as follows:

SECTION 111A. That the inhabitants of the town of Friendsville in district No. 2 in Garrett county, Maryland, are hereby incorporated by the name of the "Mayor and Council of Friendsville," and by that name may sue and be sued, may have and use a common seal, and may hold real, personal and mixed property and dispose of the same when the best interests of the town may demand.

SEC. 111B. Be it further enacted, That the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville are hereby declared to be as follows: Beginning at a bounded mulberry tree, standing north ten degrees west sixty perches from John T. Gary's house, and running thence 50¾ deg. east one hundred and ninety perches to a clump of Pawpaw bushes, north 25 degrees east 140 perches to a stone corner, then south 16 degrees east 286 perches to a large rock, then south 68¾ degrees west 200 perches to a stake on brow of hill above coal bank, north 81½ degrees west 152 perches to a leaning tree a little above and beyond Homer Friend's house, thence north 8 degrees west 280 perches to the beginning.

SEC. 111C. Be it further enacted, That said corporation shall be governed by a Mayor and six Councilmen and that W. W. Savage of said town be, and is hereby named Mayor of the said city for the two years from the passage of this Act, ending the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February in 1906, and that Wm. H. H. Friend, Allen J. Mason and Arthur Chisholm, be and the same are hereby named and designated as the Councilmen for the first two years from the passage of this Act ending on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February, 1906, and that Frederic G. Fox, John W. McCullough and George J. Kolb are hereby named as Councilmen to serve for the one year from the passage of this Act, ending on the first Wednesday after the first Tuesday in February, 1905, and hereafter an election shall be held on the first Tuesday in February each and every year for the election of three Councilmen to serve for two years from the date of their election or until their successors shall be duly elected and qualified. And an election shall be held on the first Tuesday in February, 1906, for the election of Mayor of said town to serve for two years or until his successor shall be duly elected and qualified, and an election shall be held thereafter in every second year for the election of a Mayor for the said town.

SEC. 111C. And be it enacted, That the Mayor and the Council therein named shall have power to pass all such ordinances for conducting the elections herein provided for, or which may be hereafter authorized to be held, and shall make return thereof to the clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett county. And the qualified voters of any of said elections shall be bona fide residents, male, shall be 21 years of age or over of said town of Friendsville, who have been residents of State for the period of one year and of said town for the period of six months continuously next prior to the date of any such election; and that no one shall be eligible for the office of Mayor or Councilmen of said town unless he shall be a real estate owner or husband of a bona fide real estate owner in said town. And the Mayor shall have been a resident of said town for three years previous to his election and the Councilmen shall have been residents of said town two years prior to their election.

SEC. 111D. And be it further enacted, That the said Mayor and Council may from time to time cause an assessment to be made of all the property liable to the state and county taxes within the corporate limits, and to levy a tax thereon not exceeding twenty-five cents on the one hundred dollars in any one year, and that said property shall be assessed at its actual cash value; and that the land included in the above named corporate limits, which have not been laid out as town lots or as town property shall be exempt from taxation, with the exception of the buildings and personal effects thereon. And the said Council may appoint an assessor and collector of taxes and fix his salary for compensation, and provide for a method of collecting the taxes by ordinance, and also the method of making assessments; and any person aggrieved by any assessment made under this provision shall have the right of an appeal to the said Mayor and Council of said town of Friendsville.

SEC. 111E. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the said Mayor of the said town to see that the ordinances of the town are duly and faithfully executed, and he shall appoint subject to the confirmation of the Council all such persons as agents and servants of the corporation as may be necessary to carry out the objects and purposes of the incorporation and enforce the ordinances to be passed thereby.

SEC. 111F. And be it further enacted, That said Council shall have power to pass all such ordinances not contrary to the Constitution and laws of this state, as it may deem necessary, for the good government of the town; for the protection of the town's property, rights and privileges; for the preservation of the peace and good order and securing persons and property from violence and danger and destruction; for the protection of the health, comfort and convenience of the citizens of Friendsville, and visitors thereto or sojourners therein; for providing proper and suitable lights on the streets; for establishing, maintaining and regulating an adequate police force; to regulate the management and location of starch factories, glue factories, renderies, tallow chandlers, bone factories, soap factories, hide houses, tanneries, slaughter houses, breweries, distilleries, livery stables, foundries and all other establishments of which the business or trade may become obnoxious or injurious to public comfort or health; to prohibit the erection of such buildings, or the continuance of such noxious occupations therein, whenever the public health requires it; to prevent or regulate the use of fire arms, fire works, or other dangerous things; practices tending to endanger persons or property; to regulate or prohibit the running at large of cattle, horses, swine, fowls, sheep, goats, dogs or other animals; to authorize the impounding, keeping, sale and redemption of such animals when found in violation of the ordinances in such cases provided; to prevent the deposit of any unwholesome substance, either on public or private property; to compel its removal to designated points and to require slops, garbage, ashes and other waste or unwholesome material to be removed to designated points, or to require the occupants or residents on premises to place them conveniently for removal; to compel the occupants of any premises, building or out-houses, situated in said city, when the same have been filthy or unwholesome to abate or clean the same, to authorize the same to be done by the proper officers and to assess the expenses thereon against such property; to regulate or prevent the storage of gun powder, tar, pitch, resin, coal oil, benzine, turpentine, hemp, cotton, nitroglycerine, dynamite, giant powder, petroleum, gasolene or gas, or any product thereof, or any other explosive or combustible material which may seem to be dangerous; to authorize the removal or confinement of such persons having infectious or pestilential diseases; to pass all ordinances and orders and to expend such sums of money as may be necessary within the limitations therein provided for the protection, maintainance and preservation of the water supply of the city and the prevention of the pollution thereof; to regulate the selling, weighing or measuring of hay, wood, coal, coke and all other articles sold by weight and measure, and to provide for their inspection and selling; to make all regulations which may be deemed expedient for the promotion of health or suppression of disease; to regulate the construction of chimneys, smoke stacks, hearths, ovens, and the erection of stove and stove pipes, boilers and apparatus used in buildings or other places and cause the same to be removed or made secure, when considered dangerous; to suppress, restrain and regulate bawdy houses of ill fame and to prohibit the youth of said city from being on the streets, lanes or alleys at unreasonable hours of the night; to punish and suppress tramps and vagrants by imposing fines or both fines and imprisonment at hard labor, and to abate by appropriate ordinances all nuisances in said town which are so defined at common law, whether they are herein specifically named or not; to regulate the use of side walks and all structures in, under or over the same and to require the owner or occupant of the premises to keep the side-walks in front of same not to exceed 200 feet from snow and other obstructions and prescribe hours for cleaning the same; to regulate and prevent the throwing or depositing of sweepings, dust, ashes, offal, dirt, garbage, paper, hand bills, dirty liquors, or any other materials into any street, alley or public places, signs, sign posts, awnings, awning posts, poles, horse troughs, steps, railroad entrances, racks, posting hand bills and advertisements and display of goods, wares and merchandise; to cause the streets, lanes and alleys to be side walked, paved, graded, repaired, repaved, regraded, drained or sewered, or to close streets, or parts of streets, lanes or alleys; to regulate and license the use of coaches, hacks, drays and all other vehicles for the transportation of passengers, freights or other articles to or from points within said city, for hire or pay; to regulate license, tax restrain or prohibit theatrical and other exhibitions, shows or entertainments, for which money is demanded or received; provided that lectures on scientific, historic, benevolent, artistic, religious, or literary subjects, and apparatus for the exhibition of the same, and specimens of fine art shall not be deemed to be within the provision; to regulate the sales of all kinds of property at auction in the streets, stores, shops, or elsewhere in the city; and to license auctioneers, and all venders of property on the streets or squares, or other public places in the said city; to license, tax, regulate, suppress and prohibit hawkers, and itinerant dealers, peddlers and pawn brokers and to revoke such license at pleasure; to license, tax, regulate and prohibit the keeping or harboring of dogs; to license, tax and regulate branch stores and all other concerns established in said city for temporary business only.

SEC. 111F's. And be it enacted, That the corporate authorities of the town of Friendsville as by this bill provided shall, on the fourth Tuesday in April, 1904, order an election for the purpose of determining whether or not license for the sale of liquor shall be issued in said town, and at said election there shall be two tickets, one of which shall be printed "For Liquor License," and on the other "Against Liquor license," and at said election only freeholders of the town who are otherwise qualified as voters shall be eligible to vote. The Town Clerk, herein named, shall secure from the Clerk to the County Commissioners a certified list of all freeholders in said town, which list shall be verified as to the voter's qualifications by comparison with the registration list of said town of Friendsville in the office of the Supervisors of Election for said county; and for the purposes of this election the said certified list under the seal of the County Commissioners, attested by the Clerk of the town of Friendsville made in duplicate shall be the registration list by which the Judges of Election shall be guided in taking the vote on said question. The Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall appoint three judges and two clerks to hold said election, and they shall severally take the oath provided for judges and clerks by Art. 33 of the Code of Public General Laws title "Elections," and the polls shall be opened at one o'clock, P. M., and close at six o'clock, P. M.; said judges and clerks shall make return to the Mayor and Council of the results of said election and if it shall be found that a majority of the votes cast are "For Liquor License," then and in that event license shall be issued in conformity with the provisions of the succeeding sections of this act; but if a majority of the votes cast shall be found to be "Against Liquor License," then no license shall be issued except after another election as provided for by Section 111Q—should any such election be held. The Mayor and Council shall by handbills posted in said town give five days' notice of said election.

SEC. 111G. And be it further enacted, That any person or persons being the lessor or owner of any hotel property capable of comfortably accommodating fifteen guests or more with suitable and comfortable rooms and beds and bedding shall upon application to the clerk of said corporation and the payment of a minimum license fee of $250.00 (two hundred and fifty dollars) per year shall be authorized to sell liquors, malt and spirituous in the town of Friendsville at a bar to be located in said hotel and no where else, and said bar shall be closed promptly at nine o'clock every week night, and shall be closed from nine o'clock P. M., until six o'clock A. M., of the following day; and any one violating this provision by opening or selling any liquors between the hours named, or from any time from nine o'clock Saturday night until six o'clock Monday morning, shall be deemed to have violated any privilege herein contained or acquired by the payment of the license fee aforesaid, for the sale of liquor, and the license so granted him by said corporation to be at once revoked and the amount paid shall be paid to the town of Friendsville and if he shall sell any liquor after such forfeiture brought to his notice by an order of the Mayor and Council of said town he shall, upon conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, upon conviction thereof after indictment be fined not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than two hundred dollars ($200.00) for each and every sale of liquor made after he shall have been so notified by the said Mayor and Council of Friendsville of the forfeiture of his license.

SEC. 111H. And be it further enacted, That the said Council may elect a Clerk to said Council and fix his compensation and the length of his term, and that they may also fix the compensation of the Mayor of the said town.

SEC. 111J. And be it further enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall retain jurisdiction over the present county road running through in the boundaries of said corporate limit of Friendsville, and that said Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall have jurisdiction and supervision over all sidewalks along said road and all streets, lanes and alleys as they may accept and take under control from time to time, and they shall keep a record and description of the same, with the length and location thereof. And no street or alley shall be deemed to be under the control of said corporation so as to render said corporation liable on account of injury or damage arising there on until it shall be shown to have been accepted by the records of said corporation so kept by the clerk of said corporation.

SEC. 111K. And be it further enacted, That the said Mayor and Council shall have the power to compel the property owners binding along any of said streets, lanes or alleys so accepted by said corporation and recorded among its proceedings, to construct and keep in repair side-walks and foot-ways of their property binding on said streets and roads not exceeding 200 feet and may pass all such ordinances as may be necessary to compel the construction and repair of said side-walk. And they shall have power to enforce the construction and repair of said side-walks by fines imposed upon the property owners for a failure to construct and repair after fifteen days notice previously given, which said fines shall be collectable as other fines imposed for the violation of the ordinances of the town, as hereinafter set forth and stated.

SEC. 111L. And be it further enacted, That said Mayor and Council of Friendsville may establish and maintain a town lock-up and may confine therein all persons convicted of violation of their ordinances in default of the payment of fines imposed for such violations, or may at their option confine such person in the county jail at the expense of the said town, or they may require such person, in default of payment of fines, to work out such fines and costs upon the streets or other improvements of said town, such person to be allowed as a credit on such fines or costs the same wages as are paid other employees of said town for the same character of work.

SEC. 111M. And be it further enacted, That all fines, penalties and forfeitures imposed for violating any ordinance passed by said Mayor and Council shall be recoverable in the name of the Mayor and Council of Friendsville before such justice of the peace of the State of Maryland, residing in district No. 2 in Garrett county as may be elected police justice for said town by the Mayor and Council and no other, as shall debts, and shall be paid to the Mayor and Council for use of said town. And any one feeling agrieved by any judgment rendered by said police justice shall have the right of appeal to the circuit court for Garrett county to the next term of said court, but no judgment, fine or penalty imposed shall be stayed unless the party taking the appeal shall file a bond to be approved by the said justice in double the amount of the fine and costs to the Mayor and Council in Friendsville conditioned upon the successful prosecution of said appeal.

SEC. 111O. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this Act, the provisions of the Act of 1888, chapter 77, entitled "An Act to Prohibit the sale of Spirituous and Fermented Liquors and Lager Beer in Election District No. 2 of Garrett county," be and the same is hereby repealed so far as the same shall apply to that part of Election District No. 2 contained within the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville, in Garrett county, Maryland, hereby incorporated, and said part of said election district No. 2 within said corporate limits is hereby exempted from the operation of the provisions of said Act of 1888, chapter 77, and whenever any hotel-keeper having accommodation for fifteen guests in said corporate limits of Friendsville shall produce to the clerk of the circuit court for Garrett county a receipt for the sum of $250.00 (two hundred and fifty dollars) paid to the clerk of the Mayor and Council of Friendsville for a license to sell spirituous and fermented liquors in said town, then the clerk of the circuit court for Garrett county shall issue a license to such parties to sell spirituous and fermented liquors and lager beer in the corporate limits of said town of Friendsville, upon the terms and conditions and for the license fee or charge as other state licenses are issued for the sale of spirituous liquors and lager beer and in case his license so granted by the Mayor and Council of Friendsville shall be forfeited under the provisions of this Act, and he shall be convicted as herein provided, then he shall no longer have any right to sell under his state license.

SEC. 111P. And be it further enacted, That it shall not be lawful for the clerk of the circuit court of Garrett county to issue license to any person, persons, firm or corporation to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer after April 30th, 1904, outside the corporate limits of Friendsville, within four miles of the public school at Friendsville, Md.

SEC. 111Q. And be it further enacted, That whenever hereafter ten freeholders of the town shall desire to have the sale of liquor abolished, they shall petition the Mayor and Council at least thirty days before the February election provided for in each year, to submit at said election to the voters of said town, whether or not the license herein provided for shall be abolished; and the Mayor shall have printed on separate tickets to be voted at said election the words "For Liquor License," and "Against Liquor License," and if if a majority of the votes cast shall be cast For Liquor License the same shall be issued as hereinbefore provided; but if a majority of the votes cast shall be Against Liquor License, then no more license to sell liquors shall be granted after the expiration of the term for which any such licenses then issued shall end; and if the votes of the majority shall be Against Liquor License and the sale of such liquors be prohibited, any ten freeholders in said town may, at the next ensuing election petition for a submission of the question again, and a similar ticket shall be prepared and voted and the majority for or against liquor license shall prevail and licenses shall be issued as aforesaid or not as the case may be and the voters shall decide; and under these conditions and provisions the question of license or no license may be submitted at each and every annual election; no person who is not a freeholder within the corporate limits of the town of Friendsville and possessing all the other qualifications set forth in this act shall be entitled to vote on the license question.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Amending Deer Park Charter.

CHAPTER 187.

AN ACT to amend the Charter of the town of Deer Park, by empowering the Mayor and Common Council thereof to impose a license tax on any and all kinds of business carried on within the limits of said town.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That in addition to all other powers vested in the Mayor and Common Council of the town of Deer Park by previous Acts of the Legislature of Maryland, said Mayor and Common Council shall have the power to pass all such ordinances as may be necessary to impose a license tax upon all circuses, shows, theatrical troupes exhibiting within the limits of said town, and upon all livery stable keepers, owners of horses, hacks, carts, wagons, drays or other vehicles kept for hire, and upon all auctions, stores, shops, saloons, dancing halls and other places of amusement, and upon all hawkers and peddlers, and upon all other trades, business or professions operating or carried on within the limits of said town of Deer Park, or that may come therein for the purpose of transacting business; the amount of said license tax for each and every year shall be as follows: On all dancing halls not more than one hundred dollars; on each and every saloon not less than one hundred and fifty nor more than three hundred dollars; on each and every livery stable, not more than ten dollars for each rig; for each huckster or peddler not more than fifty dollars; for each merchant or store keeper not more than ten dollars, and for all other kinds of business, trades, or profession such sum as said Mayor and Common Council shall in their judgment deem proper. No license tax shall be issued for a period of less than one year except for circuses, shows and theatrical troupes and shall be dated from the first day of May in each year. All applications for license shall be made to the Mayor of said town, who is hereby authorized to issue same upon the payment of the license tax provided for by the ordinances of said town.

SECTION 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 7th, 1904.

Amending License Law as Applicable to Accident District.

CHAPTER 554.

AN ACT to repeal and re enact, with amendments Section 6 of Chapter 610 of the Acts of 1904, entitled "An Act to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county, to determine by ballot whether spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in said county, and to regulate the terms and conditions on which the sale thereof may be made, in case the majority of the voters of said county shall determine said question in the affirmative and to regulate the sale thereof by druggists and pharmacists."

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Section 6 of Chapter 610 of the Acts of 1904, entitled "An Act to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in said county, and to regulate the terms and conditions on which the sale thereof may be made, in case the majority of the voters of said county shall determine said question in the affirmative, and to regulate the sale thereof by druggists and pharmacists," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted with amendments, so as to read as follows:

6. No spirituous or fermented liquors or alcoholic bitters shall be sold in any election district of said county, except as provided for by section five of this Act, and also upon the following terms, viz: each and every applicant, person or persons, house, corporation, company or association, shall be recommended to said clerk by at least twelve respectable freeholders living in the Election District in which said saloon is located, and within one mile of the place where said liquors or alcoholic bitters are to be sold, as a fit person to traffic in the article, nor until such applicant or applicants, applying for such license, shall have filed with said clerk a bond with at least two sureties, to be approved by said clerk in the penal sum of two thousand dollars, conditioned to the payment of all fines, penalties, costs and damages, to which the person or persons obtaining said license may become liable for any violation of any of the license laws of this state; and said clerk is hereby prohibited from approving any bond under this section unless it shall appear to him, by good evidence, that the sureties on said bond are worth, in real estate, double the amount of the penalty of said bond, and that in no event shall any person sell such article on the Sabbath day, commonly called "Sunday," and for violation of this provision such person, natural or artificial shall be subjected to the penalties provided for in section four of this Act. Provided, however, that the repeal and re-enactment of this section of said Chapter 610 shall apply only to Election District No. 5, commonly called Accident District and that the said section 6, as originally enacted shall stand and be the law as to all other districts in said county.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1904.

HE QUESTIONS THE NEW ROAD LAW

Attorney General Bryan Advises That State Pay No Money.

SAYS COURTS SHOULD DECIDE

Objection Arises Under Act of 1821 Prohibiting State From Aiding In Internal Improvements.

Mr. William Shepard Bryan, Jr., Attorney-General of the State, questions the constitutionality of the act passed by the last Legislature known as the Road bill, which provides for the appropriation of $200,000 annually of the State's money for use under certain specified contingencies, in the repair and maintenance of county roads in the various counties of the State. Mr. Bryan is of the opinion that the matter should be taken into court to determine the validity of the act before any money is paid out under its provisions. With this view of it, Mr. Bryan wrote to Mr. G. T. Atkinson, State Comptroller, and Gen. Murray Vandiver, State Treasurer, yesterday, advising them not to make any payments under the act.

Mr. Bryan's letter was as follows:

"There was passed at the session of the General Assembly of 1904 a Road bill, appropriating $200,000 annually of the State's funds, to be expended in certain contingencies specified in the act, in the repair and maintenance of the county roads in the various counties of the State.

"I write to inform you that, in my judgment, it is your duty to decline to pay over or aid in paying over any of the State's money under the provisions of this act until the constitutional validity of the same has been finally and authoritatively declared by the judicial tribunals of the State.

"I think that there is too much doubt about the authority of the Legislature to appropriate any of the State's money for the maintenance repair of county roads for any of the Treasury officers of the State to be justified in paying out funds under such attempted appropriation until and unless the same is sanctioned by the courts.

"Section 34 of Article 3 of the State Constitution denies to the General Assembly the power in any mode to involve the State in the construction of works of internal improvement, nor in granting any aid thereto which shall involve the faith or credit of the State; nor make any appropriation therefor, except in aid of the construction of works of internal improvement in the counties of St. Mary's, Charles and Calvert, which have had no direct advantage from such works as have been heretofore aided by the State and provided that such aid, advances and appropriations shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $500,000."

"As is well known, a bill was introduced in the General Assembly to submit to the popular vote an amendment to this clause in the Constitution providing that under limitations the prohibition should not apply to aids to county roads. It it should be determined by the courts that all the neccessary requirements have been observed to authorize the submission of this proposed amendment to the people, and it should be adopted at the general election in 1905, the objection to the vaidity of this road bill will, of course, be removed. I mention this proposed constitutional amendment now merely as showing that the same General Assembly which passed this road bill evidently considered that it might need an amendment of the Constitution to validate it.

"The question on which the validity of this act turns is wheather by being required to aid in the oonstruction of county road the State will be in any mode involved in the construction of works of internal improvement. This, of course, depends upon whether such roads are works of international improvement in the sense in which those terms are used in the Constiitution.

"This prohibition was introduced into the Constitution of 1851, and the debates in the convention framing that Constitution undoubtedly show that the main mischief sought to be guarded against was the subscription by the State in the future to the stock of railroads and canals, with which classes of investments the State's experience in the past had been costly and unsatisfactory.

"While these were undoubtedly the chief classes of works of internal improvements intended to be guarded against, it by no means follows that they were the only classes of such works. When it is remembered that in construing a constitution the terms used are to receive the popular meaning in which they were understood by the persons adopting the Constitution, and when it is remembered that there had been in the first half of the last century and prior to the original adoption in 1851 of this clause of the Constitution a great amount of political discussion about the Federal Government's right to engage in works of internal improvement, and that one of the most prominent of those works of internal improvement, if not the most prominent, was the great Cumberland Gap road leading to Kentucky and the then West.

"So far as I am aware, the cost of maintaining and constructing highways in the State has been borne since 1851 by the city of Baltimore and the several counties, just as since that time all public aid to railroads or other public-service corporations has been rendered by these municipalities, and never by the State. I do not see how any public official would be justified in holding that this road bill, before it received judicial sanction, authorized the expenditure of the State's funds."

A GROWING TOWN.

Blaine on the Patomac River Forging Ahead.

The person journeying along the West Virginia Central ten or twenty years ago would notice at nearly every station a sawmill surrounded by piles of freshly sawed lumber. The railroad had pushed into thinly populated mountain forest, and the most natural of the new industries which came then into existence was the conversion of the forest trees into merchantable lumber. But the lumber supply is already depleted and the big sawmill is not so muchin evidence as it was.

The agricultural and grazing capability of the mountain soil did not seem sufficient to sustain the numerous little towns which had grown up along the railway. However, Dame nature very kindly came to their relief and pointed to the veins of black diamonds which lay a little beneath the surface. Accordingly the mining of coal has so well supplanted the manufacture of lumber as to point to a large population along the valley of the north Fork of Potomac than was possible so long as King Lumber ruled surpreme.

One of the leading towns in this new industry in Blaine, 47 miles above Cumberland. Here is a town, lying mostly on the Maryland side of the river which claims 700 population and this number will increase with the expansion of the coal industry. Here are several large, well equipped, and busy stores and a hotel that is cleaner or better kept than the Kitzmiller is rarely to be found.

On the Garrett county side and very near the town is the plant of the Blaine Mining Company, which is the oldest, having been in operation three and a half years. It employs 90 men and has a daily capacity of 350 tons of Freeport coal. The average controlled runs between 200 and 300, and the vein, which lies very advantageously with respect to mining, is 5 to 6 feet thick. The superintendent is S. B. Brydon and his mine is thus far the heaviest producer in the vicinity.

The same tipple is used also by the Dill No. 1, and a mile higher up the river is the new plant of the Dodson Coal Co. On the West Virginia side and about the same distance from town is another new plant, that of the Oakdale Coaland Coke Company. Some further description we hope to give in a subsequent letter.

Also on the West Virginia side and very close to Blaine are the two mines of the Smith Coal Company, which have been in operation three years and are owned by R., A. and H. B. Smith, three enterprising brothers who are merchants of Blaine. Their mines have a daily capacity of 125 to 150 tons

Very near the railroad is the newest plant of all, that of the Wabash & Potomac Coal Company, of Baltimore, Md. Its office room in the Marine Bank Building on South Gay St., was annihiliated in Baltimore's great fire. The President of the corporation is Chas. E. Conoway, of Fairmont and the Secretary-Treasurer is W. P. Atha, also of Fairmont.

The company owns 525 acres of land fronting the railroad and between the latter and the heavy hill in which lie the coal seams is a belt of level ground, highly favorable for side tracks.

Both the upper Freeport and lower Kittanning appear in the face of the hill, the former well toward the summit so far as can be seen from the bottom land. The former has here a clean thickness in good workable coal of 4 feet 9 to 5 feet 9 inches, and the Kittanning vein of 4 feet 4 inches. The incline to the opening in the Freeport seam is 425 feet long and very steep, especially in the upper part, where the angle is over 60 degrees. The tracks on the incline are of 40 pound rails resting on heavy ties and making a durable roadway. The hoisting apparatus is of the latest improved pattern. The weight of the load cars draws up the empties.

The opening in the Kittanning vein is not much above the level of the tipple. The latter has a floor space of 26 by 130 feet, and is claimed to be decidedly the best in the district. It is so arranged that when a second track is added to the spur running under the tipple, Freeport coal can be delivered to cars on one track and Kittanning coal to cars on the other.

The company began the construction of its plant the first day of last Oct., and the first coal was taken out Jan. 25th. The early opening of the past winter was quite a hinderance to operations, and the encountering of a fault caused also a temporary delay. As a matter of course the plant is not yet completed nor in full operation.

The present daily output is 75 to 100 tons and is steadily increasing. It is the purpose of the company to increase the capacity to 700 or 800 tons, and number of workmen from 34 to 350. The heading in the Freeport vein has been driven in 640 feet. Pick work is used thus far, but it is the intention to install machines, run probably by electric power rather than compressed air so that motor haulers may also be used.

The company has built, mainly for the use of its workmen a three story hotel of 24 rooms, 18 of which are sleeping rooms. This hotel is kept by a Mr. Johnson.

Your correspondent found Mr. J. E. Hamilton, the superintendent, an entirely courteous and accommodating gentleman, who spared no pains in showing him over the plant.

LIVER TROUBLES

"I find Thedford's Black-Draught a good medicine for liver disease. It cured my son after he had spent $100 with doctors. It is all the medicine I take."—MRS. CAROLINE MARTIN, Parkersburg, W. Va.

If your liver does not act regularly go to your druggist and secure a package of Thedford's Black-Draught and take a dose tonight. This great family medicine frees the constipated bowels, stirs up the torpid liver and causes a healthy secretion of bile.

Thedford's Black-Draught will cleanse the bowels of impurities and strengthen the kidneys. A torpid liver invites colds, biliousness, chills and fever and all manner of sickness and contagion. Weak kidneys result in Bright's disease which claims as many victims as consumption. A 25-cent package of Thedford's Black-Draught should always be kept in the house.

"I used Thedford's Black-Draught for liver and kidney complaints and found nothing to excel it."—WILLIAM COFFMAN, Marblehead, Ill.

STATE REPUBLICANS INDORSE ROOSEVELT.

Praise the President and His Administration.

ELECTORS-AT-LARGE NONINATED.

McComas, Williams, Jackson and Agnus Chosen To Head Maryland Delegation To Chicago.

Nothing occurred to mar the harmony of the Republican State Convention, which met yesterday at the Concert Hall of the Music Hall at Baltimore, and adopted a platform indorsing President Roosevelt, selected four delegates-at-large and nominated two electors-at-large. The delegates exhibited an amount of enthusiatm.

Senator McComas presided, and he and Congressman William H. Jackson, Gen. Felix Agnus and Stevenson A. Williams were elected delegates-at-large. The alternate delegates-at-large were Messrs. James H. Baker of Kent, Gist Blair of Montgomery, Wm. B. Baker of Harford and M. M. Mulhall of Baltimore city.

The electors-at-large chosen were Mr. Charles J. Bonapart and Mr. C. L. Bretz, the former of Baltimore and the latter of Cumberland.

The Garrett county Republicans were represented in the convention by Messrs. N. U. Bond, George W. Engle, R. A. Ravenscroft, Hurt Wilson and others.

The Oakland Normal.

The lecture delivered at the Oakland Normal last Friday afternoon by Rev. E. Manges, pastor of the Oakland Lutheran church, embodied the spirit of a teacher, his subject being "Reading, Writing, Arithmetic and Orthography," which was treated in masterly manner. If the teachers will carry the thoughts expressed by the speaker and put them into execution when they instruct their classes they certainly will succeed in causing their pupils to make greater advancement in these four essential subjects.

On Friday afternoon of this week Prof. Joseph E. Harned, of Oakland, will give a microscopical exposition before the school which will be both interesting and instructive.

ARTHUR PUE'S SHREWD GAME

Maryland Senator is said to Be Flirting With Bryan Following.

Dispatches from New York chronicle the arrival of Senator Arthur P. Gorman there, but it is noted that none of the reporters there succeeded in getting an interview from the Maryland Democratic leader. Mr. Gorman intimated that he might have something to say after consulting with the local leaders.

It is hinted that while in New York Mr. Gorman will see a number of the leaders of the Eastern Democracy, including representatives of both factions in New York, Smith of New Jersey, Guffey, of Pennsylvania, and others from Connecticut and possibly from othes New England states and from West Virginia.

Something big is expected to result from these conferences, and in the meantime the hearts of Mr. Gorman's Maryland admirers are going pit-a-pat at a tumultuous rate. It is pleasing to them to see that their chief is still recognized as a leader in the national councils of his party, and to reflect that he will at least have an influential part in selecting the nominee. They considered it by no means an impossibility that Mr. Gorman himself may walk away with the prize. Just suppose he should and should also be elected, where would the faithful be then? It makes the political mouth water to think of it. Umumph!

The New York Tribune prints a story from its Washington correspondent stating that "Arthur Pue Gorman and Chas. A. Towne" is the latest Democratic ticket suggested at the Capital, and intimates that the Maryland politician is playing a shrewd game with a view of securing Mr. Towne's influence with the Bryan element of the party. In addition to this, it is said by Mr. Gorman's Maryland friends that should Mr. William R. Hearst find it impossible to secure the nomination for himself he would prefer Mr. Gorman to any other man. As Mr. Gorman is already known to be acceptable to Wall Street, it is reasoned, therefore, that he could play both ends against the middle and capture everything in sight. In this connection it has been suggested that the man who can combine Wall Street and the Bryanites deserves to be President.

MARRIED

BITTNER—DURST.—At the home of Asa Durst, in District No. 3, on May 8th, 1904, by Rev. H. M. Gelnett, Mr. Harvey Bittner and Miss Annie Durst.

COL. PEARRE NOMINATED BY ACCLAMATION

At the Congressional Convention Held at Rockville Tuesday.

RECORD IN CONGRESS PLEASING

To His Constituents — Resolutions Adopted Endorsing His Course in the Lower House and Sympathy Extended In His Illness.

ROCKVILLE, Md., May 10.—Representative George A. Pearre was renominated by acclamation by the sixth district congressional convention which met in the Opera house here today. Messrs. Thomas C. Noyes of Montgomery county and Reno S. Harp of Frederick county were unanimously chosen to represent the district at the national convention.

The proceedings were harmonious throughout, and the mention of the names of President Roosevelt and Col. Pearre aroused enthusiasm.

The gathering was called to order by Mr. Gist Blair, executive member of the state central committee for this county. Mr. Charles D. Waggaman of Washington county was chosen temporary chairman and Mr. George W. Crum of Frederick county secretary. Vice presidents were selected as follows, one being from each county of the district: Allegany county, William J. Feaga; Frederick county, Geo. D. Dean; Garrett county, U. G. Palmer; Montgomery county, Willis B. Burdette; Washington county, Samuel C. Canode. These officers were afterward made permanent.

The committee on resolutions was composed of David A. Robb, Allegany county; James W. Smith, Frederick county; U. G. Palmer, Garrett county; Carey Kingdon, Montgomery county, and Lancelot Jacques, Washington county.

The following composed the committee on credentials: Allegany county, John J. Stump; Frederick county, D. M. Devilbliss; Garrett county, Herbert Flowers; Montgomery county, Henry L. Black; Washington county, Leander Kuhn.

Resolutions were adopted indorsing the course in Congress of Representative Pearre, whose faithfulness to duty has not only engaged all his energies, but impaired his health. "We extend to him our sympathy and earnestly hope that he will be speedily restored to health." The resolutions refer to the work of Col. Pearre in promoting the postal service of the District and in guarding the interests of those engaged therein.

His devotion to the interests of the old soldiers is also that his uniform courtesy and attention to all demands made upon him have endeared him in an unusual degree to all the people of the district.

The course of Senator McComas in the United States Senate is also heartily indorsed and the delegates to the state convention are urged to vote for his election as a delegate to the national convention. The wise, progressive, patriotic and business-like administration of President Roosevelt is indorsed.

The resolutions declare that the President has met great responsibilities of his office upon the high level of national duty and honor. The Democratic legislature of Maryland is condemned for its unwarranted assault upon the suffrages of the people of this state.

Col. A. G. Sturgiss, of Oakland, was nominated as the elector from this District.

HEAVIEST ENGINE IN THE WORLD

Being Built for Freight Work On the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

The Schenectady plant of the American Locomotive Works has under way the building of the largest locomotive in the world. It is to be the Mallet articulated type, will weight 465,000 pounds when completed for freight work on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad. The machine will be of the tandem compound style, with a peculiar arrangement of drive wheels and cylinders. It is being built as an experiment, and is intended for use as a helper on the mountain divisions of the road. The heaviest engine now in use on the Baltimore and Ohio weighs 162½ tons.

The new locomotive will have 320,000 pounds on the drivers, a tender weighing 143,000 pounds with coal capacity of 13 tons and a water capacity of 7,000 gallons. The wheel base is to be 30½ feet, the traction power 70,000 pounds, and on a perfectly level track the engine is expected to haul over 10,000 tons.

FIVE NEW SCHOOL HOUSES WILL BE BUILT

They Will Be Located In Districts Nos. 3. 4. 6. 7 and 8.

MT. LAKE PARK WILL GET ONE.

The Public Schools Will Open on September 12th for a Term of Seven and one-half Months.—Trustees Appointed.

The Board of School Commissioners for Garrett county met and reorganized last Friday by the election of Mr. Moses R. Hamill as its president. Mr. Ed. A. Browning, of Oakland, was re-elected to the position of secretary, treasurer and county superintendent. The recently enacted school law abolished the office of examiner and created in its stead that of county superintendent.

The board is composed as it has been for several years past, the members being Messrs. M. R. Hamill, of Oakland; C. E. Ellithorp, of Bittinger, and Geo. E. Bishoff, of Hoyes.

After the organization had been effected the board revised the list of school trustees and where vacancies in any of the boards existed they were filled by appointment. The trustees for Oakland consist of Messrs. Daniel Hinebaugh, John W. Hart and Jos. E. Harned

Among other important business transacted by the board was its decision to erect during the coming summer five new school houses as follows: Engles, in District No. 3; Chestnut Grove, in District No. 4; Pine Swamp, in District No. 6; Mt. Lake Park, in District No. 7, and Red Gate, in District No. 8. These buildings with the single exception of Mt. Lake Park, will be one-story, one-room structures. The Mt. Lake Park building will consist of two rooms and will be modeled after the building recently erected at Accident.

The Legislature, at its recent session, made it obligatory upon the school officials to operate the schools within the county for a period of not less than seven and one-half months and to pay the teachers a minimum salary of two hundred dollars. This being the case the board decided to open the schools on September 12th.

It was also decided that the County Institute should be held in Oakland beginning September 26th and extending until the 30th.

AGRICULTURISTS TO SPEAK.

At Various Points in Garrett County Next Week.

Arrangements have been completed whereby two of the foremost agriculturists of Maryland will address the farmers of Garrett county at the following points on the dates named:

Swanton, in May's Hall, May 16th, at 7.30 o'clock.

Hoyes school house May 17th, at 3 o'clock.

Thayerville school house, May 18th at 2 o'clock.

Cherry Creek school house, May 16th, at 2 o'clock.

Mosser House, May 20th, at 10 o'clock.

Deer Park Hall, May 20th, at 7 o'clock.

Oakland, Naylor's Hall, May 21st, at 10 and 1 o'clock.

The speaking will begin promptly at the hour named.

The speakers will be Prof. C. F. Austin, Horticulturist of the Maryland Agricultural College, and Mr. J. P. Ager, a prominent farmer and Master of the Maryland State Grange. The subject to be discussed by these gentlemen will be general farming, dairying and farmers' organizations.

The ladies are especially invited to attend.

Election Supervisors Organize.

The Board of Election Supervisors composed of Messrs. Charles M. Miller, of Swanton, and Edmund Jamison and Edward E. Sollars, of Oakland, met and organized yesterday by the election of Mr. Jamison president and Charles A. Deffinbaugh, clerk. The attorney will be chosen at a later meeting. Mr. William R. Offutt, the Board's present legal adviser, will probably succeed himself.

Mrs. Warnick Dead.

Last Friday at noon Mrs. Warnick died at her home in Garrett county, eight miles west of Lonaconing. The funeral took place Sunday afternoon from the home where she died. Interment in the graveyard on the home place.

TWO RURAL ROUTES ESTABLISHED

Both Will Be Served from the Oakland Postoffice.

Special Agent Plummer, of the Rural Route service, was in this section several days last week, laying off two rural routes for the postal service.

Route No. 1 will run from Oakland via William White's to Sunnyside and Brookside and return via Yough Bridge by Kildow's. On this route 105 houses will be served with a population of 446.

Route No. 2 will cover in part the same territory as that of route No. 1, except that it will follow the Aurora Road, touching at Gortner, Sunnyside and thence to the Red House and Eglon, returning via the Beckman settlement. One hundred and ten families will be served with a population of 467.

By the establishment of these routes position are open to a carrier on each, at a salary of $60 per month. Those who contemplate applying for the positions can obtain from Postmaster Jarboe the requisite blanks and information.

DECORATION DAY AT OAKLAND.

The Annual Decoration of the Graves of Our Honored Dead.

Crook Post No. 35, G. A. R., of Oakland, desire that there be a general turnout of the citizens, public school children, all the organized bodies of the town and the band, and visitors from the surrounding country are also cordially invited to participate with the Post on Memorial Day, Monday, May 30th, in decorating the graves of the noble dead who have answered the last roll call and are now resting in our cemeteries. An old comrade will deliver an address.

Crook Post will assemble at Sturgiss' Hall at 10.30 a. m. and proceed to the cemetery where the beautiful ritual of the order will be carried out.

Donations of flowers will be thankfully received and can be left at Sturgiss' drug store.

By order of the Post.

The Man Among Them

By IRVINE PARDEE

...Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure...

It was a cold winter in school district No. 4, township of Ingham, county of Hillsdale, but they were making it pretty warm for the schoolma'am just the same. Miss Lee had come from a city fifty miles away, bringing the very best recommendations, and had taken hold of the school to the satisfaction of everybody. The trouble was that she was twenty years old and good looking. She could not help being good looking any more than a dozen farmer girls in the district could help their plain faces, but scarcely a fortnight had passed when mothers and daughters were sneering and backbiting.

No homely woman, be she married or single, can help being jealous of a handsome one. In the society of a city the homely one has the sense to conceal her feelings, but in the country she attends a quilting bee on purpose to speak her mind. If the widowers, bachelors and young men had stood aloof there would have been no gossip or hard feelings, but that was just what they wouldn't do. They admired, praised and pestered, and, though not encouraged in the slightest by the little schoolma'am, they got her into a peck of trouble.

The thing may be said to have started with Uncle Ben Driggs, chairman of the school committee. He was a widower, sixty years old, and had been courting the Widow Hastings, five years his junior, but what does he do but offer the schoolma'am his calloused hand and aged heart before she had hardly got the school organized.

She promptly refused him, but the Widow Hastings was her enemy from that time on, and Uncle Ben heard her gossiped about without coming to her defense. In the course of six weeks Miss Lee had turned down another widower and two young men and thus made more enemies. Several engagements were in danger of being broken because Jim, Joe or John would insist that the teacher was the daisiest daisy that ever called up a class in geography. The girl knew that she was making enemies and being slurred and slandered, but as it was not her fault and she had no remedy she maintained silence. This subjected her to criticism again. As Hannah Jones remarked at Mrs. Doolittle's quilting bee:

"If she isn't trying her best to capture a man of some sort, why don't she come right out and say she wouldn't marry the best one that ever wore boots, same as I do? I tell you she is sly and deceitful, and she'll separate more'n one lovin' couple before she gets through with it."

Before New Year's came there was only one marriageable man for four miles around who hadn't offered himself at least once. That was Abner Joy, a man of thirty, who had a farm of his own and a sister for a housekeeper. He had admired, but so secretly and modestly that Miss Lee had not suspected. He looked upon her as a superior being who could not be approached by such as he.

No one mistrusted his feelings until one evening when there was a paring bee at Uncle David Saunders'. The gathering included over forty people, old and young, and, as it was Miss Lee's week to board at the Saunders house, she ought to have been there. She was not, however, and, though the night had come on with a storm, nobody worried about the schoolma'am, not even Abner. When he failed to find her there he argued that she had stopped at a nearer place. In the gathering were several girls and women with spiteful tongues and several young and old men who wanted to "get even," and so after an hour or two, when Miss Lee's name came up, innuendo was busy in a moment. It was noticed that Abner Joy turned red and white and hitched uneasily, but it was quite ten minutes before he stood up and said:

"I see that Miss Lee is not present here this evening. Does any one know why?"

"She's probably hunting for a man," replied one of the girls, with a giggle, while Joe Allbright led the haw-hawing among the young men.

"Yes, she may be," said Abner as he looked around, with a dangerous gleam in his eyes, "but will Joe Allbright, Tom Smart and William Hall step outdoors with me for a moment?"

They followed him out, wondering what was up, but they were not long left in doubt. He turned upon them and gave the whole three a beautiful drubbing before they hardly knew that a fight was on. Then he called out Uncle Danforth, old bachelor, both of whom had been turned down, and, shaking his fist under their noses, he said:

"Mind you, this talk about Miss Lee has got to stop. The next man who even sneers at her has got to settle for it with me."

That didn't complete his work, however. He entered the house and said to the women:

"A pretty pack of wolves you are! You are gossiping about a woman whose shoes you are not fit to tie. It's gossip, slander and lies, and every one of you knows it, and I tell you I'll not stand any more of it. I can't roll you in the snowdrifts, because you are women, but I can and will hold your men folks responsible."

Half an hour later he was inquiring at Taylor's if Miss Lee was there, and again he stopped at Riker's. But he did not find her until he drove up to the schoolhouse. She sat there alone with her things on, and the open stove door was her candle. She had felt too weak and discouraged to face the storm, and didn't much care whether any one came for her or not.

"Miss Lee, I've come to take you home for the night," said Abner, as he entered the building.

"But why do you come?" she asked in surprise.

"Because I have constituted myself your champion. There won't be any more gossip. I'm ashamed of the people, but you'll see a change tomorrow."

"Wh—what have you done?" she asked between her sobs.

"Licked three or four men, promised to lick three or four more and told a dozen women what I thought about them," he laconically replied.

"But you'll—you'll"—

"Ask you to marry me? No, I won't—I'll be hanged if I do! Come along with me, and we'll pick up Sister Sarah at Saunders'."

"And you won't—won't"—

"Talk love? Not a word. I know you are ready to throw up the school and go back home, but don't give up. I've got my fists toughened up and want to use 'em often."

And when the summer days came and she closed her school with kind words from all she grasped the hand of Abner Joy and said:

"Abner, I have met a man down here—just one—and I hate to say goodby to him."

"Then why don't you come back and let him do some more fighting for you?" he asked.

"I—I guess I will, if you—you want me to," she replied as she drove away, and three months later she did.

Two Ways of Looking at It.

After the battle of Gettysburg a member of the sanitary commission ran across in the country some miles from the town a Dutch farmer who said he had never seen soldiers. "And why haven't you seen them?" the question was put. "Why didn't you get your gun, go into town and help drive them out?"

"Why," said the farmer, "a feller might 'a' got hit."

A woman who lived in a little house close to the battlefield viewed the danger in a different spirit.

She was a red cheeked, wholesome young body who looked well after the ways of her household. She was asked if she felt afraid when the shells flew.

"Well, no," she replied. "You see, I was busy baking bread for the soldiers, and I had my dough raising. The neighbors ran into the cellars, but of course I couldn't leave my bread. When the first shell burst into the window and tore into the room an officer came in and said to me, 'You better get out of this,' but I told him I couldn't leave my bread. I kneaded the dough until the third shell crashed into the room; then I went down cellar. But first I put my bread safe into the oven."

Incense In Japan.

Japan is a land of incense. Mr. Lafcadio Hearn has told us in his delightful way about the incense of the temples. He says: "It makes one element of the faint but complex and never to be forgotten odor of the far east. It haunts the dwelling house not less than the temple, the home of the peasant not less than the yashiki of the prince. Shinto shrines, indeed, are free from incense being an abomination to the [illegible] gods, but wherever Buddhism [illegible] there is incense. In every house containing a Buddhist shrine or Buddhist tablets incense is burned at certain times, and in even the rudest country solitudes you will find incense smoldering before wayside images—little stone figures of Fudo, Jizo or Kwannon."

The costlier kinds of incense, instead of in rods, come in the form either of pastilles, wafers and lozenges or loose powder, and thus take the place of the western lady's sachet.

Odors of Cities.

A European writer has discovered that each city has its own peculiar odor. Paris is pervaded by a faint odor of charcoal. London smells of soot. The aroma of garlic greets the new arrival at Calais. Moscow has a perfume of its own, cranberries of peculiar pungency. St. Petersburg suggests old leather boots.

OVER THE HILL TO THE POOR-HOUSE

By Will Carleton

WILL CARLETON, the popular poet, lecturer and editor, was born in Hudson, Mich., in 1845 and now resides in Brooklyn, N. Y. After his graduation from Hillsdale college he did newspaper work for a time in Hillsdale, Detroit and Chicago. Mr. Carleton has given lectures and readings throughout the United States, and also in Great Britain and Europe, and is now editor of a magazine published in Brooklyn.

OVER the hill to the poor-house I'm trudgin' my weary way—
I, a woman of seventy, and only a trifle gray—
I, who am smart an' chipper, for all the years I've told,
As many another woman that's only half as old.

Over the hill to the poor-house—I can't quite make it clear!
Over the hill to the poor-house—it seems so horrid queer!
Many a step I've taken a-toiling to and fro,
But this is a sort of journey I never thought to go.

What is the use of heapin' on me a pauper's shame?
Am I lazy or crazy? Am I blind or lame?
True, I am not so supple, nor yet so awful stout;
But charity ain't no favor, if one can live without.

I am willin' and anxious an' ready any day
To work for a decent livin', an' pay my honest way;
For I can earn my victuals, an' more too, I'll be bound,
If anybody only is willin' to have me round.

Once I was young an' han'some—I was, upon my soul—
Once my cheeks were roses, my eyes as black as coal;
And I can't remember, in them days, of hearin' people say,
For any kind of reason, that I was in their way.

'Taint no use o' boastin', or talkin' over-free,
But many a house an' home was open then to me;
Many a han'some offer I had from likely men,
And nobody ever hinted that I was a burden then.

And when to John I was married, sure he was good and smart,
But he and all the neighbors would own I done my part;
For life was all before me, an' I was young an' strong,
And I worked the best that I could in tryin' to get along

And so we worked together: and life was hard, but gay,
With now and then a baby for to cheer us on our way;
Till we had half a dozen, an' all growed clean an' neat,
An' went to school like others, an' had enough to eat.

So we worked for the childr'n, and raised 'em every one,
Worked for 'em summer and winter, just as we ought to 've done;
Only, perhaps, we humored 'em, which some good folks condemn—
But every couple's childr'n's a heap the best to them.

Strange how much we think of our blessed little ones!
I'd have died for my daughters, I'd have died for my sons;
And God he made that rule of love; but when we're old and gray,
I've noticed it sometimes somehow fails to work the other way.

Strange, another thing: when our boys an' girls was grown,
And when, exceptin' Charley, they'd left us there alone;
When John he nearer an' nearer come, an' dearer seemed to be,
The Lord of Hosts he come one day, an' took him away from me.

Still I was bound to struggle, an' never to cringe or fall—
Still I worked for Charley, for Charley was now my all;
And Charley was pretty good to me, with scarce a word or frown,
Till at last he went a-courtin', and brought a wife from town.

She was somewhat dressy, an' hadn't a pleasant smile—
She was quite conceity, and carried a heap o' style;
But if ever I tried to be friends, I did with her, I know;
But she was hard and proud, an' I couldn't make it go.

She had an edication, an' that was good for her;
But when she twitted me on mine, 'twas carryin' things too fur;
An' I told her once, 'fore company (an' it almost made her sick),
That I never swallowed a grammar, or 'et a 'rithmetic.

So 'twas only a few days before the thing was done—
They was a family of themselves, and I another one;
And a very little cottage one family will do,
But I never have seen a house that was big enough for two.

An' I never could speak to suit her, never could please her eye,
An' it made me independent, an' then I didn't try;
But I was terribly staggered, an' felt it like a blow,
When Charley turn'd agin me, an' told me I could go.

I went to live with Susan, but Susan's house was small,
And she was always a-hintin' how snug it was for us all;
And what with her husband's sisters, and what with childr'n three,
'Twas easy to discover that there wasn't room for me.

An' then I went to Thomas, the oldest son I've got,
For Thomas's buildings 'd cover the half of an acre lot;
But all the childr'n was on me—I couldn't stand their sauce—
And Thomas said I needn't think I was comin' there to boss.

An' then I wrote to Rebecca, my girl who lives out West,
And to Isaac, not far from her—some twenty miles at best;
And one of 'em said 'twas too warm there for any one so old,
And t'other had an opinion the climate was too cold.

So they have shirked and slighted me, an' shifted me about—
So they have well-nigh soured me, an' wore my old heart out;
But still I've borne up pretty well, an' wasn't much put down,
Till Charley went to the poor-master, an' put me on the town.

Over the hill to the poor-house—my childr'n dear, good-bye!
Many a night I've watched you when only God was nigh;
And God 'll judge between us; but I will always pray
That you shall never suffer the half I do to-day.

DEATH, THE LEVELER

By James Shirley

JAMES SHIRLEY, dramatist and poet, was one of the most popular of English writers of the seventeenth century. He was born in London in 1596 and died there in 1666, during the "great fire," which caused the death of the aged writer. Most of Shirley's works, including his forty plays, are now forgotten, but the poem given below, which is said to have "chilled the heart" of Oliver Cromwell, will probably live as long as the English language.

THE glories of our birth and state
Are shadows, not substantial things;
There is no armor against fate—
Death lays his icy hand on kings:
Scepter and crown
Must tumble down,
And in the dust be equal made
With the poor crooked scythe and spade.

Some men with swords may reap the field,
And plant fresh laurels where they kill;
But their strong nerves at last must yield;
They tame but one another still:
Early or late
They stoop to fate,
And must give up their murmuring breath,
When they, pale captives, creep to death.

The garlands wither on your brow—
Then boast no more your mighty deeds;
Upon death's purple altar, now
See, where the victor-victim bleeds.
All heads must come
To the cold tomb—
Only the actions of the just Smell sweet, and blossom in the dust.

The Prodigal Son

The parable of the Prodigal Son was one of three spoken in answer to the Pharisaical murmuring against Jesus' familiarity with publicans and sinners. With cumulative power they set forth the Savior's acknowledged mission in which he and all heaven delighted: namely, the recovery of the lost.

If a woman loses a coin, part of her dowry, does she despise it because it is lost, because mayhap it is trampled in the mire somewhere, or is corroded by exposure? Not a bit of it! On the contrary, her heart is set upon recovery. She lights her hand-lamp and thrusts it into every recess, and, as a last resort, she sweeps the floor, and passes the litter through her hands.

When the coin is found her delight bears some proportion to the intrinsic value of the coin and to the length and arduousness of the search. So the apostate sons of Abraham are still dear to God; the publicans, too, who unpatriotically make merchandise out of Israel's servitude and fallen state.

It is the sorry plight, the dangerous predicament of the lost sheep, which touches the faithful shepherd's heart to pity. It is difficult for us to appreciate the strong bond which maintains between the keeper and his flock. In this instance the true shepherd, who is no mere hireling, sees in imagination his dear lost sheep on the mountain, cut by stones, lacerated by thorns, until its snowy fleece is dyed in its own blood. Its piteous bleating haunts his very dreams. He knows that most timid and defenseless of domestic animals will be the easy prey of some ravening beast.

The shepherd heart asserts itself. Out into night and danger he goes.

The sheep is found, and the joy is proportionate to the strength of the shepherd's attachment, the perils of the search, and the value of the sheep.

So each sinner and publican is still one of the favored flock, only astray, imperiled. To search, find, and restore such a one is a divine work, in which angels would fain engage—in the consummation of which they are at least permitted to rejoice.

See the progression. It is from the inanimate to the animate—from the animate to the human. A son in a noble and wealthy family, chafing under parental restraint, or having exhausted local means of dissipation, and sighing for fresh fields of voluptuous conquest, inconsiderately requests an ante-mortem division of the estate. The indulgent father makes it. Perhaps he has no recourse; parental authority is at an end. The son's heart is callous to the appeal of love; sin has indurated him. The guileless youth, the father's pride and joy, has grown the gruff, defiant rebel. The amenities of home are insufferable.

In the shortest time possible the infatuated youth tucked the sparkling gems and golden bars, his patrimony in portable form, easily convertible into coin of any country, in the pockets of a money-belt, and, strapping it about his person, he went abroad—perhaps without even a ceremonious farewell.

He wasted his substance. He tossed it in the air (literally) as the farmer does his wheat when he will separate it from the chaff. He lived dissolutely. He was insalvable (literally) while his infatuation lasted. The coincidence of the devoured (literally) patrimony and the universal and extreme famine puts a pathetic touch to the sorry plight of the dissolute spendthrift. He was left behind (literally) in the race. He never, in spite of his infatuated effort and extravagance, so much as reached the glittering goal of his wanton ambition. The gay reveling party that kept him company while his means held out, swept past him thanklessly and disdainfully when his once plethoric purse was at list empty. He awoke as from a dream—alone! penniless!

With the pertinacity of despair he glued (literally) himself to a foreign land-owner, whome in his prosperity he would have dubbed a "Gentile dog"—with whome he would have had no intercourse, much less receive a favor from him. In his dispair he cleaves to the foreigner to tenaciously that he can not be shaken off. A superlatively disgusting and degrading task is given him—offensive to all the senses, repugnant to all the ideas of ceremonial cleanliness instilled in mind from boyhood. So sharp were the pangs of hunger that he kept coveting the swine their feed—the locust pods he threw down before them. Humiliation, sorrow, despair are compressed in the five words "No man gave unto him!" At last the hypnotic spell of sin is broken. Self-consciousness, self-control are regained. Memory paints the ancestral home. The flown blessing brightens. What abundance, comfort, care, there extends to the most abject menial! The veriest scullion has such a superabundance that he can pose as a benefactor before the tramp.

"I will!" What a battle-royal has preceded and made possible those talismanic words! Fear, shame, pride, have been met and conquered. "I have sinned" is the correlate of "I will arise." Confession absolute and frank, without apology or plea in abatement, shall be made. The penalty and consequences of apostasy, disinheritance, servitude instead of sonship, shall be assumed without a syllable of complaint.

It is done. But how different the sequel from that which the prodigal anticipated! He is met long before he can reach the door where he expected to make his confession and prefer his modest request. The father's compassion, how admirable! Kiss of reconciliation, how sweet! The first robe, richly dyed and embroidered, is cast about the bare and sunburnt shoulders. The signet of rank is placed upon the wan finger. Bare feet, mark of servitude, are shod with the sandals of a free man. Now follows the joyous banquet.

The murmuring Pharisees can not but see themselves protrayed in the elder son, with his ill-formed, ill-natured protest. The true Messiah had come to heal the sick, raise the dead, find the lost. Will the hale, the unstrayed, those who do not need His kindly offices, begrudge them to their brothers, whose plight is so pitable and desperate? The climax is reached, the plea unanswerable.

The Teacher's Lantern

The primary uses of the Prodigal Son must not be lost sight of in its evangelical and modern applications. By it Jesus sought to justify His kindly and familiar bearing toward publicans and sinners, at which the Pharisees and scribes were so outraged. He showed the veriest renegade of Israel as still the object of Divine compassion, his restoration possible—a thing He earnestly sought.

In its universal, gospel application this "pearl of parables" pictures sin as a revolt against a beneficent Heavenly Father, whose law is right and just and good.

Here is mirrowed the freedom of the will. The son has his own way. He is not let or hindered, except by the pleadings of love and its faithful warnings.

The folly of sin has no more startling exemplification. True as startling; drawn to life! How swift the "descensus Averno!" How soon the fool and his money are parted! How irrevocable the last estate! Remediless! In the mire with swine!

Who shall ever number the sinners to whom this parable has been the "open sesame" to a new life? Blessed be the day in which it was spoken! "I will arise!" "Father, I have sinned!" The Heavenly Father meets the returning prodigal in the way.

Lost!" "Dead!" Here is no minifying of the prodigal's fallen state. Lost to God; lost to heaven; dead in trespasses and sins!

The far country is not a matter of geography. It is expressive of estrangement, of alienation from God.

The prodigal's theology was bad, though it showed well the strength of his compunction. It would be impossible for him to ever be his father's hired servant. He is son or nothing.

"Sinned heaven-high and in thy sight." Here the penitent is strictly orthodox. The turpitude of sin consists in this, that it is done aginst God. Judah's penitent king knew this when he cried, "Aginst Thee only, have I sinned!" With this truth Joseph armed himself when he cried, "How can I commit this sin aginst my God?"

Solomon is the example for all time of the unsatisfying nature of sin. He drank every cup of joy, but hear his dying protestation of the sensuous world to satisfy an immortal: "Vanities all is vanity!"

Two cent—Red, subject Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States at the time of the purchase. Three cent—Purple, subject, James Monroe, special ambassador to France in the matter of purchase, who with Livingstone closed the negotiations. Five cent—Blue, subject, William McKinley, who as president of the United States, approved the acts of Congress officially connecting the U. S. government with the commemorative exposition. These series of stamps are not issued in book form.

"It Is the Getting Together That Does Good"

By President ELIOT of Harvard University

THE present method in great industries is a highly cumbersome method. It is the capitalist against the laborer and the laborer against the capitalist, EACH TRYING SOMEHOW TO GET THE BETTER OF THE OTHER. While some good has been done by this kind of fighting—we have to admit that some good has been done by fighting in this world—on the whole it is a very stupid way of making progress. The co-operative way is immeasurably better in every field of human activity. IT IS THE GETTING TOGETHER THAT DOES GOOD. It is the application in industry of the ordinary human motives which lead to good work and happy work that we are after, that we ought to see; a method in industry which will enable the ordinary human motive to contribute to bringing about good work.

One of the ordinary human motives is to get more pay. It is a wholesome motive on the whole. The labor union tries to get more pay by a process of COME BACK.

THE AMOUNT OF SAVING WHICH CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED IN ALL OUR INDUSTRIES SIMPLY BY INDUCING THE WORKER TO DO HIS OR HER LEVEL BEST FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT IS SIMPLY INCOMPUTABLE. WE CANNOT CALCULATE IT, IT IS SO GREAT.

I read in the Journal of the Society of Mechanical Engineers a singular story, the statement of a fact, the description of an experiment. The engineer of a locomotive always did the same work with his engine every month; he hauled so many loads of freight, and the work of one month compared the same with the work of another month; therefore the expense of that work computed compared the same one month with another.

And the engineer said to his two firemen: "Now, suppose we try an experiment for one month. Suppose you fire this engine as if you paid for the coal instead of the company's paying for it." You know there is a great deal of intelligence and skill in heating a boiler, and there has got to be a great deal of good will about it to get the best work out of the boiler with the least expenditure of fuel.

THESE TWO FIREMEN AGREED TO TRY IT FOR ONE MONTH, AND THE SAVING OF COAL WAS MORE THAN FOUR TIMES THE WAGES OF BOTH FIREMEN TOGETHER.

That illustrates what can be brought about in almost all industries by inducing the people to work as if it was THEIR shop all the time; as if they had a DIRECT, keen interest in the success of the undertaking; as if YOU were paying for the coal and not the company! You see, these two firemen could have had double the wages and yet the profit to the railroad would have been more than as much more, simply from the difference of SPIRIT and good will in their work.

"The Strike Is Hell"

By Bishop SPALDING of Peoria, Ill.

I WOULD say, as Sherman said of war, that the strike is HELL. Men who have been out on strike go back to work INJURED MORALLY and not the same men. The children of strikers have been taught to taunt other children of other workmen.

The condition between capital and labor is not improving, although I believe the anthracite coal strike commission accomplished good results. The present labor troubles in Colorado, San Francisco and Chicago are BLOCKS to bettering the general condition of the country.

IT IS BECOMING MORE AND MORE MANIFEST THAT CAPITAL AND LABOR ARE INTERDEPENDENT ON EACH OTHER.

I don't think there is in America any class of employers who DELIBERATELY do their men wrong. I believe the American people to be a people of good will toward labor and the distressed. I believe the people are free from anarchistic ideas and that the tendency to socialism is only in a minor way. I regard a PERMANENT tribunal of greater value than one created for EACH case of dispute.

I do not believe in sympathetic strikes. The strike is the one weapon of labor organizations, and to deny that right would be to deny the right to organize, but the great object sought is to bring about PEACEFUL SETTLEMENTS WITHOUT STRIKES.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS HAVE ACCOMPLISHED MUCH GOOD.

Russia and Japan Threaten The Peace of the World

By Rev. W. MONTAGUE GREER of New York

THE scandal is not so much that Japan and Russia are at death grips, but that two such nations should be in existence. These nations stand for the unfinished business of the church, and their struggle is threatening the peace of the world. All the nations are watching and waiting—and for what? To secure an "open door"—for the religion of Christ? Oh, no! Preparing for the ultimate partition of China. We are too ready to install the god Mammon to take the place of the oriental gods, where the cross should have been erected long ago.

The Pastor of the Future

By Professor ALBION W. SMALL, University of Chicago

THE pastor of the future will not be merely a preacher. HE WILL BE A SOCIAL WORKER. The most of his work will not be done on Sunday. His WEEKDAYS will be busy as his Sundays. The work of the ministers will be more like the work now being done by Jane Addams and Professor Graham Taylor in the social settlements. Perhaps the minister is destined to become the MIDDLEMAN between the employer and the employed.

COLONEL MONROE

The Lincolnville Philosopher Asserts That It Is Possible to Place a First Class Library In Every American Home For Less Than a Billion

By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

Copyright, 1903, by Frederick Upham Adams

"THAT was a mighty interesting piece you wrote recently," said Judge Sawyer, addressing Colonel Monroe. "You said it was possible by the expenditure of less than a billion dollars to furnish each of the 15,000,000 American voters with a library consisting of 150 volumes. You declared that these books would compare favorably with the best specimens of the printer's art. In brief, you claimed that at an expense of $67 the government could print, bind and distribute 150 high grade books. That was your statement, was it not?"

"That was what I said," admitted Colonel Monroe. "Deducting the average expense of distribution, these books would cost about 40 cents apiece. I agreed to supply as good books as commonly retail for $4 a volume. In other words, the use of this billion would give each American family as good a collection of books as can now be purchased for $600. I thought this would be a more practical scheme than to spend an equal amount of money in library buildings, or, for that matter, for any purpose which can be named."

"If you could keep your promise it would be the grandest investment ever made in the history of the world," declared Judge Sawyer, "but I am afraid your forty cent books would not conform to a very high standard of mechanical or artistic excellence. But let us hear your plan."

"We are all agreed, I believe," said Colonel Monroe, "that it is the books a man owns and which are ever within the reach of his family that do the most good. The mere presence of bound volumes inspires a longing for knowledge. The public library is all very well in its place, but the educated, progressive, orderly and prosperous community is the one in which its citizens read their own books at their own hearth sides. I said that if I had a billion dollars I would turn it over to the conscience fund of the general government, with a recommendation that it be expended for books and in their free distribution. I have figured on 15,000,000 sets of 150 books each. That is a lot of books, judge, I will admit that, but one can do wonders with a billion dollars. It does not go so very far in a war which involves the destruction of life and property, but I shall try to convince you that it would work the marvels of magic when devoted to so grand a purpose as the production of books. You are suspicious about the quality of the materials and workmanship in my proposed 'forty cent books.' Let me show you something. Here is a book I recently purchased while in New York. Look it over carefully."

Colonel Monroe handed to the judge a cloth bound copy of "Ivanhoe." Judge Sawyer examined it critically. It was printed on fairly good paper, the type was clear and the impressions excellent. There were numerous illustrations on a better grade of paper. The binding was plain, but strong and serviceable. The judge remarked that it looked like a book which might have been bought at a special sale for a dollar.

"I am free to admit, however," he said as he turned over the pages, "that it looks as well as many books for which I have paid $1.50 or $2 each. How much did you pay for this one, colonel?"

"Twenty-five cents," was the answer. "I bought a set of six of them for a dollar and a half."

"Then they were sold at a loss," declared the astounded judge.

"They were not sold at a loss," returned Colonel Monroe. "I made an investigation and found that my 25 cents paid three distinct profits—the manufacturer made a profit, the jobber took out his commission, and the retailer was glad I called. The first cost of that book turned out in lots of 100,000 did not exceed 11 cents a copy."

"I will not dispute you, but it does not seem possible," said Judge Sawyer. "What justification is there for charging $1.50 or $2 for the ordinary work of fiction, biography or travels?"

"The same justification that there is for the price of all commodities produced on a petty scale and which depend for their start on pushing and advertising," replied the other. "The average book falls far short of a circulation of a thousand. Not one in a thousand ever reaches a sale of 10,000, and those which reach six figures are so rare that a well informed person can speedily name them. The cost of composition, editing and of a dozen other items is the same, be the edition a hundred or a million. But the huge expense item in books of limited circulation is that of advertising. It costs much more to sell a book than it does to produce it. The same is true of innumerable other articles of necessity and luxury. There are clerks and typewriters to be paid, the salaries and traveling expenses of salesmen, the fees of lawyers who draw contracts, royalties to authors, commissions to jobbers and scores of other items which are all included in your dollar and a half. The man who printed the book you have in your hand had to meet most of these expenses, but he printed 100,000 instead of 1,000. You therefore can buy it for a quarter instead of six times that sum.

"The 11 cents actually represented in that book is divided among the items of paper, labor, cloth, ink, glue and thread—about in the order named," continued Colonel Monroe. "The paper is controlled by a trust, which extorts enormous profits. The same is true of the ink, glue and thread and partly true of the cloth. It is safe to assume that 3 cents of the 11 stands as the profit of these corporations. The labor item is too high, not on account of the wages paid, but because of that vast difference in the labor cost of articles produced in small or large quantities. You must bear in mind, judge, that with our billion we are going to produce these books in editions running into the millions. I have no doubt but that under the proper conditions the book you hold can be produced and distributed for 6 or 7 cents a copy."

"I must admit that you are within the bounds of reason," remarked Judge Sawyer, "but the proposition is an astounding one. I do not think I ever heard of a better illustration of the waste incidental to the production of things on a small scale."

"It may seem like a waste of time to consider the expenditure of a billion of dollars for books," reflected Colonel Monroe, "but it is a fair suggestion of the method which is certain to prevail in the near future. Everything will be done on a huge scale—everything pertaining to production. When pins were made by hand the housewife scoffed at the prophet who asserted that a time would come when 500 perfect pins could be purchased for a penny.

"If the government or an individual were to undertake the expenditure of a billion of dollars in the production of books a far different course would be followed from that pursued by the publishers of today. The average publisher does not own a pound of type or a printing press. He contracts for everything and pays profits on everything. But let us see how the government would go about the task, assuming, of course, that honest and capable men were at the head of affairs. It has command of a thousand million of dollars, no more than the private fortune of one of its citizens. It begins by purchasing spruce or other forests from which to manufacture pulp for its paper. Then it erects its paper mills and installs the wonderful modern machinery for that purpose. Suppose we locate these mills in northern New York. Our vast printing plant must be contiguous to a great city for obvious reasons. We will place it near New York. Both of these plants will be of a magnitude which will dwarf any existing establishments and will cost millions of dollars, but the item will be a small one when contrasted with the total of our capital. The officials of the government would not be so foolish as to pay existing freight rates between the paper mills and the printing plant. It would probably be economy to construct and operate a railroad line connecting the two. The cost of such a road would not exceed $10,000,000. I am told that paper mills of the required capacity could be erected for $15,000,000 and that an equal amount would provide for the printing plant. The factories required for the manufacture of inks, glue, thread and other items would demand a comparatively small item. We will assume that the grand total of all of the expenses of installing our book printing plant—forest lands, paper mills, railroad, printing plant, art engraving and the various departments—forms an item of $50,000,000. This is more than sufficient, yet it is only 5 per cent of our total capital.

"We are now in a position to produce books with practically one item of expense—that of labor. We do no advertising; we pay no interest on money; we employ no traveling men; we have no competition; we have the most perfect plant which money and ingenuity can furnish; we can afford to employ the best artists, scientists and mechanics in the world; we have an army of men, under capable leadership, devoted to the one object of producing the best books ever fashioned since printing was invented. Not a dollar goes for profit, not a penny for interest. Under such conditions would it not be possible, judge, to produce a good book for 40 cents or less?"

"It undoubtedly would," admitted Judge Sawyer. "Your figures are dazzling and your project an inspiring one, but I am afraid it is not practical."

"You think it is more practical to pay $1.50 for a book which should be produced for 10 cents, I suppose," remarked Colonel Monroe.

"If the government did such a thing it would be socialism," declared Postmaster Jenkins, "and I'm opposed to anything like socialism. A man like Rockefeller could do a thing like that and make it pay, but the government would lose money on it. And, besides, it would ruin the book business."

"That's so, Jenkins," said the colonel, with a grim smile. "Your objection is even more 'practical' than that offered by the judge. Since you both object, I'll keep that billion."

THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1904.

OUR State tax-rate was seventeen cents. Our State tax-rate now is twenty-two and a half cents, and who is responsible for this enormous burden put upon the tax payers?

The Democratic party and the Democratic party only. The State was practically out of debt. It should have been kept in that condition. It could have been so but the field for public plunder was too tempting, and seeing the opportunity use was made of it.

THE SHOE FITS GORMAN.

Mr. Gorman's favorite pastime in the Senate has been to attribute to the President a disposition to dictate to Congress and usurp its powers. Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island, on Thursday, in discussing the question, said:

"I have been a member of this body for 24 years, a large part of the time with the Senator from Maryland; I have served with five or six different Presidents, including a Democratic President for two terms, and I never have known a President of the United States, not excepting Mr. Cleveland, who has interfered less with the legislative business of the Congress, or with the action of the House or the Senate, than the incumbent of that office.

"I know of no case where he has undertaken to dictate what our policy or what our legislation should be, and I cannot say that of another President within my recollection. The talk about the usurpations of the President and his attempts to control legislation or the Congress is nonsense and nobody knows it better than does the Senator from Maryland."

Mr. Gorman could speak with more authority concerning "dictators," if he reviewed his own political record in Maryland. "Dictator" is a title justly belonging to him, and Heaven help us if he ever wielded the powers of the Presidential office!

Mt. Lake Boarding Houses.

Mr. P. T. Garthright, the popular merchant and real estate dealer, has rented the Allenhurst cottage for this season. He is noted for his strict attention to the wants of his boarding houses, and he has always furnished them with the best the market could afford, and has, therefore, secured for himself and houses quite a reputation, which will be held up to the standard this year. Mrs. M. Rinehart will run the Allenhurst for Mr. Garthright this year. This lady gained quite a reputation for the Maryland Home, during the four years she had charge of that popular boarding house, and built up a good business and made many friends for herself, and there is no doubt she will do equally as well for Mr. Garthright and her patrons at the Allenhurst as she did at the Maryland Home. Miss Gertie Hone, the efficient and popular manager of the Maryland Home last season, will again have charge this season, and with the advantage of her experience of last season, will do better for her patrons and the proprietor than she did last. She gained the esteem of all of her guests last season, as well as the love of her help, and the proprietor will bespeak for her absolute success. Mr. Garthright has secured Mrs. Sarah Laughlin, who is an experienced boarding-house keeper, to manage the Virginia Home this season, and we bespeak for this popular house quite a prosperous season under Mrs. Laughlin's management. With these three popular ladies in charge, and with the moderate rates he will offer as an inducement to his patrons, together with the unexcelled accomodations, Mr. Garthright is sure of filling all three of these houses early in the season.

Indians Masons.

The five civilized tribes have always taken a great interest in Masonry. In 1889 General Albert Pike conferred the thirty-second degree on the chiefs of the four nations, the candidates being General P. Porter, Creek; Peter Pitchlynn, Choctaw; Elias C. Boudinot, Cherokee, and Holmes Colbert, sr., Chickasaw. Of these all are dead except Porter, who highly prizes his membership certificate signed by that intrepid soldier Pike.—Kansas City Journal.

DAMAGE SUIT COMPROMISED

Wanted $10,000 from Bond Bros. for Having His Legs Broken.

In the Allegany County Circuit Court Monday afternoon the suit of Matthew M. Baker vs. DuBois & Bond Bros., removed from this county was taken up. The defendants operate a large saw mill at Bond, this county, and the plaintiff was an employe. The latter alleged that while in the employ of the company, he was struck by a truck, which is used in transporting logs to the mill, and had both of his legs broken, besides sustaining other injuries, all of which the plaintiff alleged was due to the negligence of the said defendants. The suit was for $10,000.

The defendants alleged that the accident was caused by the carelessness of the defendant, and that the latter so admitted after it happened.

When the defendant was struck by the car, he was knocked into a pond of water. The accident happened in March, 1903, and the plaintiff was unable to walk for three months.

Shortly after the case was gone into by the attorneys a compromise was effected whereby the lumber company agreed to pay the plaintiff $275, thus putting a stop to the proceedings.

Friendsville Council Organized

Under the new charter incorporating the town of Friendsville, the Mayor and Councilman named in the Act passed by the General Assembly, met on last Saturday night and organized by the election of Mr. Wm. H. H. Friend, president of the Council; Wm. F. East, Clerk; George J. Kolb, treasurer, and Lloyd M. Welch, bailiff and tax collector.

At the meeting the Council passed a number of ordinances for the Government of the town which will be printed in book form and distributed among its citizens.

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

Oats sowing and potato planting are engaging the attention of the thrifty farmer these bright sunny days.

Mr. F. M. Bittinger combined business and pleasure in a recent trip to Meadow Mountain. "Frits" is an ardent admirer of pretty women and fast horses.

Mr. S. O. Wiley will wield the saw and hatchet the coming summer, and at present he wears the air of one who thinks life is one sweet Holiday.

Mr. and Mrs. Simon Brenneman go to housekeeping this week, in the old Stark homestead, a short distance south of here.

Miss Effie Bittinger began an engagement as domestic in the home of Mr. Ham Butler, early last week.

Rev. G. W. Stroup, with his better half, was visiting friends at Jennings last Thursday.

On last Sunday Master John McKenzie, being curious to know something about the operations of dynamite, began to experiment with a torpedo, in which experiment he was abetted by older and should be, wiser persons. The torpedo was exploded the lad was slightly injured about the neck and face.

Squire Geo. Ralston is troubled with rheumatic conditions, that render him unfit for work.

There are rumors afloat telling of the approaching marriage of Mr. Daniel J. Brenneman to a Miss Michaels, of Firm Rock.

Mr. T. B. Wiley shipped a consignment of maple sugar from his camp last week.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Scott's Emulsion is the means of life and of the enjoyment of life of thousands of men, women and children.

To the men Scott's Emulsion gives the flesh and strength so necessary for the cure of consumption and the repairing of body losses from any wasting disease.

For women Scott's Emulsion does this and more. It is a most sustaining food and tonic for the special trials that women have to bear.

To children Scott's Emulsion gives food and strength for growth of flesh and bone and blood. For pale girls, for thin and sickly boys Scott's Emulsion is a great help.

WORK OF THE LEGISLATURE.

President George Whitelock, of the Maryland Bar Association, in his address at the opening of the Association's session at Annapolis, reviewed, in part the work of the Maryland Legislature at its late session, calling attention to new laws and amendments to old ones, as follows:

"Judgment of justices of the peace are to be affirmed by circuit courts where the appellants are not ready for trial (ch. 662).

"The mother of an infant is authorized to file a petition for the change of its name, although the father is living and a resident of Maryland (ch. 25.)

"Replevin bonds are no longer to be given to the plaintiff, but to the State for the use of the parties in interest (ch. 26.)

"In suits before magistrates the existence of a corporation or partnership or the representative character of a party must be denied under oath before the hearing; otherwise it will be taken as admitted (ch. 89.)

Under the Act of 1904, Chapter 535, mortgages of lands may be made parties to suits instituted for sale for purposes of partition. Heretofore, under the Act of 1900, Chapter 205, it has been possible to bring into such proceedings mortgagees of undivided interests only. The new law is of grave importance as affecting both right and remedy.

"Courts of chancery may now decree the execution of mortgages so as to bind unborn parties. The law in this respect has been made to conform to that prevailing since the Act of 1868, Chapter 273, in reference to sales and leases (ch. 563).

"Exemptions from execution have been further extended. One hundred dollars in property, whether the same consists of money, land or goods, as well as all money payable in the nature of insurance, benefit or relief in the contingency or event of sickness, accident, hurt or death of any person, is now protected against seizure on fieri facias (ch. 381).

"Fines imposed for the desertion of wife and minor child can now be ordered by the court to be paid in whole or in part to the wife. A husband arrested for desertion may be released for one year on giving recognizance to pay a weekly sum to the wife for her support. This provision is also operative before conviction, with the consent of the traverser (ch. 44).

"The period of possible commitment of female minors to juvenile institution has been extended from 18 to 21 years of age (ch. 98).

"An infant without proper care may be committed to such an institution under the Act of 1904, Chapter 120, which contains definitions and prescribes methods.

"From and after January 1, 1909, the State and not the respective counties will be charged with the maintenance, care, control and treatment of all insane paupers. The condition of most of these unfortunates, will, no doubt, be ameliorated by this reform. "Conservators of the peace of other States, railway special agents and persons carrying weapons as a reasonable precaution against apprehended danger are exempted from the law in reference to concealed weapons (ch. 114).

"The malicious and wrongful tapping of water mains has been added to the long category of statutory offenses (ch. 546).

"Trading stamps, unless redeemable in money, were so offensive to the legislative conscience as to receive the condemnation of two acts of Assembly (ch. 223, 577).

"Judgments of courts of record or of justices of the peace are no longer taxable (ch. 460). Savings banks institutions or corporations having a capital of $20,000 or over subject to taxation, and which merely receive time deposits at a fixed rate of interest, but do not receive weekly or monthly deposits, are now exempted from the annual franchise stipend (ch. 212).

"The mortgage tax has been repealed as to Baltimore city and 14 counties of the State. Elsewhere it will be hereafter collected for the benefit of the counties themselves and not for that of the sovereignty (ch. 405).

"The collateral inheritance tax is not enforceable for an indefinite period. The security of titles and the peace of mind of conveyancers are increased by the establishment of a limitation of four years for its collection (ch. 222).

"On April 7, 1904, Governor Warfield approved a law known as the Act of 1904, Chapter 236. It reads as follows, viz:

"Every judge of the Circuit Courts of the counties, Supreme Bench of Baltimore City or the Court of Appeals who shall attain the age of 70 years while in office, after having served the 10 preceding consecutive years, and every judge of any of said courts who shall have served upon the bench 15 consecutive years, whether such service be before or after the passage of this act, and who shall have reached the age of 70 years, and every person who has heretofore been elected and has served as judge of any of said courts and is now no longer in office and has attained the age of 70 years, or if not now 70 years of age, when he shall attain said age, shall be entitled to a salary of $2,400 per annum, payable in quarterly installments, as other judges' salaries are now paid."

"The measure emanated from the State Bar Association, and to its efforts is due the adoption of this notable reform."

Youghiogheny.

Perhaps the most difficult geographical name in the United States is Youghiogheny, or geny, as it is sometimes spelled, the name of a creek in Western Maryland and Pennsylvania. Few besides natives of the region pronounce it with the chief accent on the penultimate and who so essays it with the accent elsewhere finds his mouth filled with a meaningless confusion of vowels and consonants. The first syllable is "Yough," pronounced "Yo," with a short "o." The second is "I" short, the "o" following is almost if not quite unheard in the mouth of the native, while the last two sylables are those made familiar in "Alleghany," though there is even here a question of "a" long or short.

The pronunciation of Youghioghgeny is, however, a simple matter with the modern spelling compared to what it must have seemed to the stranger who met it with the old spelling. On an ancient map of the region the name is spelled "Yoghyoghania." Doubtless this spelling came nearer than that now in use to indicating aptly the Indian pronunciation of the name.

MRS. KISSNER GOES TO JAIL

Friendsville Woman Charged With Passing Raised Note Is Held for U. S. Court.

Mary M. Kissner, of Friendsville, who was arrested last week, was committed to the custody of the sheriff of Allegany county last Friday by United States Commissioner Thomas J. Anderson for the action of the United States grand jury. She is charged by George F. Foster, custodian of the secret service division of the treasury department, with having passed a raised $1 note. It was raised to $5. The authorities suspect that Mrs. Kissner knows who raised the note. Her husband was with her at the hearing. Mrs. Kissner is about 45 years old and the mother of 10 children. She was taken to the Baltimore city jail Saturday by Deputy United States Marshal Jacob D. George.

ANOTHER NEW MACHINE ADDED

To the Already Well Equipped Plant of The Republican.

Last Thursday another new modern piece of machinery was placed in this office, it being an improved newspaper folder, paster and trimmer.

The machine is attached to the press upon which the papers are printed by a chain gear. The papers are carried directly from the press to the folder by a series of tapes and thence through it over numerous rolls until the packing box is reached when they are ready for the mailing machine.

The folder was set up by that prince of mechanics, Mr. Samuel Lawton, and works to perfection.

WATER OR NO WATER, THAT'S THE QUESTION

Uppermost in the Minds of the Progressive Citizens of Oakland.

THE SECOND EXTENSION OF TIME

Cranted the Projectors by the Council—Some Trouble In Securing a Site for Location of Reservoir Being Experienced.

The water question in Oakland remains an unsolved problem so far as active work in beginning the installation of the system is concerned.

At a meeting of the Council held Monday night two of the projectors of the water system appeared before that body and asked another extension of time on the franchise, setting June 1st as the date upon which operations will be commenced. This was granted by Council.

The original franchise, granted Mr. F. T. Martin and by him transferred to a gentleman named McCarthy, seems to have passed entirely from the control of these two gentlemen as others are now active in the matter, they being Messrs. H. M. Kurtz and A. W. Lee, of Clearfield, Pa.; W. J. Yeagers, of Reedsville, Pa., and H. F. Ahrens, of Reading, Pa.

The first named gentleman has been here a week or two looking over the ground with which he is very favorably impressed. The others are in difierent sections of the country and in order to communicate with and have them come here and make an inspection was the object in asking another extension of the franchise.

Some difficulty has also been experienced in securing a location for the reservoir, it being currently reported that those owing eligible sites are asking a prohibitive price for the same.

The new call book of the Garrett County Telephone Company, now printing at this office, will be completed this week and delivered to the officers of the company. The job is a big one and quite tedious, hence the time consumed in its preparation.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur I. Kelso, of Kingwood, were the guests from Friday until Tuesday of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Kelso, of near the Park, and Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Dixon, of Oakland, when the former returned home. Mrs. Kelso will remain here a few days longer.

Married, at the home of the bride in Elk Lick township, Wednesday, May 4th, 1904, Mr. George Schlosangle, of Accident, Md., and Miss Martha Kretchman, daughter of Mrs. Annie Kretchman. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E.S. Johnstown, D. D. —Elk Lick Star.

Mr. W. A. Sturgiss, manager of the Sturgiss' Pharmacy, has made many improvements this spring to the interior of the store, the most notable one being the addition of all glass show-case counters which stretch the entire length of the room thus doing away with unsightly wooden counters and enabling the display more advantageously of the goods on sale.

Mr. Emanuel Custer, of near Hoyes, was in Oakland Monday when he contracted with Messrs. A. D. Naylor & Co., for a large amount of plumbing work to be put in his new house now being erected on his farm. It is Mr. Custer's intention, as soon as the building is completed, to open a hotel for the accomodation of summer visitors. His place is one of the finest in the county upon which there are numerous lakes filled with trout and other fish where the sportsman can enjoy angling to his heart's content.

Rev. Dr. Wilbur L. Davidson, secretary of the American University, was on a train wrecked near Parkersburg, W. Va. Two men were killed. The passengers were in a tunnel for three hours breathing the gas and smoke until all were nearly asphyxiated. They were only able to breathe at all by holding wet towels over their mouths and nosrils. When Dr. Davidson undertook to walk out of the tunnel he almost fell unconscious two or three times before he reached the fresh air. Had the train been running just a little faster nothing could have saved the passengers.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Lime is one of the best known and the cheapest of all disinfectants. People who use plenty of lime abont their premises have little sickness. This goes to prove that the use of lime is a preventative of diseases. You can buy a whole barrel for a dollar or so, and it will last you several months, supplying your every need in the way of disinfecting and making healthy spots about your premises which might otherwise breed disease. Often city residents have unhealthy spots about their premises which they are not aware of. Look around carefully and see what your premises need. Nine chances out of ten it is lime.

REV. J. H. HATHAWAY'S

Sermons in St. Paul's M. E. Church in Oakland.

Rev. J. H. Hathaway, D. D., of Canada, after an absence of six months, preached in St. Paul's M. E. church on Sunday morning and evening, May 1st, to a very large and appreciative congregation.

His addresses, as usual, were unique, of a high order and a deep spiritual ferver and earnestness characterized each address.

The Sunday morning subject was "God is Love." He said, in part, that this was the greatest message that ever greeted the ears of humanity. That for nearly two thousand years ministers had been trying to tell it, poets had been writing about it, singers had been singing about it, and volumes had been written about it and yet the world scarcely understood what was the meaning of this love, and were led to say: "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us." He said it was a pardoning love—an abundant pardon; secondly, it was a chastened love; thirdly, a personal love; fourthly, an everlasting love, and lastly, a sacrificing love. His descriptive powers reached the climax in his vivid portrayal of the scourging and crucifixion of Jesus.

His evening subject was: "A Lawyer Seeking Light." The text, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." A bright, intelligent lawyer had come very near the kingdom, but failed. He told what this kingdom was; that it was not earthly but spiritual. He spoke of some classes near the kingdom: Firstly, when a man thinks seriously, he is near the kingdom; secondly, a moral man is very near the kingdom; thirdly a man sincerely seeking is near the kingdom; fourthly, a man may be near the kingdom but be lost.

From here he goes to his home in Toronto, Canada, and the best wishes of his many friends go with him.

Bunyan's Pilgrim Band

Will give their famous Illustrated Lecture on Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress in Mountain Lake Park M. E. church, on Thursday, May 12th, at 8 p. m. This lecture has been given in 407 M. Oakland Model Steam Bakery

To my Patrons and the Public:

Owing to the steady increase in my business and the determination to give my customers the best service and goods that can be produced anywhere, I have installed in my Bakery an up-to the-minute steam plant by which the product of my establishment is more than doubled and in consequence no delay is anticipated in putting upon the market twice daily fresh, nutritious Bread, Cakes, Pies, etc.

The dough mixer in my establishment has a capacity of three barrels which is driven by an engine and is of the latest pattern and a model in every respect. The dough is mixed by this machine and turned upon the table without being touched by the hands, thus ensuring better mixed bread and cleanliness in every respect. "Cleanliness" is our motto.

I have also installed a power ice cream machine and am better prepared than heretofore to manufacture Ice Cream and sell at wholesale and retail on the shortest notice.

I respectfully invite the public to inspect my plant.

Very truly yours, HENRY LAUER.

The Master Of Forgetting

By Howard Fielding

Copyright, 1903, by Charles W. Hooke

SHE was a pretty girl of a startlingly composite style, with corn colored hair and dark eyes—rapid, restless eyes, with long black lashes. Her companion was a tall young man of a ruddy blond type. He had an honest, bold face, and yet he looked worried, and there was a suggestion of furtiveness, almost of shame, in his expression.

They were standing upon a street corner in the little university town and seemed to be waiting for a trolley car. That was my own business at the moment, and I paused just beyond hearing of their conversation, which seemed to be in earnest. I caught a word or two in spite of myself, but not the meaning. They were a notable couple, and while I did not stare at them I did not turn my back.

I was a stranger in the place, and my clothes had been made by a good tailor in the city, so I was not surprised to receive a rapid, critical glance from the young woman. I was, however, somewhat startled by a second glance, and when I got a third the situation began to have a distinct and unmistakable character.

I am cursed with a romantic nature, but experience has taught me that when a strange young woman tries to flirt with me behind the back of an honorable escort she is more romantic than I am, and an acquaintance between us will not end happily. I immediately became interested in an old stone church on the other side of the street. It was not a beautiful object, but it looked safe.

Two minutes later a car came along, and I got aboard. The young man followed me, and he waved his hand affectionately to the girl, who remained upon the sidewalk. She made a quick and clever little gesture which might or might not be construed as throwing a kiss.

When we reached the college grounds I left the car, the young man still at my heels. He followed me almost to the door of University hall and then turned toward the terrace. I watched him covertly until he stopped by the granite wall and bared his head to the breeze while he looked out across the valley.

My errand was with Professor Sumner, and I was shown into his room, which occupies a corner of the great gray building upon the ground floor. He is a heavy man of middle height, with a strong neck and a big head that looks as if it might be full of hard-working brains. His hair is iron gray, and his beard and mustache are almost white. He is an American of long descent, but was a student in Germany for so many years that he speaks our language with a slight accent.

I gave him my letter of introduction from a friend in the city, and though it filled a page he read it at a glance—I had almost said at a gulp, for he has a way of tossing his head forward and tossing it back as if he seized a subject with his teeth and hurriedly swallowed it.

"You want to make an article about hypnotism," said he. "Do you know anything about it?"

"No," said I.

"Why didn't your editor send a man who did know something about it?" he demanded.

"Because he wanted your views unadulterated," I replied.

"Good," said he, swallowing my remark with a relish. "If that is what you will write I shall talk to you. Is it the case of Bradford Dill that has sent you here?"

THE SITUATION BEGAN TO HAVE A DISTINCT CHARACTER.

Dill was a bank president and a highly respected citizen. Owing to the dishonesty of two employees the bank got into difficulties, from which Dill rescued it with honor, but the matter so preyed upon his mind that he was brought to the verge of insanity. The story was that Professor Sumner had hypnotized him and had commanded him to forget his trouble, with the result that Dill had regained his mental balance almost immediately.

"It was that case more than any other," I replied.

"The story as published is substantially true," said he. "Mr. Dill is no longer out of his mind, but I shall soon be so if people do not stop running to me with their troubles. I wish I had told him to forget that he had been to see me. It would have spared me much annoyance. However, let us proceed, for I have not much time."

He went to a locker and took out of it a small machine that resembled an electric fan. This he set upon the table and connected it with wires from a lamp. Certain parts of the instrument began to revolve, and I beheld a luminous spot that twinkled and yet was sharply fixed, like a great star.

"Do not look too long," said he, and at that moment an old negro servitor who had ushered me in appeared at the door.

Professor Sumner, after a glance at the black, crossed the room, and there was a whispered conference.

"You have good fortune," said the professor, returning. "Here is some one who wishes to consult me. It is your opportunity."

"But this must be some private matter," said I. "Your visitor will not speak before me."

Already the professor had me by the arm, and he led me behind a screen and seated me in a chair before I could make up my mind to resist. But as he was arranging the screen for my more complete concealment I found my voice.

"I can't do this," I protested. "It does not seem right."

"Let your conscience be at peace," said he. "If anything is disclosed which you should not know, I will throw you into a trance and you shall have your mind wiped clean of it. That is understood, eh?"

Before I could reply I heard the door open. Professor Sumner stepped aside, and I was sitting there in the corner, blushing unseen, like the flower in the poem.

"Professor Sumner," said a voice that made me jump.

"I am he," was the reply.

"You do not know me?"

"I have seen your face, but I do not know your name," said the professor. "If there is any reason why you do not wish to give it"—

"Thank you," said the visitor hastily. "I suppose that I am foolish about it. You are a man in whom any one could have confidence. You are greatly respected in this community. If you prefer that I should introduce myself"—

"By no means!" exclaimed Professor Sumner. "The face is enough. You are an honest man, and you are in trouble. In the past few weeks I have seen plenty of people who were in trouble, but very few honest men. You are welcome, sir. What can I do for you?"

There was a moment of silence, and then my young man of the corner and the street car—the escort of the pretty girl of two complexions—said slowly:

"There is something which I would like to forget; something which it is unjust that I should remember—at least it is an injustice to remember it as I seem compelled to do. Can you make me forget it?"

"I can make you to forget anything at all," replied Sumner; "your name, your age, your native tongue. I can send you out of this room dumb, and you shall never speak English until you have laboriously learned it all over again."

I could hear the young man's chair strain as he leaned back in it, and I could imagine the expression of his face.

"What is this that you wish to forget?" demanded the professor. "I must have a perfect idea of it before we begin."

The young man begged delay and paced the floor for a minute or two.

"You have called me an honest man," said he, stopping suddenly. "I think I am too honest for my own good, surely for my own happiness. I have a horror of deception—an unnatural horror of it."

"So have I," responded the professor. "We should be friends. But you did not come here to tell me that."

"I will speak straight out," said the visitor in a voice which indicated that nothing could have been harder for him. "I am in love with a pure and admirable woman. She is not an angel. I suppose she has her little faults and weaknesses like the rest of humanity. I could hardly wish her to be otherwise. And it is the more unjust in me on that account to retain and to brood upon the memory of one slight error, but I can't help it. The thing is ruining my life."

"So I perceive," responded Sumner. "What did she do?"

"It was a trifling deception, a bit of thoughtlessness," continued the young man. "I—I am not a resident of this town, though I live not far away. You will make no attempt to identify me or the young lady?"

"Trust me," said Sumner. "I live the life of a monk in these stone walls."

"There was a man, somewhat older than myself," said the visitor, "with whom this young lady"—

"We will call her Miss A."

"Very well—with whom Miss A. had been acquainted since she was a little girl. He is a very handsome fellow, but he lacks principle. I think Miss A.'s influence upon him was good, in spite of the difference in their ages."

"We will call him Mr. B.," said the professor.

"Mr. B. lived in the same town as myself," continued the visitor. "He married a young woman of some means, but not from mercenary motives. It was an excellent match and I don't see why they shouldn't be very happy; but there is no denying that Mrs. B. is of a jealous disposition. I have seen it exhibited; in fact, I saw it once in the case of Miss A., and in all honesty I can say that there was no justification that I could discover. Miss A. had merely written a note asking Mr. B. whether he was to attend a certain dancing party.

"The result was most unfortunate. There was no open quarrel. Miss A. and Mrs. B. continued upon friendly terms, as they had been all their lives. But a break had been threatened and to avoid such a danger in the future Miss A. took the very unwise course of concealing a perfectly harmless little correspondence with Mr. B. They were members of many clubs and societies, and it was necessary they should communicate with each other. Of course this communication should have been perfectly open, or it should not have existed; but, unfortunately, they did not see the matter so clearly."

"How did they manage it?" asked the professor, and I could hear the visitor's feet shuffling nervously on the floor before he replied:

"Miss A. used to leave notes at his house," said he, in the voice of one confessing a black crime of his own. "Of course, I am giving you the worst possible view of this affair. Really there could not be anything more innocent in intent than this. Miss A. left the notes under a book on a table. To make matters worse," he added, laughing nervously, "it was an old family Bible. Miss A. and I went driving a good deal at that time, and we used to stop at the B.'s."

"Did you know she left the notes?" asked the professor.

"Certainly not," was the reply. "When I accidentally discovered it I was very much grieved, and, though my acquaintance with Miss A. was hardly close enough to warrant me in criticising her conduct, I—I was forced by a sense of duty to—to"—

"Tell her to stop," said the professor, finishing the sentence. "Did she do it?"

"I can see that you are condemning her unjustly," said the young man in a rather high key. "You blame her unnecessarily."

"Not in the least," protested the professor. "I am merely trying to get the view of the affair which you find the most painful. Did she stop?"

"She did, but I—I regret to say"—

"That she didn't stop until you had caught her again."

"Something of the kind," was the reply. "But there were excuses. You do not understand. She is a girl of the most honest, noble impulses. It was quite contrary to her nature. But it does hurt me to think that she deceived me. Selfishness! It's all over. The B.'s moved to Chicago almost a year ago. And Margaret—Miss A.—and I have grown closer together. I have learned to esteem her more highly, to know her better. Why can't I forget this thing? It's because I am crazy on the subject. I have twined it in with bits of petty and jealous gossip until my whole life is ruined by it. I am letting my happiness slip by in miserable, cowardly indecision. This doubt of her, that is no better than a treason, poisons the air I breathe. It robs me of my sleep"—

I HEARD THE WHIR OF THE REVOLVING MIRRORS.

"Are you under any pledge to the young lady?"

"No," was the reply; "but, unless I flatter myself too highly, I may be today. I am going to ask her to marry me. I have good hope, and I would like to begin a new life—I would like to be happy. For her sake chiefly, I swear it—for her sake. Why, think of it! I have plenty of money. I am free. We might see the world together and be the happiest people in it."

I shuddered involuntarily, and the legs of my chair rattled on the floor, but the professor's voice drowned the noise.

"I will do what I can for you," said he. "I understand the case thoroughly. As a man of the world, as one who has seen much of life before he came to this seclusion, I offer you my help. Sit here."

I heard the whir of the revolving mirrors, and my heart stood still. Would Sumner take away from this young man the one memory that could save him from destruction?

Suddenly I heard the professor's voice, but so changed as to be hardly recognizable. It was not loud, but it was keen as a knife.

"You will think of the right name of this young woman whom we have called Miss A.," said he. "You will not speak it, however. Think of her intently and remember what I tell you: You do not love her. You know her to be a deceitful and dishonest woman, who was false to her friend, to you and to every right principle. You will never ask her to marry you. If she ever needs your help you will give it because you loved her once. But you do not love her, you cannot trust her. She would drag your soul down and you could never lift hers up. That is the law. And you will forget that I have told you this. You will think that it came up naturally in your heart, for that is best. You will leave this room immediately and forget that you have ever seen me. Wake!"

I heard him rise and stagger to the door without a word. It closed behind him, and almost at the same instant the professor drew away the screen.

"It was somewhat confidential," said he. "I think perhaps you would better"—

"There is no need," said I. "I knew it before."

"You know this woman?"

"I have seen her once," I replied. "It was enough."

Half an hour later when I left the building the tall young man was standing upon the terrace. I walked that way and paused beside him.

"It is a grand view from this spot," said I.

"The air is so pure today," he replied. "It is refreshing and some way different. I feel as if my soul had bathed in this white sunlight and was clean. I beg your pardon for my enthusiasm," he added. "Are you connected with the university?"

"No," I replied. "I have been calling upon Professor Sumner."

"A very remarkable man, I am told," said he. "I have never had the pleasure of meeting him."

UNCLE SAM'S WONDERS

All Executive Departments Send Treasures to the World's Fair.

Display Installed In the Largest Governmental Exposition Building Ever Constructed — Precious Documents — Relics of Famous Statesmen and Soldiers. Working Postal Exhibit.

The United States Government building at the World's Fair occupies an elevated site just south of the main picture of the Exposition. The great central dome of the Government building is visible from the very center of the Fair, looking across the picturesque sunken garden that lies between the Palaces of Mines and Metallurgy and Liberal Arts.

The hill slope in front of the Government building is terraced with broad stairways almost completely covering the slope. The building is 800 feet long by 250 feet wide and is the largest structure ever provided at an exposition by the federal government. It is distinguished from all the other large buildings at the Exposition by the steel truss construction, the entire roof being supported by steel arches, forming a splendid domed ceiling.

In this building are installed the exhibits of all the executive departments of the government. The building is a vast storehouse of an endless variety of treasures dear to the heart of every true American. Precious documents are to be seen here, and the autographs of our great men of the past are on display. Relics of famous statesmen and soldiers, carefully preserved through generations, are exhibited. Each governmental department has installed an exhibit showing its official character and mode of operation.

Entering the Government building from the eastern end, the visitor sees at his left a railroad postoffice car. This is not a mere coach standing idle, but is one of the most improved mail cars, in which men attached to the United States railway mail service are actively engaged in "throwing" the mails. Here you will see the postal clerks at work, just as they work while speeding along a railroad track.

LOUISIANA PURCHASE MONUMENT, WORLD'S FAIR.

A curious collection of old time relics from the postoffice museum at Washington illustrates as no verbal description can do the crude beginnings of the postal system. One of these relics is an old fashioned stage-coach that once carried [illegible] mails through a portion of the Louisiana purchase territory. President Roosevelt, who once inspected it, examined with a rough rider's interest the bullet holes which stage robbers and mountain brigands shot through its stiff leathern curtains. Generals Sherman and Sheridan and President Garfield rode in this old coach during the strenuous days of frontier life. Among the collection of documents showing the primitive postal methods in vogue in the early days is to be seen the old book of accounts kept by the first postmaster general, Benjamin Franklin, all written by hand. There is a rare collection of stamps, including ancient Filipino, Porto Rican and Cuban stamps. The postoffice department's exhibit occupies 12,469 square feet.

Across the aisle, at the right, is the exhibit of the new Department of Commerce and Labor, occupying 1,966 square feet. This exhibit shows what the new executive department stands for and what it is accomplishing. Mr. Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor, had charge of the preparation of the exhibit. Charts arranged by him, showing the rapid growth of the nation in agriculture, arts, manufacture, population, etc., are of special interest to sociologists and all students of the labor problem. The Census Bureau exhibit is made in this section. It shows the tabulating machines used in compiling the census reports. The Lighthouse Board, also operating under this department, shows the great revolving lenses in lighthouses, with other interesting appliances.

The space in the projecting northwest corner of the building is devoted to the Library of Congress. The edifice which houses this library at Washington is held by many architects to be the most beautiful building in the world. Its interior decorations, by Elmer Ellsworth Garnsey, furnish one of the chief delights of a visit to the national capital. A large model of this splendid building is a feature of the exhibit. The decorative features of the interior are reproduced in their original colors.

The next exhibit on the right hand side of the central aisle is that of the Interior Department, occupying 11,792 square feet. In this large space the visitor finds so many things of compelling interest that he is loath to leave. The Patent Office exhibit belongs to this section. There are models of many machines that have borne an important part in the development of the nation's industries. The earliest form of every device of human invention, so far as possible, is shown here. For instance, you may see the actual sewing machine that was the first contrivance of its kind every constructed; it was patented in 1846 by Elias Howe. The first typewriter, patented by C. Thurber in 1842; the model of the first cast iron plow, patented by Charles Newbold in 1797; the first screw propeller, invented by Robert Hook in 1680; and many other "first" things are to be seen. The model of Abraham Lincoln's celebrated device for lifting steamboats off shoals is shown here. The first harvesting machine, made in the year 150 B. C., is one of the most ancient exhibits at the Exposition. There is also a model of the first steam engine, made in Egypt in the same year.

Every foot of the 200,000 feet of floor space in Uncle Sam's World's Fair building is occupied by exhibits of surpassing interest, and every phase of the people's welfare is shown.

CURIOUS THINGS FROM CHINA

The Most Magnificent Beds Ever Seen Are Part of the Celestial Empire's World's Fair Exhibit.

The Chinese exhibit at the World's Fair is filled with pleasing surprises. Some of the most magnificent articles of furniture are a part of this wonderful display. The carving and inlaying of ivory, bone and wood illustrate the marvelous skill of the Chinese.

Models included in this interesting exhibit show the homes and home life of the Chinese, their weddings and funerals, Chinese tea house, restaurant and shop, Chinese weaving and some of the beautiful silks and wearing apparel of the Chinese and their methods of manufacturing them.

One feature of the exhibit is two magnificent Chinese beds, each of which has the appearance of being a small house of great beauty. One is a summer bed, the other for winter. The summer bed is hand carved and inlaid with ivory and bone figures and landscapes exquisitely carved and skillfully joined as to appear a part the wood. The bed and furniture are of carved bamboo. The bed consists of an anteroom, with tables, chairs and tea stands, and in an inner room, which is the sleeping apartment, there is a couch with coverings of gauzy silks.

The winter bed is still more elaborate. It consists of three compartments. The first contains four chairs, a tea poy and a chest of drawers. This is the sitting apartment. The second is the dressing room, and the third is the sleeping apartment, or the couch itself. The furniture is of rosewood inlaid with ivory carving of birds, flowers and trees. The couch is covered with silks of the finest texture and in gaudy colors. The sleeping compartments are lighted with Chinese lanterns of silk hung at the outer entrance, while the light enters through gauze panels, hand painted and in forms of rosewood inlaid with ivory figures.

A table and dish made of highly polished ash, with exquisitely carved bamboo figures inlaid, are shown. The work is so artistically done that each article seems to have been made of one piece of wood.

There is also a large display of Chinese lanterns made of silk, gauze and other light material and some made of beads artistically arranged with glass centers. The silk and gauze are beautifully hand painted.

There are models of some of the great Chinese temples, theaters and arches, showing elaborate carving in wood and ivory and two large elephant tusks exquisitely carved.

WHARFAGE FREE AT ST. LOUIS

Twenty Miles of River Front For Water Craft at World's Fair City.

Free wharfage will be given to all boats landing at St. Louis during the World's Fair. Traffic Manager Hilleary of the Exposition and Joseph P. Whyte, harbor and wharf commissioner of St. Louis, have decided on the locations assigned to the various kinds of boats.

Yachts, steam launches and all boats propelled by their own power have been assigned wharf space between Choteau avenue and Biddle street. These streets, running east and west, form the boundary lines for the central business district of the city.

House boats have been assigned wharf space north of Biddle street and south of Choteau avenue.

St. Louis has a river front of twenty miles. The Broadway line of the Transit company parallels the river from the city limits on the north to Jefferson Barracks on the south. At no point are the cars more than five blocks from the Mississippi river. The World's Fair may be reached for one fare by transferring to any of the eight lines that cross Broadway and reach the Exposition grounds.

No charge will be made for wharfage. Application for space should be made to the harbor and wharf commissioner at the City Hall, on Twelfth street, between Market street and Clark avenue.

For Sale.

A cottage at Mountain Lake Park, Md.; 12 rooms, kitchen and attic; is used as a boarding house, and has good patronage; splendid location, near Auditorium. Also, 10 acres of good land one-half mile south of Mt. Lake Park, all cleared except 1½ acres. For further particulars address or call on F. P. ARNOLD, Mt. Lake Park, Garrett county, Md. 49-26t

Bowser the Politician

He Is Called Upon by the People to Lead Them to Victory, but When They Make a Strong Demand For Beer He Has It Out With Them.

[Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Lewis.]

THERE was such a self important be ng about Mr. Bowser when he entered his house the other evening that Mrs. Bowser noticed it at once and wondered whether he had finally hit a ten dollar prize in a lottery. He carried himself erect, looked down upon her in a patronizing way, and she was kept on the ragged edge a full half hour before he condescended to explain:

"No, my dear woman, I have not been investing in lottery tickets. It is simply that the political theories I have always held are soon to bear political fruit."

"I didn't know you ever held any," she somewhat bluntly replied.

"Perhaps not. It is not necessary for a husband to sit down and tell his wife everything. Nevertheless, I have had some theories. Heretofore they have been rather in advance of the people, but the people are now going to catch up."

"I DENY IT, WOMAN!"

"In other words, you are going to fuss around with politics again."

"Your language is very ambiguous, madam," he stiffly replied. "I do not understand what you mean by fussing with politics."

"Why, you have gone into politics three or four times and had a lot of red nosed loafers hanging around and —and"—

"That will do, Mrs. Bowser. There is no call to discuss this subject, especially as your animus is so apparent."

"But we will discuss it," she persisted. "Last year you heard the people calling on you to rise and help them throw off the yoke of tyranny or some such nonsense, and you let them make a guy of you to the amount of at least $50. When they could get no more cash out of you for beer they dropped you with a thud."

"You—you say that to me, do you?" gasped Mr. Bowser as his face turned almost purple and his eyes hung out.

"Certainly I do. Do you remember in what condition you came home the last night you were out?"

"Woman, no man on the face of this earth would dare talk to me as you do! It is true that the people called upon me last year to lead them, and it is true that—that"—

"That you did not lead them."

"That I was ready to, but for the sake of harmony in the party I drew back and decided to wait till another campaign. How dare you assert that I was made a guy of! How dare you assert that I was dropped with a thud!"

"It may have been a crash instead of a thud," she answered, "but you suddenly went out of politics."

"I deny it woman—I deny it!"

"And when you came home that night your hat was broken, your coat torn up the back and somebody had skinned your nose. Added to this, you called yourself Mr. Bowsher and wanted to go to bed on the doorstep."

"And she is talking that way to me —to me!" whispered Mr. Bowser to himself as he sat and stared at her.

"And the dear people have become thirsty for beer again and are calling on you to rise once more!" she continued after a moment. "Just give 'em to understand that there is nothing but cold water ahead of them and see how soon they'll stop calling."

"She's talking to me—to me!" he exclaimed as he struck himself on the leg to see if he had turned to stone.

"You speak about your political theories and about their being ahead of the people. You haven't got any, and if you had a thousand the people wouldn't want them. You don't care shucks about voting, and no one has ever heard you talk politics for five minutes. Don't let them make a guy of you again, Mr. Bowser."

"A guy of me!" he repeated as he rose up in all his majesty. "Woman, beware! One more insult will drive me to the dead line. This may not technically be called your fifteenth attempt to assassinate me in my own house, but all the malevolence and malignity are there just the same. I came home here expecting a delegation from the Union Preserving and Reformation club to wait upon me at half past 7 o'clock and tender me the nomination of alderman of this ward, and you—you malign my theories, insult my principles and seek to cover my character as a patriot with ignominy. By Joseph, but I won't stand it —I won't stand it!"

"About your pet theories," said Mrs. Bowser as he stamped to and fro. "Please let me hear what they are?"

"Not one word!" he sternly replied.

"Have you been looking forward, looking backward or looking seven ways for Sunday?"

"Um!"

"And so the people want a leader and are calling? Who are they, Mr. Bowser? Please name five or six of the most prominent?"

"Not a name, woman—not a name! It is now close to the hour when I expect the delegation, and perhaps you will do me the favor to withdraw to your room. Let me say to you in the same breath that this subject need never be opened between us again."

"That means you are going into politics again?"

"I shall lead the people, madam."

"To what—to what"— She wanted to ask to what saloon, but she faltered over it, and he said:

"I shall lead them to victory through higher and nobler paths, and the day will come when you"—

But a ring at the bell cut him short, and while he went to open the door in person Mrs. Bowser skipped upstairs. Enter the delegation—very shiny silk hats, very shiny noses, very mellow condition. They numbered three, and all three threw themselves upon Mr. Bowser at once and respectively cried out:

"Ah, old man!"

"It's old Bowser himself!"

"Shake, old pard!"

Mr. Bowser didn't like it a bit, but by a great effort he worked up a floorwalker smile and rubbed his hands and said it was a fine evening.

"You bet!" answered the chairman of the delegation as he gave him a slap on the back. "Say, Bowser, you sly old dog, we are going to elect you by a clean 2,000 majority."

"Clean 2,000."

"Clean 2,000."

"Well, I am in the hands of the people," sententiously replied Mr. Bowser. "If called upon to lead them to victory I'll do my best."

"Of course you will, old man."

"Of course."

"Of course."

"I suppose we ought to get to work and plan the campaign?"

"Yes. Put on your hat and overcoat, and we'll go over and heave in three beers apiece first. Beer and Bowser—hurrah!"

"Gentlemen, there will be no beer."

"What! No beer?" shouted the three in chorus.

"Not a drop."

"Then, no beer no Bowser. Say, you are an old stiff, you are. You couldn't run for chimney sweep."

"Out!" said Mr. Bowser as he pointed to the door.

"Ya!"

"Ya!"

"Ya!"

And when he closed the door and turned around Mrs. Bowser sweetly inquired over the banister:

"Was that you coming in or the campaign going out, Mr. Bowser?"

When You Are In Need Just Draw on the Shah

"JUST to oblige" a depositor the cashier of a bank in a western town allowed him to overdraw his account $1,000. A few days later the cashier learned there was to be an examination of the bank's accounts. He sent at once for the depositor, told him of the impending examination and asked him to make his account good.

"I can't do it," replied the depositor. "I haven't the money, and I can't possibly raise it inside of three weeks. What can I do about it?"

The cashier was in sore straits. He did not have money enough of his own to make good the deficit, and for a long time he couldn't think of any way of bridging the trouble. Suddenly a bright idea dawned on him.

"I'll tell you what we'll do," he said to the depositor. "You draw a draft on the shah of Persia for $1,000 and deposit it in your account. It will be at least six weeks before we'll have it returned protested. Meanwhile you can skirmish up the money to make good the overdraft."

The depositor laughed at the idea, but made out the draft on the shah and put it in for collection.

"There'll be a hot time in Persia when the shah gets that," the depositor said to the cashier, and the cashier agreed with him.

Within the three weeks the depositor made some collections through his regular business and straightened out his bank account.

About six weeks after the draft was made on the shah the cashier received a check from Teheran for $1,000 from the equerry of the shah. On the back of the voucher which accompanied it and above the indorsement of the equerry this statement was written:

"The shah of Persia requests that hereafter all bills from the United States of America shall be itemized."—New York Press.

CHARM OF THE GARDEN.

When by the tangled wayside path
The violet opes its eye
To make it clear that spring is here
To every passerby,
Romantic citizens go where
It nods its modest head,
But while they roam I'll stay at home
And watch my onion bed.

To wander in the woodlands wild,
Where modest blossoms blow,
And challenge fling to backward spring
Inviting it to go,
May suit those of artistic tastes
And seasoned rubber boots.
Give me the spot out in the lot
Where little lettuce shoots.

Far from the city's maddening strife
The johnny-jump-ups jump,
The crocus crows, and I suppose
The early bloom is trump.
For me a little garden plot
Which early wants supply,
Though hardly more than two by four,
Is four small aces high.

Let those who like such doubtful joys
For tall, damp timber strike,
And thus invite, to their delight,
Rheumatics and the like.
To me, I guess, the garden
Will be sufficient treat;
With spade and hoe I'll watch things grow
That later I can eat.

Fable of the Miser Who Let Go.

In a Large City there lived a Self Made man who was attached to his Money with a Bond similar to the one on which the Siamese Twins drew a salary. It was necessary to Chloroform him and perform a Surgical Operation in order to secure the Payment of a Just Claim.

On the other Hand if Money was Coming to Him he always Met it more than Half Way with a Swift Horse and a Pair of Handcuffs lest it should get away before the Doors of his Safe closed on it Forever.

By the time he had Accumulated so Large a Fortune that the Police did not dare arrest him when he would not Pay his Hired Girl, Three Schemers took note of his Prosperity and Began Laying Plans to Share it.

As he was Careful not to carry more than Car fare they decided that Main Strength would not do and that Fine Work would be Necessary.

So one Evening they called him Aside and Whispered in his Ear that the Country was in a Bad Way unless some Good Man could be Induced to run for President and that after Looking over the Field they had Decided that he was the One to do an Artistic and Ornamental Job of Saving.

Although he would not have known the Tariff from a Load of Buckwheat, he Readily fell in with the Idea and his chest swelled Three Inches.

Then they Broke the news to him that it would take Money, and he asked if $10 would do.

Naturally they Replied that it would not Start the Works and that at Least $500 would be Necessary to Insure Success, but they Pointed Out by Way of Consolation that the Job paid $50,000 a year.

After much Squirming and Haggling he Succeeded in Beating them Down to $495 and Drew his Check for that Amount.

Bonding Act to Build Court House and Jail at Oakland.

CHAPTER 471.

AN ACT to enable the qualified voters of Garrett county to determine by ballot whether bonds, not to exceed the sum of one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be issued by the County Commissioners of said county for the purpose of building and furnishing a new Court House and Jail, at the county seat, Oakland, in said county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the question of whether or not the County Commissioners of Garrett County shall issue bonds to an amount not less than seventy-five nor exceeding one hundred thousand dollars for the purpose of purchasing lots and furnishing and erecting and building a Court House, and a new Jail and furnishing the same, at Oakland, the county seat of said county, not to exceed the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars, shall be submitted to the registered qualified voters at the Congressional election to be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in the year nineteen hundred and four, the said ticket to be voted to be printed on the congressional ballot to be used at said election, the ballot to be used in said election shall have printed on them for the issue of bonds or against the issue of bonds, and shall be counted and returned as other election returns are counted and made.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That if it shall be found by the returns of said judges of election that a majority of the votes cast in said county are for the issue of said bonds, then it shall be the duty of the County Commissioners of Garrett County, within nine months after said election, to issue said bonds to an amount not exceeding one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars in sums not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars each, and shall bear interest not to exceed five per centum per annum; and within nine months after said election, if it shall be decided by the ballots cast at said election, if it be decided by ballot cast that said bonds shall be issued, the said County Commissioners shall issue bonds, which bonds shall be signed by the President of the Board of County Commissioners, and to be countersigned by the clerk of the said board, and the said bonds shall be made payable in the following manner, that is to say: five thousand dollars each and every year, beginning with the year 1905, and they shall have coupons attached for the semi-annual interest, payable respectively on the first day of February and the first day of August in each year; the said bonds shall be dated as of the first day of August, 1905, and shall be forever exempt from all taxation for any purpose, and shall have printed on them a reference to the Act authorizing the issue thereof.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That said bonds shall be issued to mature at such date as shall not require the payment thereof of more than five thousand dollars in any one year; but none of said bonds shall be issued to mature before the first day of August, 1907.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That in order to pay the interest on said bonds the County Commissioners shall annually, beginning with their levy laying session in 1905, levy on the assessable property of the county a sufficient amount to pay said interest until the said bonds shall respectively mature; and for the payment of said bonds they shall, beginning with the year 1907, levy on the assessable property of said county the sum of five thousand dollars to pay said bonds, which shall be paid in the order of their serial number, beginning with serial number 1 and in their successive order.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That of the whole issue of said bonds so authorized or so much as may be necessary, the said County Commissioners shall immediately after signing said bonds, as hereinbefore provided, sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, which said sale of said bonds shall be made upon due notice by publication in such news paper or news papers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper and necessary.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That the proceeds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be applied by the County Commissioners of said county for the purchase of such lots and the erection and furnishing of a new Court House and Jail building, at Oakland, the county seat of said county, and for no other purpose; and for the building and furnishing of said Court House and Jail, the said County Commissioners shall contract by sealed bids for which contracts advertisements shall be made in such newspaper or newspapers as the said County Commissioners shall deem proper, giving notice of the time and place of the public opening of such bids, and they shall require such bidder to file with their bids a good and sufficient bond with a surety or sureties to be approved by them in such penalty for the faithful performance of the contract thereunder as they may deem proper; and upon the opening of such bids the said County Commissioners shall award the said contract to the lowest responsible bidders, but they shall have the power to reject any and all bids.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 8th, 1904.

PUBLIC LOCAL LAWS.

To Reimburse School Tax.

CHAPTER 20.

AN ACT to appropriate the sum of two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents out of the public school funds, to reimburse Garrett county for an instalment of State School tax withheld from said county in the year nineteen hundred and three and also to authorize and direct the Comptroller to apportion to said county the instalment known as the March instalment of the state school tax for the year nineteen hundred and four, said instalment being the apportionment made to Garrett county on the 15th day of March in each year. Whereas an instalment of state school tax amounting to the sum two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents, was withheld from Garrett county in the year nineteen hundred and three and said county not being able to keep open its schools for seven and a half months in the year, as required by the school laws of the state, as by said law required to forfeit the March instalment of said school tax for the year nineteen hundred and three, the said inability of said county has been subject to large expenses in the erection of school houses, and the fact that the small population is scattered over a large extent of territory, creating a large number of school houses for the number of pupils required to be taught therein: Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the Comptroller be, and he is hereby directed, to issue his warrant upon the Treasurer of the State in favor of the Board of County School Commissioners of Garrett county for the sum of two thousand one hundred and twelve dollars and ninety-nine cents, said sum, in addition to the amount to which said county is entitled to receive, to be payed out of the public school funds of the state under existing laws.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the Comptroller be and he is hereby authorized and directed to apportion Garrett county its proper proportion of said school tax for the year nineteen hundred and four, known as the March instalment of said school tax to be made by the Comptroller in pursuance of law, on the fifteenth day of March in each year, in the same manner as if the schools of Garrett had been kept open seven and one-half months in the year ending December 31, nineteen hundred and four.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the Board of School Commissioners shall apply the said sums so received by the provisions of this Act to the support of the public schools of said county in the same manner as the other portion of the state school tax received by said county are intended to be applied under the provisions of the existing laws of the state.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 3d, 1904.

Prohibiting Sale of Liquor in Districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12.

CHAPTER 163.

AN ACT to prohibit the granting of licenses for the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in Election Districts Nos 6, 10 and 12 of Garrett county, Maryland.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, Maryland, to issue to any person or persons or corporation a license to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer in election districts Nos. 6, 10 and 12, commonly known as Sang Run, Deer Park and Bittinger districts of Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 18th, 1904.

Prohibiting Sale of Liquor at Bond.

CHAPTER 673.

AN ACT to prohibit the sale of spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Lower Savage School House in the village of Bond, Garrett county, Maryland.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for the Clerk of the Circuit Court of Garrett County, Maryland, to issue license to any person or persons to sell spirituous or fermented liquors or lager beer at any place in Garrett county within three miles of Lower Savage School House, in the village of Bond, Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved April 12th, 1904.

Carrying of Firearms.

CHAPTER 177.

AN ACT to prohibit all persons under fifteen years of age from carrying or having in their possession firearms of any description within the limits of Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for all persons under the age of fifteen years to carry or have in his or her possession any shot gun, rifle, revolver or other firearm of any description within the limits of Garrett county, Maryland.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That any person convicted of violating this Act before any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than twenty dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail for not less than ten nor more than thirty days for each and every offence.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all fines imposed and collected for violation of this Act shall be paid to the County Commissioners of Garrett county to be used by them in the improvement of the public roads of said county.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 25th, 1904.

Against Bringing Indigent Persons Into Garrett County.

CHAPTER 296.

AN ACT to prevent any person from removing and bringing any poor, indigent or insane persons from any state, county or town into Garrett county, with the intent to leave such person a charge and burden upon Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to remove, bring, or entice any poor, indigent or insane person from any state, county or town to Garrett county, with intent to make said Garrett county chargeable with the support of such poor, indigent or insane person, under penalty of a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the Maryland House of Correction for a period of not less than two months nor more than two years, or both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county shall have the power to return and remove such poor, indigent or insane person who shall come into Garrett county for the purpose of charging Garrett county for the support of such persons, to such state, county or town where such poor, indigent or insane persons reside; and the County Commissioners may recover from such person or persons, state, county or town such expenses as incurred by reason of the support and return of such poor, indigent or insane person.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage

Approved April 7th, 1904.

Prof. W. B. Clark Is Enthusiastic Over State Display.

OBTAINS EXCELLENT RESULTS

Exhibit of Minerals, Clays And Other Products Considered The Finest In Palace Of Mines.

The Great Seal of the State, in black and gold upon a blue backgroud, 15 feet in diameter, with the word "Maryland" in letters two feet tall, now hangs in the Palace of Mines at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition so that it can be distinctly seen from any part of the tremendous building. Beneath the Great Seal, covering a floor space of 2,500 square feet and a wall space of 3,500 square feet, is the exhibit of the mineral resources and products of the State, the gathering, installation and arrangement of which were in the hands of Dr. William Bullock Clark, of the Johns Hopkins University.

Dr. Clark returned Thursday from St. Louis, where he had been for the last two weeks getting the State exhibit into shape for the opening day of the big Fair, and he was warmly congratulated by the officials there upon the fact that at the inauguration of the Fair the Maryland display was further advanced than that of any other in the building. In the opinion of Dr. Clark, the exhibit from this State is a most complete one and for a number of reasons will attract wide attention. While the competitition among the States, particularly those within the area known as the Louisiana Purchase, to outshine each other in the display of their mineral wealth is intense, and although Missouri, for instance, is spending $75,000 upon her exhibit and Maryland only $7,500, visitors from the old Commonwealth when they enter the Mines Building will be able to hold up their heads and point to the Great Seal with pride.

In the first place the exhibit is near the entrance and most conspicuously located, and the various minerals and products have been arranged in a way that cannot fail to attract. The building and decorative stones, including Woodstock and Port Deposit and Guilford Granites, Baltimore gneiss, Harford county serpentine, Beaver Dam marble, Seneca sandstone and many other varieties, are combined in tremendous pyramid, the corners of which are extremely handsome. Polished slabs of these stones are shown upon tables and stands, while two huge bowlders in the rough, with one side polished so as to reveal the mineral in the raw as well as the finished product, form features of the display. There is a booth covered with Peach Bottom slate and a large column of coal made up of cubes from the leading mines of the State, including the Consolidation Coal Company, the Black-Sheridan Wilson Company, the Georges Creek Coal and Iron Company, the American Coal Company and others.

The display of clay and clay products is an unusually large one, including potters' clay, fire clay, bricks, tiling and terra cotta. The fire clays are from both the eastern and western sections of the State, and there is a large case of pottery made in Maryland, mainly taken up with the exhibits of D. F. Haines & Son and Edward Bennett & Co. The Union Mining Company from the Mount Savage furnaces, the Baltimore Firebrick Company and others also exhibit clay products. The Edward Bennett Tile Works have likewise contributed largely, and terra-cotta from the Burns & Russell Company is in the display.

The exhibit of iron ores is a particularly interesting one, that from the Muirkirk furnaces, in Prince George's county being specially noteworthy. This iron is of the highest strength and is used by the United States Government for the manufacture of armor-piercing projectiles and gun carriages. Several of these projectiles have been procured from the Watertown arsenal and part of the exhibit.

This ore is specially interesting, as it furnished the chief source of iron in Colonial days, and many of the guns and projectiles of the Continental Army were made from it. It was also largely exported to England.

The geogical exhibit contains rocks, minerals and fossils from each of the geological formations of the State and is of important scientific as well as economic interests.

Another feature of the exhibit will be the highway department, where the types of the materials used as the methods of testing are shown. As the testing laboratory of the highway division is one of the most complete in the country, it was thought wise to exploit it as an illustration of the progressive methods used in Maryland. The exhibit also contains two of the original Mason and Dixon line stones. The crown stone contains upon opposite sides the arms of Lord Baltimore and William Penn, while the other is a milestone, with the letters "M" and "P," representing Maryland and Pennsylvania, upon opposite sides. These stones were taken from the famous quarries on the Isle of Portsmouth, in England, and were brought to this country in 1765, when the English engineers, Mason and Dixon, were engaged by Lord Baltimore and the heirs of William Penn to survey and mark out the dividing line of their possessions.

The walls of the Maryland exhibit are decorated with maps photographs and transparencies showing the distribution of the mineral wealth of the State. Others represent climatic conditions and relative elevations, while others still show the chief features of the drainage of the State.

Dr. Clark says that the Mines Building is twice as large as any former building ever used for the same purpose, and that the whole Exposition is upon a grand and gigantic scale that has never been equaled.

"The Maryland Building," Dr. Clark said, "ought to be completed within two weeks, as the floor and frame work are already up. The Agricultural exhibit from this State will be installed just as soon as it arrives, being expected every day. The geological and mineral display is about three times as large as we had either at Charleston or Buffalo."

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Mr. L. A. Rudisill went to Davis on last Tuesday to inspect a 1900 acre tract of land near that place. The owners were at the Park last week consulting with Mr. Rudisill and on Saturday requested him to accompany them on an inspection trip and meet them at Gorman Tuesday. They contemplate putting this tract of land on the market as a summer resort. The altitude is 3225 feet.

A letter from Dr. Campbell, of Morgantown, W. Va., states that he and family will be at the Park on the 16th inst.

Mrs. Geo. E. Wheatley, of Philadelphia, was a guest of the Assembly house last week. Mrs. W. contemplates summering at the Park.

Mr. Wm. Hocking, of Wheeling, spent Friday and Saturday at the Park. While here he shipped his household goods to Wheeling, where he expects to reside in the future.

Mrs. M. E. Hank, of Washington, D. C, registered at the Romney Cottage last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Richardson, of Piedmont, W. Va. spent Tuesday at the Park.

Letter to G. S. Hamill.

Dear Sir: What's the penalty for making or selling short-measure paint in your state?

And does it make any difference, if three-fourths of the paints are short-measure?

Is seven pints a full-gallon or a fool-gallon?

What's the penalty for making or selling whitewash for paint?

Is whitewash paint, if mixed with a little paint and labeled "Pure mixed paint", or something like that?

But we don't intend to go into the business: We make Devoe lead-and-zinc full-measuae and true.

Yours truly
F. W. Devoe & Co.

DIED.

Mrs. Elizadeth Fike, wife of David Fike, died at her home near the Red House April 29th, 1904, aged 82 years, 10 months and 4 days.

She was born in Fayette county, Pa., June 25, 1821. In 1841 she was married to David Fike, of Somerset county Pa. They moved to the state of Maryland in April, 1852, and lived in the state since that date.

They lived a happy life together for 63 years.

The deceased was a daughter of John Snyder of Fayette county Pa.

She was the mother of 10 children of whom four sons have preceded her to that better world.

She is survived by a sorrowing husband and six children.

The youngest son Solomon resides at Terra Alta, W. Va. The daughters are Mrs. William Haun, Mrs. James Liller, Mrs. Henry Sisler, Mrs. M. S. Wolf and Mrs. Peter Martin all residing in Red House community excepting Mrs. James Liller who resides in West Virginia.

The deceased had 68 garnd children and 76 great grand children.

She became a member of the German Baptist church in 1842 and lived a consistent member for 61 years.

She leaves many friends to mourn her departure.

We dearly loved her and sadly miss her, but have a hope that she has gone to rest.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

In the Circuit Court for Garrett County. No. 1250 Equity.

John E. Winters, Plaintiff, vs. Anna A. Winters, Defendant.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii by the plaintiff from the defendant.

The bill states, that on the 10th day of June, 1900, the plaintiff was married to his wife, the said defendant, in Garrett county, with whom he resided until the 16th day of January, 1901. That the conduct of the plaintiff towards his wife, the said defendant, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and that the said defendant has, without any just cause or reason abandoned and deserted the plaintiff and has declared her intention to live with him no longer; that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years, and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties is beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation and that the said plaintiff and defendant have had no children born to them from said marriage, and that said defendant is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill prays for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief.

It is thereupon this 11th day of May, 1904, ordered, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 17th day of June, 1904, give notice to said defendant of the object and substance of the bill, warning her to appear in this court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 4th day of July, 1904, to show cause if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

DIED.

FREAR.—At the residence of her son, Mr. Harry J. Frear, in Oakland, on Saturday afternoon about two o'clock, after an illness of several months of heart disease, Mrs. Sarah Frear, aged 76 years. The deceased lady has made her home with her son since the death of her husband, which occurred in 1891. She was a thorough Christian lady, a member of the Scientist church for many years. Her remains were taken from Oakland on train No. 12 Sunday evening to Factoryville, Pa., where they were interred Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Frear accompanied the body.

SMITH.—At McKeeseport, Pa., Saturday, May 14th, after a brief illness of acute indigestion, Miss Minnie Smith, aged 33 years. The deceased was a sister of Mr. W. A. Smith, of Hoyes, and was well known and highly esteemed by many residents of Oakland and Garrett county. Miss Smith recently completed a course on diseases of the eye in Chicago, receiving her diploma and afterward entered one of the hospitals in Philadelphia where she was studying to be a trained nurse. She was to have graduated as a nurse three days after she was taken ill. Fearing her disease would take a fatal turn she was removed to McKeesport, where she resided for a number of years, and where death overtook her. Her relatives were notified of her illness and on Friday her brother went to McKeesport, arriving there a few hours before the dissolution occurred. Her remains were brought to Hoyes and on Tuesday the funeral took place, which was conducted in the M. E. church by Rev. D. A. Friend, the pastor. Miss Smith was a member of the church. Her death comes as a sad and sudden blow to her relatives who have the sincere sympathy of the community in which they reside. The interment was made in the family burying ground at Hoyes in the presence of a large and sympathetic assemblage of friends. A more extended notice will appear next week.

NETHKIN.—At the home of his father in Oakland last Friday morning, Harry, son of Mr. Charles Nethkin, aged about thirty years. The deceased for a number of years resided at a point on the West Virginia Central Railway where he was employed and a few years ago married to a most estimable lady who is left to mourn her loss. The funeral of the deceased took place Sunday morning, the interment being made in Oakland.

GARRETT LEATHER COMPANY INCORPORATED

New Concern Will Take Over Plant of the Commonwealth Tanning Co.

HAS A CAPITAL OF $150.000.

Assumes Indebtedness of the Original Company—Plant Will Resume Operations as Soon as Some Needed Repairs Can be Made.

The Garrett Leather Company, which has applied for a charter from the Secretary of the State of West Virginia, for the purpose of conducting a tanning business at Hutton, this county, is composed of the creditors of the Commonwealth Tanning Company, who have assumed the indebtedness of the original corporation and will begin operations at the plant as soon as some necessary repairs can be made.

The officers of the concern are: R. A. Ravenscroft, president; J. T. Carskadon, Keyser, W. Va.; vice president; O. C. Crane, Terra Alta, secretary and treasurer; U. G. Palmer, manager.

The directors are G. T. Barnes, of Fairmont; J. T. Carskadon, of Keyser; O. C. Crane, Terra Alta; C. Grusendorf, of Hutton; C. H. Jennings, of Grantsville; S. A Kendall, of Kendall; U. G. Palmer, of Hutton; Frank Watts, of Frostburg; R. A. Ravenscroft, Fred. A. Thayer and Edward H. Sincell, of Oakland.

The new concern will have a paid-up capital stock of $150,000 and has already made a number of contracts which will keep it in operation several years without interruption.

Suit Against Judge's Estate.

The case of Dr. S. J. Wishard against Mary E. Stake, executrix of the estate of the late Judge Edward Stake, was Tuesday in court at Hagerstown taken from the jury on the ground of insufficient evidence. The plaintiff brought suit for the sum of $406.90 for dental work done since 1883 and for two barrels of cider of the value of $7. The defense claimed that all that part of the work done prior to the three years before the death of Judge Stake was barred by the statute of limitations.

One From Kingwood.

The Kingwood Argus is guilty of the following: "There is a girl at Morgantown who is so bashful that she cannot see a sleeping car without blushing, and she faints at the sight of undressed lumber. But she is hardly as foolish as an old maid at Fairmont, who covers the face of the clock in her bedroom every night before undressing for bed and even has lingerie on the legs of her bedstead. However, there is a sweet young thing at Grafton who will not look at a tree in the winter time for fear she will see a naked limb, and she will not express an opinion fearing to unbosom her mind. But the Clarksburg girl, who is so modest that she prefers a falsehood to the naked truth, rather takes the bakeshop."

On Committee of Notification.

In the account of the Congressional Convention published in these columns last week the name of Mr. Scott T. Jones, who was elected as one of the committee to notify Congressman Pearre of his nomination, was inadvertently omitted.

Mr. Jones will perform the duty in his usual polished and masterly manner, we have no doubt.

Shot a Crane.

Charles Snyder, a well known hunter, residing on the Duke Stanton farm near Grantsville, Md., one day last week shot and wounded a crane that stood six feet in height, and had a spread of wings measuring the same number of feet. George Landis, of West Salisbury, purchased the bird, and is now exhibiting it in his museum.

THE STATE CONVENTION

Held in Baltimore Last Wednesday. —The Resolutions.

The Republican State Convention held at Baltimore Wednesday, May 11, was the most harmonious ever held in that city. There was not a single dissenting voice heard to any motion or suggestion.

Chairman Hanna, in a few well chosen words called the meeting to order and was vigorously applauded.

Mr. Stephen R. Mason of the city committee placed in nomination for presiding officer, Senator Louis E. McComas. Mr. McComas was elected and took his place on the platform. In his eloquent address he commended the Republican party of Maryland, and our chief executive, President Roosevelt, in the highest terms for his gallant and faithful performance of the duties of his office.

Second—Mr. James Ingram, of Baltimore county, and Mr. Charles C. Gorsuch, of Carroll county.

Third—Dr. David W. Jones and Dr. W. S. Booze, Baltimore city.

Fourth—Sheriff W. H. Green and Harry S. Cummings (colored), Baltimore city.

Fifth—Mr. Thomas Parran, of Calvert county, and Hon. A. A. Blakeney of Howard county.

Sixth—Thomas C. Noyes, of Montgomery, and Reno C. Harp, of Frederick.

ELECTORS-AT-LARGE.

Mr. Charles J. Bonaparte, Baltimore city.

Mr. Calvin L. Bretz, Allegany county.

DISTRICT ELECTORS.

First District—Dr. Isaac A. Barber, of Talbot county.

Second—E. M. Allen, Jr., of Harford county.

Third—Dr. George A. Hartman, of Baltimore city.

Fourth—Mr. Robert Ogle, of Baltimore city.

Fifth—State Senator J. Webb Thomas, of the Fourth legislative district of Baltimore.

Sixth—Dr. A. G. Sturgiss, of Garrett county.

A resolution of thanks was extended the National Republican Committee for its selection of Mr. Wm. F. Stone, Collector of the Port of Baltimore, as sergeant-at-arms of the National Convention at Chicago, and was adopted amid rounds of applause. Mr. Stone occupied a rear seat in the convention and was a quiet onlooker.

The resolutions extol the Republican party for the restoration of protection to American labor; for the deliverance of Cuba, and for the advance of American diplomacy abroad. They indorse the administration of President Roosevelt, and approve of the treaty with Cuba; they commend the President for his enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust act; they deplore the absence of our flag from the high seat, and arraign the Democratic party for its recent "Jim Crow" legislative and criminal election laws; they pledge the Republican party of Maryland to the protective tariff with such changes as may be required with changed conditions.

Those from Garrett in attendance were: Sen. U. G. Palmer, of Oakland; N. U. Bond, of Bond; Geo. D. White, of Oakland; W. W. Sweet, of Swanton; Geo. W. Engle, of Bittinger, and Burt Wilson.

The convention was more like a family gathering than a political convention. Perfect harmony reigned throughout the entire proceedings. The same can be said of the District Convention at Rockville, Md., the previous day.

The convention closed at two p. m. and a great many of the delegates took advantage of the kindness of Mr. James L. Kernan, owner of the "Maryland" theatre, to visit the show, Mr. Kernan having sent two hundred passes to be distributed to the delegates.

BITTINGER AND VICINITY

After a very fine week of splendid spring weather, last Sunday came with a snow squall, followed by a heavy frost amounting almost to a freeze.

The building committee met on Monday evening to determine upon the color which should be used in painting the new Lutheran parsonage. Canary yellow was chosen for the ground work, with trimmings of yellow two shades deeper.

The official board of the Mutual Telephone Co., held a meeting here last Friday evening.

A child of Mr. Albert Brenneman met with a painful accident last Monday evening while playing. The child fell and a stick which he held in its mouth was forced into his throat and was broken off, a portion remaining there. Dr. Boyer of Accident, was summonsed.

THE DAWN OF ANOTHER DAY

By W. W. HINES

(Copyright, 1904, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"HIS talents are heaven-sent," said Brierly, in a voice which betokened something near akin to awe, "but certainly the man himself is a beast." And this qualifying clause to his opinion of Randolph, formed that of the whole of Bohemia. It is said that Paul Verlaine wrote the greatest of his religious poems—poems that breathe an atmosphere of tenderness and purity—when in slow process of recovery from the effects of a prolonged course of indulgence in absinthe and similar brain and moral destroying drinks.

It was the other way around with Randolph. For weeks and months he would labor on some picture, always on some religious or semi-religious subject conceived in a spirit of almost superhuman tenderness and devotedness, and upon the completion of the picture he would enter upon a period of wild debauchery that would bring horror to even those hardest old roues who knew him and met him so frequently in that pleasant land of debatable boundaries—Bohemia.

Those of his acquaintances who met in the little cafes around Washington square spoke often of the picture upon which he was at work. Some of them had heard Randolph discuss the idea for the picture, which had its conception in a vision which came to him while lying upon a hospital cot recovering from his last terrific spree. Others had seen the picture itself in its unfinished state, although Randolph did not encourage visitors to come to his somewhat inaccessible studio while he was actually engaged upon a great work, and he was wont to class all his own paintings as great works.

The opinions of the acquaintances were one in form but differently expressed.

"It will be the greatest thing he has ever done—as great in its conception as 'Parsifal,'" said the First Violin, who preferred the Munich beer made from wheat grains.

"It will be the greatest thing he has ever done—as great in its way as Rafael's Madonna," said the little Italian landscape painter, with a sigh of regret that he had not been given by the good God the gift of wielding the brush that depicts great things.

"It will be the greatest thing he has done—as great in its way as Tolstoi's 'Awakening,'" said the little writer of prose.

To this the poet, and all the rest of the Bohemian clique gave their assent, each in comparison with some great work in his own line of artistic endeavor.

And Randolph knew that it was good alike in conception and execution—this picture of his, which was to be called "The Dawn of Another Day."

Trickery, as the followers of the conventional in pictorial art would term it, he had used freely. It was a picture of a soul, and therefore those who cannot see a soul would call the means he had used trickery.

A woman, beautiful as an angel, but her face stamped with the mark of sin, stood by an open window and watched the dawn come over a range of eastern hills. Commonplace enough the picture, but Randolph, by some subtle magic of his own, told all the story plainly. As one looked at the picture longer, one felt its power more. And gradually one read on the face of the woman a dawn of that purity which is not born of ignorance of sin, but of high resolve to blot it out from life if not from memory.

It was a characteristic of Randolph that he had selected for his model a woman of the lowest class, a creature who had been his companion in the debaucheries of the spree which had preceded the conception of the picture. That she, his model, loved him, was nothing to the artist. Sir Galahad himself might not be purer than Beverly Randolph during the period in which he was actually at work upon a picture. The woman was to him a model and absolutely nothing more. He had been awake to the fact that she was a woman who loved him before the picture began to take shape, and indeed, in his own way, I think he loved the woman a little. She was more beautiful than most of her kind, and it was quite on the cards that he would again awaken to the fact that she was a living, loving woman when the picture was completed.

For the woman it was a different matter. She had consented to pose for the picture because she could refuse Randolph nothing that he desired. She loved him in the way of her kind very devotedly, and the assumption of indifference on his part during the posings she endured only for the sake of the demonstrativeness which she believed would come afterward.

Painting with feverish persistence and supporting himself on absinthe and brandy, Randolph showed no consideration for the feelings of his model. Work was stopped only for brief intervals while the light lasted and during these periods he made no demonstration of his affection for her, indeed showed no consciousness of her presence within the studio beyond a few conventional remarks.

But all things must have an ending, and bye and bye "The Dawn of Another Day" drew near to its completion. With every second Randolph painted with more feverish strokes. His face was pale and drawn in the lines of the ascetic. One who did not know him might well have mistaken him for some young churchman with a gift for painting saints. But the fire of absinthe was in his eye and the model who sat upon her dais knew that soon his eye would glow with a keen appreciation of the fact that she was a woman loving and wanting love—and the thought made her heart beat faster in a pleasant anticipation.

So the picture was finished and with the completion of the last stroke, the artist sank again to the mere man, with the fire of love and absinthe in his veins. The model had never been less nor more than woman, and she flew to his waiting arms, the while their lips met for the first time since the outline of the picture had been blocked in charcoal on the waiting canvas.

The two, artist and model, stood before the picture.

"How do you like it, little one? Don't know yourself, do you?" asked Randolph. The look of the saint was gone from his face and in its stead had come that of a man, heated with drink and hungry with desire. His lips had lost their ascetic curves and were now so full and trembling that they seemed satyr-like.

The woman did not answer him, but gazed only at the picture—raptly.

"Come, sweetheart, look at me, not at the picture," said the man who had been the artist.

But the woman answered never a word, rather cowering as though to withdraw herself from his embrace. The man looked down at her and noted a strange commingling of joy and terror on her face, something that, as the artist he had been, he would have understood at once, but that, as the man he was, he did not understand except to resent.

"Do I—did I look like that to you?" she asked presently, in a hushed voice resonant of awe and wonder.

"You did look like that to me while I was the artist. Now you look different since I am merely a man," answered Randolph, indifferently and somewhat impatiently.

Resolutely the woman pushed him away from her and gazed at the picture. Then she silently left the room, repulsing Randolph, who would have followed her to detain her.

So the man who had been the artist was left alone with the picture, and he spent as much as ten or fifteen minutes in musing on the idiosyncrasies of the feminine sex. Then he went out to get more absinthe, and in the charms of a rather miscellaneous feminine society, he promptly forgot all about the woman who had been his model.

The woman who had been the model did not forget. She remembered always the picture as the means of her salvation.

And all this points some sort of a moral to those who can find it.

CARRIES HIS OWN BEDDING.

This Gentleman Refuses Hotel Sheets and Pillows and Asks That His Own Be Used.

"A room, please, with bath and without bed clothes," said Harrison Grant Jackson, as he walked into the office of a hotel at Louisville the other night.

"I beg your pardon, sir. I don't quite understand," said the clerk.

"Well, my proposition is simple enough. Give me a room with bath and without sheets or feather bed."

Mr. Jackson is a tall, thin, antiquated gentleman of many years. He looks strange, and is strange.

The reason for his peculiar desires in the way of rooms and trappings is easily explained. In his own words, Mr. Jackson tells his story:

"Fourteen years ago I wrapped myself up in the dirty covers of a bed in a little town in Tennessee. Tired and sleepy, I soon began to doze, but my slumbers were doomed to be neither long nor peaceful, for presently I heard something moving about in the feather bed on which I was sleeping. It was a mouse. In my anger I ripped open the whole bed stuff and found a whole bunch of mice.

"I had to stay in that town two weeks. I was distressed, and in my woe I went out and bought a feather bed, a lot of sheets and pillows. From that day to this I have carried those bed clothes with me. I carry big trunks, and in the bottom of one of these trunks I tuck away my bed clothes when traveling. When I retire I know just what I am wrapping around me. Say, do you know that's a great luxury?"

Not a Case in Point.

Notwithstanding President Roosevelt's comments on race suicide, says the Washington Star, the Mormon who comes to Washington and expects to find sympathy by bragging about his large family is likely to be disappointed.

No woman with a grain of sense ever lets a man gather from her remarks that his character offers any intricacies to her comprehension.

PREPARING FOR AN EXAM.

How a Wise Old Guy Got Lots of Information for a Son Who Wasn't Too Bright.

Philadelphia (Pa.) Special.

At a dinner of the Pennsylvania Society of the Sons of the Revolution, George F. Baer, the president of the Reading railroad, said:

"There is an old man up the state whom I can't help admiring. This old man, in a recent letter to our main office, asked for rates, distances, time and so forth for many kinds of important freight over our principal lines. The letter probed deep into our traffic business; it was indicative of a keen mind; plainly the writer, provided he got fair treatment, would become a valuable patron of the line.

"So we sent, post haste, one of our brightest young traffic agents to see him. The agent got off at his station, and had a walk of five miles through the cold to reach his house. Arriving, with some disappointment, at a small farm, the agent took from his pocket the long list of rates that three clerks had spent half the night in compiling, and he said to the old man:

"'I have come, sir, from the Reading offices to answer your recent letter in person. Here on these papers you will find each of your questions treated in detail. May we hope to do some business with you?'

"The farmer looked over the list of answers with a grunt of satisfaction.

"'You're from the railroad, eh?' he said. 'Well, you can't hope for no business from me, but I'm obliged to you, just the same, for all this information. It's for my son. You see, he's got to take an examination next month, and a lot of it will be about railroads. So I thought I'd get some railroad facts first hand.'"

THE LATEST FAVORITE SON.

Nebraska Democrats Urge the Nomination of Judge J. J. Sullivan for Vice President.

Lincoln (Neb.) Special.

Nebraska, although a comparatively young state, always has been "long" on favorite sons. It has given Bryan to the democracy, and this year the republicans are urging John Lee Webster, of Omaha, for the vice presidential nomination. The democrats, ever on the alert to keep pace with their political opponents, have concluded to run Hon. J. J. Sullivan, former chief justice of the state supreme court, for the vice presidency, and the state central committee has formally indorsed his candidacy.

Mr. Sullivan has made a brilliant reputation as a lawyer and a jurist in JUDGE J. J. SULLIVAN.

(Choice of Nebraska's Democrats for Vice President.)

Nebraska. He was a candidate for reelection last fall, and came very near defeating J. B. Barnes, the republican nominee. The returns showed that Mr. Sullivan had polled 17,000 more than his party vote. He took no part in the campaign, and declared that a supreme judge should not participate in a political scramble. With Mr. Sullivan as a vice presidential nominee, Mr. Bryan would not dare to bolt the ticket, according to the view of Nebraska politicians.

They Waited Eleven Years.

Jacob served Leban faithfully 14 years for the great love he had for Rachel. His record for faithfulness is almost equaled by Augustus W. Saunders, of Atlanta, Ga., who worked and waited 11 years for Miss Helen King, of Morristown, N. J. His patience was rewarded last week, for they were married. In 1893 Mr. Saunders was a patient in the Morristown hospital, and Miss King was his nurse. They fell in love with each other, but he was poor and she agreed to wait for him. He entered the employment of the New York & New Jersey Telephone company, and finally, a short time ago, was given a permanent position at Atlanta. His wedding soon followed.

EXILE FROM POLAND.

COL. JOHN SOBIESKI IS A PICTURESQUE CHARACTER.

Has Served His Adopted Country in War and Peace—Woman Suffrage and Prohibition Are His Hobbies.

Bloomington (Ill.) Special.

The protecting bosom of the United States shelters no more picturesque character than Col. John Sobieski, a Polish exile, who for 56 years has made his home in this country and for 20 years or more in this city. His life history reads like a romance and he is in many respects one of the most remarkable men in public life to-day. He was born in Warsaw, Poland, September 10, 1842, and was the only son of Count John Sobieski, who lost his life in the revolution of Poland in 1846. One of his ancestors was John Sobieski, who reigned from 1640 to 1696 as king of Poland under the title of John III. He was one of Poland's greatest warriors. Two Counts Sobieski, the father and grandfather of Col. Sobieski, met their deaths at the hands of Russian headsmen because of their devotion to their native land. Col. Sobieski's father, who was the owner of 15,000 serfs and also of rich mineral lands, was the leader of the rebellion of 1848 against Russian rule. The revolution was unsuccessful and Count Sobieski was imprisoned and finally met his death on the block, and his devoted wife and the boy were forthwith banished from Poland. They went to Austria, but the feeling in that monarchy was hostile to Polish patriots, and from there the pair proceeded to free Switzerland, where they were warmly received by the colony of Polish exiles who had preceded them. Afterwards Mrs. Sobieski and her son went to Italy and later to England, from which country, in 1855, a midshipman smuggled young Sobieski on board ship and brought him to free America.

On arrival in the United States the military talent of the young man asserted itself and in the spring of 1855, a short time after his arrival here, and when but 13 years of age, he enlisted in the United States army as a bugler, being too young to serve as a soldier. He was assigned to the First artillery, under command of Capt. John B. Magruder, who afterward became a general in the confederate army. When the civil war was declared the First artillery was assigned to duty with the Army of the Potomac. Col. Sobieski was assigned to Gen. Fitz John Porter's division and was a great admirer of that commander and Gen. McClellan. Col. Sobieski served with distinction in the battles of Bull Run, Yorktown, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, Gaines Mill, Frazer's Farm, Malvern Hill, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. At the latter battle he commanded a battery of artillery that rendered most effective service against the legions of Lee. He almost paid for his bravery with his life at Gettysburg, being severely wounded, a bullet passing through his body. Other famous conflicts in which he was engaged were those of the Wilderness, Petersburg, Five Forks and Appomattox. Following the surrender of Lee, Col. Sobieski enlisted in Washington under the banner of the Mexican revolutionists and was commissioned a colonel by the republican government. He left for Mexico with a party of soldiers, but all were arrested at New Orleans by Gen. Phil Sheridan.

He afterward released them. Sobieski soon afterward reached Mexico and was made chief of staff of the patriot army of Jaurez and helped drive Maximilian from his throne. After the execution of the emperor Col. Sobieski returned to the United States and settled in Minnesota; and then, according to the Chicago Chronicle, he was elected to the lower house of the legislature and afterward became state senator. In the legislature he introduced three measures which have been his life work to sustain—viz., the removal of sex as a qualification of the voter, the abolishment of capital punishment by the death penalty and the prohibition of the liquor traffic. After studying law Col. Sobieski ascended the lecture platform and for 35 years has been speaking upon various subjects, being probably one of the best known men upon the platform to-day. He has lectured extensively through Great Britain and Canada. A soldier of fortune in two wars, and in whose veins flows the royal blood of Poland, Col. Sobieski is a unique character and a man of whom the United States, his adopted country, can well feel proud.

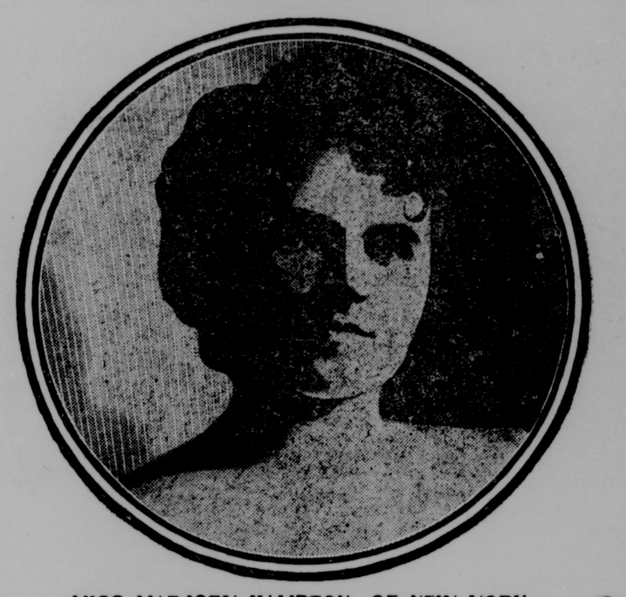
"PE-RU-NA TONES UP THE SYSTEM IF TAKEN IN THE SPRING."

SAYS THIS BEAUTIFUL YOUNG GIRL.



MISS MARJORY HAMPTON, OF NEW YORK.

Miss Marjory Hampton, 2616 Third Avenue, New York City, writes:

"Peruna is a fine medicine to take any season of the year. Taken in the spring it tones up the system and acts as a tonic, strengthening me more than a vacation. In the fall and winter I have found that it cures colds and catarrh and also find that it is invaluable to keep the bowels regular, acting as a gentle stimulant on the system. In fact, I consider it a whole medicine chest."—Miss Marjory Hampton.

PURE BLOOD.

Blood Impurities of Springtime—Cause, Prevention and Cure.

Dr. Hartman's medical lectures are eagerly scanned by many thousand readers.

One of the most timely and interesting lectures he ever delivered was his recent lecture on the blood impurities of spring.

The doctor said in substance that every spring the blood is loaded with the effete accumulations of winter, deranging the digestion, producing sluggishness of the liver, overtaxing the kidneys, interfering with the action of the bowels and the proper circulation of the blood.

This condition of things produces what is popularly known as spring fever, spring malaria, nervous exhaustion, that tired feeling, blood thickening and many other names.

Sometimes the victim is bilious, dyspeptic and constipated; sometimes he is weak, nervous and depressed; and again he may have eruptions, swellings and other blood humors. Whichever it is, the cause is the same—effete accumulations in the blood.

Nothing is more certain within the whole range of medical science than that a course of Peruna in early springtime will perfectly and effectually prevent or cure this almost universal affection.

Everybody feels it in some degree.

A great majority are disturbed considerably, while a large per cent. of the human family are made very miserable by this condition every spring.

Peruna will prevent it if taken in time.

Peruna will cure it if taken as directed.

Peruna is the ideal spring medicine of the medical profession.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

The Bicycle and Health

By JOHN SMITHSON.

IT has surprised a good many people to see the signs of renewed interest in bicycling. The appearance of old-time advertising in national mediums is no doubt responsible for the underlying feeling that the wheel is coming back into more popular use; but apart from the business interests which are being forcefully brought to the front, there is a silent but very strong influence working for the restoration of an exercise which has accomplished so much for the human race.

The past few years have been marked by the growth and development of what may properly be called the physical culture fad. All sorts of correspondence schools for the betterment of physical condition have sprung into being, and some of them have accomplished great good for those whose sedentary habits deprive them of the benefits which accompany most of the outdoor sports and pastimes.

To teach the average man and woman how to preserve health; to get them interested in proper bathing, proper eating and rational muscular work, is to take a good step toward the lengthening of days of happiness and usefulness. I can speak with frankness on this point because the fad came home to me and resulted in a course of physical training. From the time I began to exercise and bathe by rule my sleep improved, my head cleared and my efficiency as a worker was materially increased.

The instruction in the course called attention to the superiority of exercise in the open where pure oxygen would be forcefully pumped into the lungs, resulting in a thorough refreshment of the entire system.

From Dr. Seaver and Dr. Luther Halsey Gulick, who is at the head of physical training in all the public schools of Greater New York, I learned that the exercise which was taken with pleasurable environment, like the play of children, was accompanied by the loss of very little nerve force, while the work which called on the will power, gymnasium courses and the like, resulted in a larger consumption of nerve tissue. As my chief ailment had been one of a nervous nature, especially as a sequence to unusual fatigue, I asked for and received a special prescription, which was—bicycling. I rode as a supplement to the courses already referred to and found the results even better than predicted.

A general inquiry among friends and acquaintances in the medical fraternity disclosed the fact that doctors are again prescribing the bicycle as the best therapeutic agent yet discovered. How often we look for the "spring of perpetual youth" in a far distant land, and behold! it is at our door.

Idealism in Education

By PROF. EDWARD A. McDOWELL,
Late of the Department of Music, Columbia University.

UNLESS the students leave their colleges—and in this I include those for women—with some trace of idealism and some love for art, the university is not complete, and the higher education is lamentably lacking in one thing that is very important in the world, and that is idealism. A great majority of college courses tends mainly toward fitting students for the material battle of life.

The fine arts, with their ideal suggestion, are not considered necessary for this and are consequently neglected in universities. I believe that music should never be treated alone, but only in conjunction with the fine arts, namely, belles lettres, literature, painting, sculpture, and architecture. The knowledge of these when a man leaves college need not be technical and exact in every way, but it should be general knowledge of such a character that he can recognize the poetic inspiration of the best in art.

My scheme for the betterment of this condition is to make the entering examination include the fine arts. It may be very broad and not at all technical. Then, again, no man should be allowed to get his degree of B. A. without having taken courses in the fine arts.

Milk and Tuberculosis

By DR. WALTER S. METCALF, Eminent Chicago Physician.

FROM milk often comes tuberculosis. This I think has been scientifically demonstrated beyond doubt. For this reason extreme care against the furtherance of this dread disease by infected milk should be urged by every physician and compelled by law.

Patients take the milk diet when their power of resistance is at its lowest. Few mothers realize that oftentimes they feed their babies and children milk that comes direct from an infected cow. For this very reason it has been demonstrated that one cow's milk has often proved of greater harm than could have come had the milk from several cows been mixed.

According to bacteriological investigation the bacilli of bovine tuberculosis are identical with the human baccili, although the disease is anatomically different in man.

What is to be done to stamp out this source of infection? has often been asked. One efficient method would be to have every cow giving milk examined annually by the tuberculin test. Let a certificate be issued setting forth the healthy condition of the animal, and if it is an infected animal, let it be isolated from the other stock and killed.

Agnosticism an Intellectual Weakness

By RABBI SILVERMAN, of the Temple Emanuel, New York.

THE Ingersollian type has almost disappeared from polite society. There is a tacit understanding that religion is an evidence of culture and refinement and that it has a wholesome effect upon the development of man.

There never was a time when men of all shades of belief were as interested in religious study, in worship and practice, as to-day. The religious press has increased and is successful financially. Theological institutions have improved and are better endowed. It is no unusual spectacle to see rich men who devote their energies all the week to making money spend their Sundays in teaching Bible classes.

These evidences and others that could be presented demonstrate that in our own day the ministers have certainly not failed. They are a great social and even political influence, for they exert that silent ethical force that is effective in all social and government reform.

A FORTUNE FOR PROPHETS.

Senator Bard Wants Government to Give $150,000 to Successful Weather Predictors.

Washington (D. C.) Special.

Anyone who can find out what causes the weather, and apply his knowledge to forecasting what the weather will be for 30 days at a time, can get $150,000 from the United States government, if a bill introduced by Senator Bard, of California, becomes a law. This bill offers $150,000 in two prizes, one of $100,000 and the other of $50,000, for the discovery of the physical basis of meteorology.

Even government weather experts admit that they do not know what causes the weather. They can tell with some accuracy what the weather will be for 24 hours, because they can find out certain things about the weather conditions surrounding points for which predictions are made, but they can't say what is going to happen next.

HON. THOMAS R. BARD.
(California Senator Who Is the Friend of Weather Sharps.)

There are scientists in Washington who believe that there is a fixed basis of the weather, and that once this basis is discovered, it will be possible, say on May 1, to predict exactly what the weather will be for every day that month, including rainfall, temperature, and all other things necessary to be known for the benefit of agriculture, horticulture or commerce.

These scientists have consulted with Senator Bard, and the result is this bill, which provides that the president shall appoint three men as a board of meteorology, to be selected from expert meteorologists nominated from or by Yale, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, Leland Stanford and Chicago universities.

The board will conduct the contest for the prizes. The prize of $100,000 will go to the person who produces the best results as to temperature, which shall include the discovery of the physical basis of meteorology and the best system of forecasting temperature. The prize of $50,000 will go to the best discovery in predicting rainfall.

This is not to be a guessing match, because each contestant must select three different localities of varying climates, and predict the exact weather that will visit these three localities every day, making his predictions for 30 days in advance, and keeping them up for six consecutive months. Then the contestant must go before the board and tell how he did it. His explanation must be upon scientific principles, or the experts will not award the prize to him.

TOLD ABOUT MISS LEITER.

Rumor Has It That Former Chicago Belle Is Engaged to Marry Lord Kitchener.

Chicago Special.

Is Daisy Leiter, of Chicago, to become Lady Kitchener? This is the society rumor that is heard in Chicago, London and several European capitals. In St. Petersburg the report has gained such credence that it is understood that the famous African conqueror and the Chicago woman had already been married, making Lord Kitchener brother-in-law to Lord Curzon, viceroy of India.

Since Kitchener won fame as a leader in Egypt, South Africa and India, his name has repeatedly been connected with that of famous women, actresses, heiresses, and other women of note, while Miss Leiter has been similarly favored with reported engagements.

The Nove Vremya, St. Petersburg's leading organ, in commenting on the rumored engagement, which the writer evidently thought had reached the marriage stage, says:

"Two American millionaires have changed the destinies of India. Since Lord Curzon became Lord Kitchener's brother-in-law, their personalities seem to have been merged. Curzon spoke with the words of Kitchener on the glacis theory, and Kitchener adopted the policy of Curzon in sending an alleged diplomatic mission into Thibet."

WAR REMINISCENCES

TAKEN INTO CAPTIVITY.

Results of a Very Daring Enterprise Just After the Battle of Gettysburg.

Capt. Abraham Jones, relates a writer in the American Tribune, commanding about 100 men of the First New York cavalry, known as Lincoln's cavalry, dashed into a strong column of Lee's army, at Greencastle, Pa., and captured 700 prisoners and 200 wagons. Being in the extreme front, and failing to exercise proper discretion, I rode too far within the confederate lines, and was captured. When I surrendered I was near a battery. A colonel said: "To charge a battery single-handed is certainly a gallant act. I wish you belonged to my command." I replied that I thanked God I was not a confederate. No other member of my regiment was captured. My captors divested me of hat, boots—in fact, of about everything except my pants and handkerchief. I walked barefooted from Greencastle, Pa., to Staunton, Va. Of course, I became tired, it being a long and weary way to travel with bleeding feet. I was assured that if I failed to keep up with the procession, a bayonet would be run through me. I gave one of my captors a five-dollar gold piece to get me half a loaf of bread. He cheerfully accepted the gold, but failed to deliver the bread; thereupon, in sudden heat and passion, I seized his gun and assaulted him, giving him a pair of very black eyes. They condemned me to be shot, but when Gen. Imboden learned that I had given the fellow my money, for which I had received nothing in return, he remitted the sentence, saying my offense was a pardonable one. Rejoining the column of prisoners, the most of whom had been taken at Gettysburg, I resumed the march "On to Richmond."

After a brief stay at Libby prison, we were transferred to Belle Isle, where Lieut. Boisseux was in charge. On the second day there, we were relieved of all our valuables, money and watches, especially. I had a few dollars in my pocketbook, which I threw back over the dead line, at the same time calling Lieut. Boisseux a thief. Infuriated, he seized his gun, and would have run me through with the bayonet, had not one of the guards interfered in my behalf. However, he gave me a violent kick, and ordered me to go after the pocketbook. Instead of going, I called to the boys on the other side to throw it over to me, which they did. When the lieutenant found there was little wealth in the pocketbook, he was evidently disappointed, plainly showing that he was disgusted with me for not having a more plethoric wallet.

However, when he ordered a thorough investigation of my scant habiliments, the money I had sewed up in my pants was revealed to his rapacious gaze, and, of course, he eagerly took it.

The prisoners were permitted to bathe in the James river, and Lieut. Boisseux, treating me with distinguished consideration, put me in charge of detachments of bathers, my compensation being extra rations. He ordered me not to let more than 40 go into the water at one time. Again, perversely insubordinate, I let out from 75 to 80, and gradually increased the number to 150. After two weeks' duty at the "bathing resort," Boisseux, probably afraid I would take the entire encampment "in swimming," transferred me to the commissary department. My duty was to go on the boat to Richmond for bread, a ration of which was about enough for a two-year-old child to eat at one meal. In addition to the bread a little bean soup was served—one or two beans in a cup of liquid, that represented a dead horse or mule.

WOULD HAVE RUN ME THROUGH.

My sojourn at Belle Isle was in July and August. When a detachment of prisoners went out, August 25, 1863, Lieut. Boisseux told me to accompany them, although my name was not on the list for exchange. He sent me along as an "extra," because he had insulted me, and I had had the courage to defend myself.

I well remember the "red-headed sergeant at the gate." I think he was killed when our troops entered Richmond.

Punishment by Proxy.

A mother recently brought her little boy to school for the first time, and she said to the teacher:

"This little boy is very delicate, as he is afther a fit of harmonya on the loongs; but if he does anything bould—and I know he will—bate the wan next to him an' 'twill frighten him."—London Tit-Bits.

SECY. STANTON'S CHIEF SPY

Some Interesting Events of the War Career of the Late Col. William P. Wood.

Col. William P. Wood, a veteran of the Mexican and civil wars, who died recently in Washington, was one of the most trusted of Secretary of War Stanton's secret agents, says a writer in the New York World. He was superintendent of the old capitol prison, and at one time he was the head of a secret-service system, in close touch with all parts of the south through contraband or underground mail systems.

Many prospective movements of the southern armies first became known in this manner, as, for instance, Lee's movement into the north, which culminated in the battle of Gettysburg. Most of these underground systems carried the mail from the confederate states to Canada, but most of the important letters were transcribed at the old capitol prison, before they ever reached their destination. It was by this method that the machinations of the Knights of the Golden Circle and other secret societies in the interest of the confederacy were watched.

When Stanton was made secretary of War, Col. Wood was at once called to the war department, where a comprehensive confmission was given him in Stanton's own handwriting, to have full charge of the prison without interference from the military authorities, except in a general way. Wood organized about 40 of his friends early in April, 1861, into a company of scouts. He always asserted that he, with ten of his scouts, was the first armed party of federals that invaded southern territory. He often crossed the Potomca at night with ten or a dozen of these scouts, loaded down with firearms and ammunition, for the purpose of annoying the confederate pickets stationed along the Potomac around Arlington Heights, by keeping up a fusillade sufficient to make them think a whole regiment was coming.

Probably the most notable feat that Col. Wood performed was the exchange of civilian prisoners of the federals and confederates at Richmond, Va., and Salisbury, N. C. Many prisoners of southern sympathies, natives of Washington, Maryland and Virginia, had been confined for long terms in the old capitol prison and Carroll place, while the same was true of outspoken federal sympathizers in Richmond and other cities of the south. About 150 confederate prisoners were placed aboard the steamer John A. Warner, under a small guard of the famous Pennsylvania bucktails, with Col. Wood in charge.

Although John A. Warner was stopped for a time by the United States military authorities on the ground that Col. Wood had no authority to proceed with his prisoners, he soon took matters into his own hands, armed the prisoners, cowed the guards, and, getting steam up, proceeded toward Richmond, in spite of all orders.

When Col. Wood was at Salisbury a general telegraphed to Stanton complaining of Wood's actions, and stating that he would not obey orders. Stanton telegraphed back "If he does not obey orders, 'shoot him on the spot,'" quoting Dix's famous flag orders in a sarcastic way.

Wood made several trips to Richmond during the civil war, either on secret service or for Lincoln.

He always said he was the only person who knew the whole of the inside history of the Booth conspiracy against Lincoln. At first it consisted only of a crazy plan to kidnap Lincoln and take him to Richmond. This plan was concocted at a meeting place in a boarding house on the corner of F and Ninth streets, northwest; here, in which Col. Wood rented a room for a number of months, where he occasionally slept or employed some one else to do so, in order to keep watch upon the proceedings. One of the maddest of the crowd that met here was one Payne, a Mosby guerrilla, who had been captured and brought to Washington.

Payne took the oath of allegiance to the United States and quit the guerrilla business, so he was discharged from the old Capitol prison with exchange, and remained in Washington. Their plans for the capture of Lincoln were always known in advance, and their designs were thwarted.

According to Col. Wood's narrative, the plot to assassinate Lincoln was not 36 hours old when Booth carried it out. He believed that Booth grew tired of the kidnaping plans, and suddenly hit upon assassination.

Wood obtained the confessions of Mrs. Sarratt and Payne. He always maintained that Mrs. Sarratt was innocent of any part in the conspiracy.

RHEUMATISM
Bone or Back Pains, Swollen Joints
CURED
THROUGH THE BLOOD
By Botanic Blood Balm (B. B. B.)

TO PROVE IT, B.B.B. SENT FREE. We want every reader of this paper who has rheumatism to send us his or her name. We will send them by return mail a sample of Botanic Blood Balm, the wonderful blood remedy, which has cured, to stay cured, more old deep-seated, obstinate cases of rheumatism than all other remedies, doctors, hot springs or liniments combined. Botanic Blood Balm kills the uric acid poison in the blood, in its place giving pure red, nourishing blood, sending a rich, tingling flood of warm blood direct to the paralyzed nerves, bones and joints, giving warmth and strength just where it is needed, and in this way making a perfect cure. B.B.B. has cured hundreds of cases where the sufferer has been doubled up for years, or where the joints had been swollen so long they were almost brittle and perfectly rigid and stiff, yet B.B.B. unlimbered the joints, straightened out the bent back and made a perfect, lasting cure after all other remedies had failed.

Leading Symptoms.
Bone pains, sciatica, or shooting pains up and down the leg, aching back or shoulder blades, swollen joints or swollen muscles, difficulty in moving around so you have to use crutches; blood thin or skin pale; skin itches and burns; shifting pains; bad breath, etc. Botanic Blood Balm [B. B. B.] will remove every symptom, give quick relief from the first dose and permanently cure in a few weeks' time.

Weak, Inactive Kidneys.
One of the causes of Rheumatism is due to kidneys and bladder. Pains in the loins and a feeling of a dull, heavy weight in lower parts of the Bowels, urinous taste in mouth or disagreeable odor of the urine are some of the leading symptoms. For this trouble there is no better medicine than B. B. B. It stimulates all the nerves of the Kidneys into action, opens up every channel, resulting in healthy natural flow of urine, the passing off of the uric acid and all other diseased matter, and a lasting cure made. B.B.B. makes the kidneys and bladder strong and healthy.

OUR GUARANTEE.—Take a large bottle of Botanic Blood Balm (B.B.B.) as directed on label, and when the right quantity is taken a cure is certain, sure and lasting. If not cured your money will promptly be refunded without argument.

FOR CONGRESS:

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

of Allegany County.

HON. GEORGE A. PEARRE.

Hon. George A. Pearre has again been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Sixth Congressional District. He will certainly be elected because he is an able, upright and excellent gentleman. He is a leader in the body of national Representatives, and his brilliancy and intelligence sheds luster on the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland. Since he has been in Congress he has been a representative of all the people of his district. He has been fair and impartial in the discharge of his duties and no man has failed to receive a hearing and his earnest assistance no matter what was his political belief. Colonel Pearre has been most conscientious in the discharge of his duties. It is often thought by many that the duties of a Congressman are light and that the office is a sinecure. Some Congressmen can get through a session of Congress with little or no effort. A striking instance of a man doing nothing is the leading candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, William R. Hearst of New York. But members of the national legislative body who are conscientious and endeavor to discharge all the duties of their office must labor long and hard. Colonel Pearre has done this and done it at a great cost to himself. Today he is confined in a hospital suffering from physical and nervous exhaustion, a condition brought about by his close application to duty during the recent term of Congress. He worked night and day, contrary to the advice and orders of his physician, with the result that he is now just recovering from a most depressing and trying spell of illness.

Throughout the length and breadth of the Sixth district of Maryland Colonel Pearre is honored and admired. He is held in the same high esteem by the members of the Congress, and when he rises on the floor of the House of Representatives to discuss a question he commands the same attention and respect as he does when he appears upon the hustings in his own district. The citizens of the Sixth Maryland would have to look far and wide for an abler and more satisfactory representative than Colonel Pearre. His re-election for these reasons is assured aside from the fact that this is a strong Republican district.

Distinguished looking, able and eloquent, Colonel Pearre is the ideal representative of the people. Fair, broadminded and approachable, he is the guardian of the interests of the Sixth district of Maryland an important factor in the national government and a pillar of strength to the grand and splendid policies of the Republican party which have done so much for the welfare, prosperity and happiness of this nation.

The Morning Herald congratulates Colonel Pearre on his renomination. The action of the convention reflects the sentiment of the voters of the Sixth district, and on November 8 they wil confirm it by re-electing him for another term. As long as he consents to stand as a tribune of the people just that long will the people select him for that purpuse.—Hagerstown Herald.

QUEER THINGS IN THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

The Hearst boom for the Presidency has assumed formidable proportions, and with the hundred votes pledged to his support at the end of last week, he is in position to demand a hearing at St. Louis. In fact, the promoter of yellow journals has the lead on the Democratic side. The Hearst boom is in every way a personally conducted campaign with plenty of money as the chief factor.

Mr. Hearst is not basing his claims to the Presidency upon his record as a member of Congress. Collier's Weekly publishes a tabulated statement which shows that the figure the notorious New York representative cuts in Congress is principally zero. "Mr. Hearst makes no speeches," says Collier's, "no one knows what his ideas may be except, perhaps, the men whose brains he has hired to run his newspapers. He is a member of the House of Representatives, but he is rarely seen there, and he has never made a speech on the floor of the House. His maiden speech was made on April 23 to the House Judiciary Committee, which had called on Mr. Hearst to appear before it to explain one of his resolutions. Mr. Hearst read his explanation to the committee in the committee's chamber. The curiosity of the House as to whether Mr. Hearst could make a speech was therefore not gratified. During the [illegible] months that Mr. Hearst has served five [illegible] of Congress, and during as a member of Congressional sittings, the activity of Mr. Hearst, Representative of the Eighth New York District, may be summed up in this way:

Speeches delivered	0
Incidental remarks on the floor	0
Motions or points of order made	0
Reports submitted	0
Petitions and papers presented	0
Resolutions introduced	1
Bills introduced	5

"No report has ever been circulated in Washington that Mr. Hearst was prevented from attending the sessions of the House on account of illness or accident. He represents 228,000 constituents—more than the combined population of Arizona and Nevada—and he has made no explanation of his legislative inactivity. The Democratic party is unfortunate. For the past eight years it has been made ridiculous with Mr. Bryan and his 16 to one ideas, and as soon as the Nebraska statesman becomes quiet, the party is humiliated with [illegible] the yellow journal candidate. There are queer things in the Democratic party.

IN REPLY to a request from the state tax commissioner, Attorney General Bryan rendered an opinion, in which he held that railroad companies must pay a franchise tax on their gross receipts from whatever source the income may be derived. Some of the subsidiary lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad company had objected to the payment of the tax on the money received for carrying the mails.

Another opinion construed chapter 486 of the acts of 1902, which provides that when securities are held in trust the taxes on these shall be paid to the local authorities at the residence of the beneficiary and not at that of the trustee. Mr. Bryan's opinion reads as follows:

"If both trustee and beneficiary are residents of the state, the local tax is to be paid to the local authorities of the residence of the beneficiary.

"If the beneficiary is a non-resident, and the trustee is a resident, then the tax is to be paid to the local authorities at the residence of the trustee.

"If the trustee is a non-resident, the property is to be assessed as if owned by the trustee, and the tax is to be paid at the principal office of the corporation.

"If both trustee and beneficiary are non-residents, the tax is to be paid at the office of the corporation."

MR. WILLIAM R. HEARST has promptly declared that he will accept whoever is nominated and whatever is done at St. Louis.

How about Mr. Bryan? Mr. Bryan in his speeches and paper, and Mr. Hearst in his papers and speech, has been declaring for years that the trusts and big corporations must be hunted by Federal law and the Federal troops and the Federal power. Judge Parker, his friends and the New York State Democrat platform propose nothing of the sort. They leave the trusts to the States—which are powerless.

When this is done at St. Louis, how are Mr. Bryan and Mr. Hearst going to explain to those who believe in them, and there are such, that nothing is going to be done? Can Mr. Bryan afford to take this position? Either he has been in earnest or he has not. If he has, he must go on and bolt. If he has not been in earnest, his influence will be gone.

Decoration Day at Deer Park.

Preparations are being made by the Deer Park Cornet band for Decoration Day. An excellent program is being arranged and a large crowd is expected to be present. At 9 a. m. the band will march to the depot and from there will march to the grove where the procession will form consisting of band members, of G. A. R., M. E., Lutheran and U. B. Sunday School children, prominent speakers, visitors, and citizens of Deer Park and vicinity.

The procession will then proceed to the cemetery where the children will strew flowers over the graves of the known and unknown dead. After the return to the grove dinner will be served, which to members of the G.A.R. will be free. At 1 p. m. the Armstead choir will open the afternoon service by several choice selections after which prominent speakers will deliver appropriate addresses.

At 6 p. m. a grand parade will take place through the main thoroughfare of the town. In the evening at 8 o'clock sharp a concert will be given in Laughlin's hall under auspices of the Deer Park Cornet band, after which refreshments will be for sale.

DIED.

Mrs. Rebecca Durst, wife of Charles Durst, died at her home at New Germany, Md. The deceased was born Jan. 1, 1838, died May 13, 1904, aged 66 years, 4 months and 13 days.

Her remains were laid to rest in the M. E. gravevard. The funeral services were conducted by the three pastors, Revs. Hilbish, Miller and Yoder. Rev. Miller gave a short discourse in German.

Although it was a very disagreeable day the funeral was one of the largest ever known in New Germany.

The deceased was a mother of 11 children, 10 of whom are living.

Six of the children are married while four remain single.

She also leaves a husband, two brothers and three sisters to mourn her loss.

The Oakland Normal.

The lectures which have thus far been delivered before the students of the Oakland Normal, have been very interesting and instructive, especially the microscopical exhibition and lecture given by Dr. J. E. Harned on last Friday afternoon. Dr. Harned exhibited quite a number of specimens, of which a fly's tongue, the common form of the bacteria, as found in water and the blood corpuscles of certain reptiles compared with those of man, were perhaps the most interesting. The exhibition was a rare treat to the students, as many of them never before having had such an opportunity.

Dr. Murdaugh is expected to give a lecture on next Wednesday, the 25th inst. Subject, "Essentials in Teaching."

Mr. J. C. Renninger will lecture on Friday afternoon of this week. Subject "Public Speaking."

John Bowe, a sawyer at the mill of the Preston Lumber and Coal Company at Crellin, received a slight injury to his right hand Monday morning by that member coming in contact with the big circular saw on the mill. He was brought to Oakland where his wounds were dressed by Dr. John E. Legge.

BONE FOOD

Soft and crooked bones mean bad feeding. Call the disease rickets if you want to. The growing child must eat the right food for growth. Bones must have bone food, blood must have blood food and so on through the list.

Scott's Emulsion is the right treatment for soft bones in children. Little doses every day give the stiffness and shape that healthy bones should have.

Bow legs become straighter, loose joints grow stronger and firmness comes to the soft heads.

Wrong food caused the trouble. Right food will cure it.

In thousands of cases Scott's Emulsion has proven to be the right food for soft bones in childhood.

CUMBERLAND REPUBLICAN

Clarence M. King Elected Mayor of Queen City.

The city election in Cumberland, Monday resulted in a Republican victory, Clarence M. King being elected Mayor over Charles P. Zimmerman, Democrat by 53 majority. Howard M Fuller, Democrat, was re-elected City Clerk by 28 majority over Harry Irvine, Republican. The Republicans elected four Councilmen—Henry A. Bachman, Thomas F. Smouse, Levi Shaw and William Garner—and the Democrat one—"Will" H. Shepherd. The proposition for a $25,000 bond issue for a paid fire department was carried by a large vote.

John M. Resley, independent, for City Clerk received 846 votes, only 139 less than Fuller, while Irvine polled 955. Irvine would have won had Resley been out of the field. The latter's candidacy was not taken seriously by many, but he showed surprising strength.

Fined For Attempted Abduction.

Frank Johnson and Lupton Frantz were given a hearing before Magistrate Thomas D. Stewart, Saturday, on a charge of attempting abduction, Johnson was fined $25 and costs or 60 days, and Frantz $50 and costs or 60 days. The two men had been arrested by Detectives Wm. A. Riley and Richard Kelly last Monday, while they were in company with Elizabeth Stein, 15 years old. The girl said the two men had approached at the B. & O. railroad depot and said they were agents for a theatrical attraction at the St. Louis exposition, and offered her a position. She had gone with them to the Oxford hotel, where they were to meet another girl, but the other girl not being there, she become frightened and left.—Monday's Pittsburg Times.

After Federal Appointment.

The dispatches from Washington, D. C., Tuesday, announce that Judge U. S. Kendall, of Fairmont, a native of this county, in company with Senator Elkin, and former Internal Revenue Commissioner, John W. Mason, called at the White House, in the interests of Judge Kendall, who is seeking an appointment as a Federal Judge in the Philippine Islands. His many old friends in this county will wish him success in his aspirations.—Meyersdale Republican.

AUTOISTS WILL GO VIA GRANTSVILLE

To The Great World's Fair In St. Louis.

A great deal of progress has been made on the work of the organization of the grand automobile tour to the World's Fair at St. Louis, in July. The tour is not a contest of endurance run. There are no compulsory rules nor regulations governing it and each participant is expected to suit his own pleasure and convenience in all of the details.

Automobilists who want to take part are requested to fill out a blank giving the place they will start from and their destination, make of car, number of passengers, etc. An entry fee of $10 is charged to cover the expense incurred by the American Automobile Association in preparation of route book and in securing special facilities for tourists along the route.

The Eastern points of origin are [illegible] Philadelphia and New York, Boston, [illegible] Baltimore. The start from Baltimore will be made Friday, July 29, stopping at noon at Frederick, 47 miles, and at night at Hotel Hamilton, in Hagerstown, 47 miles; Saturday, July 30, stop at noon at Hancock, 27 miles, and at night at Cumberland, 67 miles. From Cumberland the route will carry the party on over the Savage mountain into the Casselman valley and through the town of Grantsville, where on Sunday dinner will be served, thence on west through Somerfield, Uniontown, Washington, Wheeling Cambridge, Zanesville, Amsterdam and Columbus.

Muco-Solvent

is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

DECORATION DAY AT FRIENDSVILLE

The Annual Decoration of the Graves of Our Honored Dead.

Sherman Post No. 11, of Friendsville, desire that there be a general turnout of the citizens, public school children or Normal scholars, all the organized bodies of the town and the band, and visitors from the surrounding country are also cordially invited to participate with the Post on Memorial Day, Monday, May 30, in decorating the graves of the noble dead who have answered the last roll call and are now resting in our cemeteries. An old comrade will deliver an address.

Sherman Post will assemble at the M. E. church at 9:30 a. m., where the beautiful ritual of the order will be carried out.

Donations of flowers will be thankfully received and can be left at the church.

By order of the Post.
R. E. FRIEND, Commander.
GEO. E. BISHOFF, Adjutant.

Gov. and Mrs. A. B. Fleming, of Fairmont, were here several days last week looking after some repairs to their summer home between Oakland and Mountain Lake Park.

Mr. A. C Scott, of Fairmont, came down to Oakland Friday and spent Saturday and Sunday with his brother Bert near Hutton. Mr. Scott is a finished printer and while in town made this office a visit.

Col. and Mrs. A. G. Sturgiss and daughter Miss Nell, who spent the winter with Morgantown relatives, returned to Oakland Friday evening and will remain here during the summer, occupying their home on Alder street.

Deer Park expects to have quite a celebration on Decoration Day. An interesting program has been arranged for the occasion and those who are not otherwise engaged will be entertained by visiting that town on the 30th.

Rev. Taylor Sines, accompanied by his brother, Mr. Henry Sines, left Oakland Monday morning for Carthage, Mo., where they went to attend the conference of their church. The latter will visit Oklahoma before his return to his home.

Mr. Clarence V. Guard, one of Friendsville's young business men, was in Oakland two or three days this week where he attended a meeting of some of the members of the Maryland, Pennsylvania and West Virginia Telephone Company.

Snow, hail, sleet and rain in large installments were the portion of this section on Sunday. The thermometer dropped to less than forty and on Monday morning a heavy coating of ice covered the pavements and house-roofs. Whether or not the fruit trees, which are just budding abundantly, were damaged, remains to be seen.

Painters in Oakland are exceedingly busy this spring. The residences of Dr. Ravenscroft, Dr. McComas, E. Lambert, G. S. Hamill, Thomas Little, S. W. Leathers, Wade Hinebaugh, John T. Mitchell and several other have been or are now in process of painting, all of which adds materially to their appearance.

Mr. George H. Fulmer and family moved a portion of their household goods to Swanton Tuesday where they will reside during the summer. Mr. Fulmer is employed in the May store at that place as manager and is quite successful, having had years of experience in the mercantile business in Oakland and at Crellin.

The timely discovery of a fire which caught back of a flue in the building occupied by Harry White as a barber shop on Alder street last Saturday afternoon, probably saved a portion of the town from destruction. The flames had gained considerable headway but were extinguished with a few buckets of water.

Mr. Charles Liller has removed his barber shop from the Naylor building on Railroad street to the Ravenscroft building on Second street. His new shop furniture, modern in construction and handsome in design, has been shipped from the foctory, but owing to slow transportation it has not yet been received here.

Yesterday afternoon the Ravenscroft building was thought to be on fire and after tearing up a portion of the stairway and not being able to locate the flames the discovery was made that a radiator on the first floor had been removed and the escaping steam from the pipe had heated the walls and floor which led the belief that the house was burning.

The summer schedule on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad went into effect Sunday, with but slight changes in the running of through passenger trains. The only decided change was made in the running of west bound train No. 7, which now passes through Oakland at 1.54 in the morning instead of 12.24 as it formerly did. The east bound accomadation now runs at 5.12 instead of 3.20 p. m. On June 20th two additional accomodation trains will be placed in service. One will go east in the morning about nine o'clock and returning will go west about six in the afternoon.

Estray Notice.

Miss Gertrude Poe, of Baltimore, is visiting Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Heindel at their home on Liberty street.

Mr. Robert Porter, accompanied by his daughter, Mrs. Frank Keen, of Bel Air, Md., arrived here Tuesday afternoon and are the guests of relatives.

Miss Jennie Johnson, of Oakland, and her cousin, Miss Mira Ross, of Addison, Pa., who has been her guest here several days, returned Monday afternoon from a visit to Fortress Monroe, Va.

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad workmen are erecting a new platform along the tracks of the company from the depot to the elevated walk leading from Second street. The platform will be considerably wider than the old one.

Miss Nora Teets has resigned from the Tri-State telephone office at Masontown to get married to Marling Maust of that place. She is the fourteenth girl to be married out of this office since it was opened a few years ago. Several hundred applications are said to be on file from eligible girls in the county.

At a special meeting of the Knights of Pythias held Tuesday night the rank of Knight was conferred upon Messrs. N. S. Heindel, W. H. Bartlett, Bowie Johnson, George W. Fleming and H. L. Daugherty. The lodge within the past two or three months has added nearly fifty to its membership and still growing.

Postmaster Jarboe was out over the proposed new rural routes south of town a few days this week in company with Mr. George Giesman securing the names of the citizens who are to be served when the routes are open. Two applications have been filed with the postmaster for appointment as carrier, the applicants being Messrs. Charles Newman and Michael Kildow, son of Hopwood Kildow, Esq.

Mr. Charles E. Hambright, clerk to the Board of Election Supervisors at Cumberland, came up to Oakland last Friday afternoon and secured from the Supervisiors here a number of ballot boxes which were used in the municipal election at Cumberland Monday. Owing to the contest between Messrs. Wilson and Robb, of Allegany county, over the State's Attorneyship, the ballot boxes of Allegany county are tied up in the courts and of course could not be used Monday, hence the visit of Mr. Hambright.

Tuesday night of this week, some slick burglar entered several houses in town and succeeded in picking up several little souvenirs of remembrance. At S. J. Sterling's, he got a valuable gold watch that had just been reset with a $30 movement and also got Mr. Sterling's pants, containing several dollars in money. Mr Sterling was awakened by the intruder and he fled without getting anything more. The pants were found next morning in the yard at Lee Graham's. The same night a fellow was in the house at Tom Dunn's, but the baby was sick and some of them were up with it and scared him away without getting anything.—Kingwood Argus. Mr. Sterling is a Garrett countian, having been born and reared near Friendsville, where he is well known.

Oakland Model Steam Bakery

To my Patrons and the Public:

Owing to the steady increase in my business and the determination to give my customers the best service and goods that can be produced anywhere, I have installed in my Bakery an up-to the-minute steam plant by which the product of my establishment is more than doubled and in consequence no delay is anticipated in putting upon the market twice daily fresh, nutritious Bread, Cakes, Pies, etc.

The dough mixer in my establishment has a capacity of three barrels which is driven by an engine and is of the latest pattern and a model in every respect. The dough is mixed by this machine and turned upon the table without being touched by the hands, thus ensuring better mixed bread and cleanliness in every respect. "Cleanliness" is our motto.

I have also installed a power ice cream machine and am better prepared than heretofore to manufacture Ice Cream and sell at wholesale and retail on the shortest notice.

I respectfully invite the public to inspect my plant.

Very truly yours, HENRY LAUER.

WHEN MAN PROPOSES

By HELEN ROWLAND

"DO I LOOK perfectly calm?" inquired Polly, climbing into the wrong side of the sleigh and trying to tuck the laprobe around the dashboard. "Because," she went on, beginning to take off her gloves, and then, as she recollected herself, nervously drawing them on again, "though you might not suspect it, I'm—a little—excited. I've just finished getting proposed to."

I gave the check rein a violent jerk that must have insulted a horse like Marc Antony.

"I wouldn't even ask who—," I began.

"Oh, you needn't," said Polly. "It was only Bobby Paddington."

I started. The check rein slipped from my fingers, and I let the whip fall with a thud into the snow.

"Why, what's the matter?" asked Polly. "It isn't polite to be surprised when a girl gets proposed to. It looks as if you had thought she couldn't—"

"Oh, it isn't that," said I. "Anybody could get proposed to by Bobby Paddington—and in leap year."

"Pooh!" said Polly, as I stepped into the sleigh and tucked the robe around her. "Leap year has nothing to do with it—nor Bobbie Paddington, either—if a girl has really made up her mind. Leap year merely gives her a privilege which a woman can take whenever she likes. It's like the kiss under the mistletoe, entirely a joke. You wouldn't dare kiss any girl under the mistletoe whom you wouldn't dare kiss anywhere else. And no girl would think of asking a man to marry her on leap year, or at any other time—that is, no girl with a particle of common sense or delicacy."

"Or womanliness," I declared.

"Or knowledge of men," said Polly.

"Or breeding."

"Or experience."

"I wonder," said I, "if any woman ever did use that leap-year privilege."

"Never," said Polly, "since she has had the every year privilege of making a man propose to her. It would have been so very unnecessary. Any woman who uses a little tact and sets out to can get a proposal. The difference between proposing herself and making a man propose to her is the difference between using a whip and spur. You don't have to whip a horse—that is, a horse worth having—do you? But you do often have to spur him when you come to a jump. A man is like a horse; he hates a whip, but he minds a spur."

"Oh, I see," said I, chuckling to Marc Antony until the sleigh sped over the frozen road; "a proposal is like a hedge. A fellow wants to get over it, but he is afraid of what is on the other side. He may land in a tangle—or he may get a cold water dousing."

"Or he fancies there might be a ditch somewhere."

"Or a trap," I suggested, gently.

"Exactly," said Polly, "and that is why it needs a little mental suggestion from the girl to spur him on. If she attempts to drive him with a whip he balks. But mental suggestion—"

"That isn't anything like—hypnotism—is it, Polly?"

"Well—a little," acknowledged Polly. "It's making somebody think something that isn't so."

"Making him think that there isn't cold water on the other side?" I inquired.

"Yes, or a tangle," said Polly. "The average man dreads getting tangled up worse than he does plunging into cold water. But if you can hide all the cords of a binding engagement and all the bonds of matrimony, or can make them look like garlands, or cover them with silk and can persuade him that a proposal isn't a hedge at all, but a bower of roses that he can slip over without any discomfort, and that the water on the other side couldn't possibly be cold, but just warm tears of affectionate sympathy, and that there aren't any ditches in which to be entombed alive, or any traps in which to be caught, and then can make him believe that you don't care whether he takes a leap or not—"

"He will go pell-mell on to his doom!" I finished tragically.

"Like Bobb Paddington," Polly giggled.

"Oh, Bobby Paddington!" I remarked with disgust. "He is just like some fool horses that would take any hedge, if it was a brick wall—and always land on their feet. There is a Divine Providence that protects Bobby."

"I'm very sure you're very uncomplimentary," said Polly. "And, besides, Bobby Paddington landed right in the ice-cold water this time. I refused him—as hard as I could."

I looked down at the demure little bundle of fur beside me, with one curl and a nose sticking out of the big collar.

"Did you do it for my sake, Polly?" I asked softly.

"No," said Polly, "for Bobbie's. He needed the lesson. His conceit was something atrocious. Besides, I made a sort of wager with Kitty Carter—" Polly stopped.

"Well?" I suggested.

"Oh, well—that I could—that he should—I mean— Oh, don't you understand, Mr. Heavyfeather—by 12 o'clock, I finished refusing him at five minutes of, while you were waltzing with—"

"How do you know with whom I was waltzing?"

"Oh, I only had to keep one eye and an ear on Bobby—and not my heart," said Polly, sweetly.

I melted beneath Polly's smile, as the snow beneath the sun.

"Polly," said I, "tell me how you managed the mental suggestion in Bobby's case—how you manage it anyhow."

"With Bobby? Oh, yes; I began by telling him that the jam was in the closet, but that the door was locked."

"I don't understand," said I.

"I told him," said Polly, "that I never intended to marry, never!"

I jerked the reins so suddenly that Marc Antony threatened to stand up on his hind legs.

"What did you tell him that for?" I exclaimed.

"Bobby would hate to think anybody who was in the matrimonial market had entangled him," explained Polly. "He likes to think he is pursuing somebody who doesn't want him. That's the funny thing about most men. They always want the girl who they think doesn't want them, and thereby lay the foundation for the divorce court proceedings right there in the parlor where the proposal is going on. It is nearly always safe to begin making a man propose to you, by telling him you are unattainable. It is like telling a small boy that there's jelly cake in the pantry, but that it's locked up. He immediately begins to look for the pantry key.

"Polly," said I, gazing down upon that small bundle of fur with real awe in my eyes, "are you sure you aren't a reincarnation of Plato—or Socrates—or somebody? For an unreasonable little person, you can reason better—"

"Oh, it didn't come naturally," laughed Polly. "It's the result of—well, you might say long experience."

I winced. I was searching my memory; and somewhere, at some time, it slowly occurred to me, Polly had positively vowed to me confidentially that she never intended to marry.

"Oh, I see," I remarked, as the light dawned on me; "you always say that, just as you say: 'Charmed to meet you,' when you're introduced, 'Come again,' when a man leaves the house, or 'Pardon me,' when you step on his toes."

"No-o-o," said Polly; "you wouldn't dare tell a timid man that the pantry door was locked. He might take you literally, and go away frightened or discouraged. And I told you that I didn't treat them all alike by any means."

"Well," I remarked, flipping Marc Antony quite unnecessarily, "what did you do next, as regards Bobby?"

"I don't remember. Let me see. Let me see—oh, yes. I believe I pointed out to him why I wouldn't marry, but what a perfectly charming wife somebody was missing; and how entirely ideal marriage between two sympathetic souls could be made, and how awful it would be if a man should marry the wrong girl; and—"

I leaned over and looked Polly squarely in the face.

"Did you say all these things, Polly Lee?" I demanded.

"Look out!" cried Polly. "That's the second time you've almost driven into a snowdrift."

"Polly Lee," I repeated, "did you say all those things?"

"Why, of course not, Silly!" said Polly, turning pink. "I only suggested them. My words were quite—well, he never would remember the words anyhow, so they don't count."

"Well, what does count, anyway?" I retorted, flipping Marc Antony spitefully.

"The looks," said Polly, "and the tone and the attitude."

I gave Marc Antony the first lash he ever had.

"What attitude, Miss Lee?" I asked, in a cold, hard voice.

"The mental attitude," answered Polly, without the quiver of an eyelash, "and the mental atmosphere. Oh, it's something you can't explain, but most girls understand it. It's just like feminine logic. There isn't any explanation and you can't prove it, but it's true, just the same."

"There is," said I, "just about five dollars difference between feminine logic and masculine logic."

"I don't understand," said Polly.

"I mean," said I, "that there is five dollars difference between Bobby Paddington's logic and your logic."

"Please explain," pouted Polly. "You're always so intricate!"

"For instance," I went on, "when Bobby Paddington bet me five dollars this morning that he would carry his flirtation with you to the point of proposing within 24 hours—"

"Mr. Heavyfeather!" exclaimed Polly, sitting up perfectly straight. "You don't—mean to say—Bobby Paddington knew I was engaged to you!"

"Oh, yes; I told him all about that only this morning," I replied, nonchalantly.

Polly was looking straight ahead of her with flaming cheeks and snapping eyes.

"And, as I remarked to you," I went on, slipping my arm across the back of the sleigh and glancing sidewise at Polly, "Polly Paddington would take any sort of a hedge, even if he knew it was a brick wall."

Polly didn't even notice my arm. As she leaned back into the depths of it and the sleigh, with a long breath; there were tears of mortification in her eyes.

"Then," she said, looking pathetically up at me, "he was only flirting—with me—all the—time!"

"Polly, dear," said I, bending over and kissing the top of the fur cap softly, "and what were you doing?"—Washington Post.

Indian Magic.

The United States bureau of ethnology recently has completed an investigation into the magic of the Indians and has been baffled by feats performed by their wizards which are fully as wonderful as those of the oriental fakirs. Missionaries and other reliable authorities have told of plots of grass and century plants made to spring from the bare ground in a few moments, and other equally mystifying acts of sorcery.

One person in three in the state of New York has a savings bank account, and the average depositor has $480 to his credit.

BRISSON LOVES CHILDREN.

Famous French Statesman, Satirical in Parliament, Writes Rhymes for Little Tots.

Paris (France) Special.

M. Henri Brisson, who recently succeeded Paul Deschanel as president of the French house of representatives, is a many-sided old parliamentary warhorse, who advocated the cause of the republic with voice, with pen, and, occasionally, with the sword, long before it was proclaimed.

Keen, cold, impassive and satirical in the chamber of deputies M. Brisson is about the last man in French politics

M. HENRI BRISSON.
(New President of the French Chamber of Deputies.)

to-day whom one would suspect of being, when off duty, a boon companion of "les petits," as children are called in Paris. As a matter of fact, however, M. Brisson might be either Lewis Carroll or Eugene Field, so far as popularity with the tots is concerned, and his methods of amusing them, too, recall those of the authors of "Alice" and "Little Boy Blue." The president of the "chambre" is a widower and childless, but his distinguished "chief of the cabinet," Jacques Girard, has two little olive branches, and by them "Bison," as he is known to the small Albert and Suzanne, is regarded as just about the best fellow in the world. Often he spends hours in making nonsense rhymes for them, and some of these presidential efforts would not disgrace Carroll himself.

Brisson really is an amateur verse writer of no small ability, a good many of his sonnets having found their way into print. He also is an enthusiast on the subject of poetic drama. His friends declare that he can recite both "Hernani" and "Ruy Blas" with as much facility as Mounet-Sully, who plays them; and he has Moliere at his fingers' ends. One of M. Brisson's few boasts is that, in his youth, he could deliver Racine's "Iphigenie" fom beginning to end.

He is nearly as strenuous as the president of the United States, and is like Mr. Roosevelt in having a habit of taking his friends out for walks, and, forgetting that they are less energetic than himself, bringing them back in a state of collapse. The other day, some miles from the end of one of these walks, the president's confrere, M. Steinilber, elected to follow ingloriously in a cab. Brisson rises at five o'clock every morning, summer and winter alike. Old man as he is, he still fences every day, and all his writing is done standing at his desk. Though the recent sessions of the chamber have been extended far into the night, and been exceedingly stormy, the president has not yet missed a "seance," and it is not at all likely that the vice president will be overworked.

M. Brisson is a great authority on political economy. Several years ago he traveled extensively both in Egypt and the Holy Land, and the fortunate folk who received letters from him while on his wanderings declare that their wit, insight and general literary quality made them well worth being preserved in print.

PANAMA'S COAT-OF-ARMS.

It Is Pretty to Look Upon and Its Motto Is a Collection of Good Words.

Panama Special.

Panama, the new republic, has already its coat-of-arms, showing an attractive and comprehensive design. It consists of a shield surmounted by an eagle, in whose beak is the ribbon upon which is written the motto of the state: "Paz, Libertad, Union, Progresso;" (Peace, Liberty, Union, Progress.) Below, on the upper part of the shield, side by side,

PANAMA'S COAT-OF-ARMS.
(Officially Adopted by the Republic's Executive Council.)

are the implements of war and of peaceful occupations. Below this, occupying the central place, is a land and water view, the site of the canal, and the fruits of the harvest; a rushing train on a track fills up the point of the shield. Flags drape it on either side, and stars surmount the eagle.

ONLY A MODERN SHERLOCK

Displayed the Wisdom of a Wizard, But It Was Merely Commonplace.

The grave physician (this method of speaking of physicians is significant of results, rather than of demeanor) carefully examined his patient, relates the Baltimore American.

She had just called at his office and said she was ailing in so many ways she was mystified.

After having noted that she was indeed grievously afflicted, he said:

"Madam, before I can do anything at all for you, you must move closer into the heart of the city."

With a start the woman said:

"Oh, sir, but how do you know I didn't live near the heart of the city?"

Gazing pityingly upon her, he said:

"Madam, you do not know, perhaps, that we physicians have been considering special treatment for the ailment now known as the northwestbaltimoreitis. You live somewhere near North and Maryland avenues?"

"Yes, sir," wonderingly.

"You are accustomed to standing on the northwest corner of that thoroughfare and waiting for a car?"

"Yes, sir," astoundedly.

"You have been doing this since the fire crippled the company's service and the number of cars for awhile reminded you of hen dentistry?"

"Yes, sir," aghast.

"Your case is plain. You have varicose veins in both ankles, from standing. You have partial paralysis of the muscles of the jaws from chewing gum you got from that slot machine at the corner. The muscles of the right side of your face and neck, also those of your back, are strained with leaning out from the curb looking up to Twenty-fifth street to see the car turn. Your eyes are popped half way out of your head with the staring incumbent upon that rubbering stunt. Your toes are covered with corns from having them trodden upon in getting on the car and afterward. You are partially deaf from hearing the conductor say: 'Move up forward, please.' You are threatened with apoplexy on account of the anger you have felt when you hung to a strap while a long-legged man sat near you with his legs sprawled out to the limit of their reach—"

But the woman, who was superstitious and believed he was a wizard, had fled precipitately lest he might add insanity to her other ailments.

WORK OF ENGLISH WOMEN.

It Is No Longer Considered Degrading for Them to Earn Their Own Living.

It is no longer regarded as unfashionable for a woman of good standing in English society to earn her own living. Frequent paragraphs in the newspapers convey the information that this or that woman of quality is engaged in some business whereby she earns enough to supply all her wants, and most of them are meeting with success. The blessed word "work" has passed along the ranks of all classes of society and women are becoming happier and better in consequence. We all have had experience of the irreparable damage done to the lives of many women by the old prejudice against their working. It often happened that a woman with a great talent for the stage or for the concert-room was kept from exercising these talents by the supposed prejudices it would do to her social position, and then—when her husband had failed in business—this same woman had often to start a profession at a time when the beauty, the energy, the hopefulness of youth had departed, and when her talents could not have the suppleness to improve by practice. How many women have lamented the lost opportunities of their youth when in middle age the stress came, and deplored the blindness of father or husband which prevented them from following their destiny and exercising their talents.

In France they have less nonsense than we have in these affairs of daily life, and especially where women are concerned. Indeed, woman holds in France a position which is utterly unlike her place in any other country in the world. That nation, so absurdly dubbed frivolous by those who do not know her, is really one of the most industrious nations in the world, and idleness is held to be a vice with women as with men. Even the tripper to Paris knows that in every shop the till is and the bank accounts are in the hands of women, and those who know social life intimately there are aware that the wife and mother practically rules the household.

A Municipal Venture.

The tramway system at Hull, Eng., is owned and operated by the city. The cars are double-deckers and the fare is 1d (2 cents) on all lines for all distances. The financial results of this low fare system are equally interesting. During the latest 12 months reported on there were 10 miles of double track, or 20 miles of single track, in operation. The gross income is about $445,000; the cost of operation was about $233,000. This left a gross profit of $212,000 and, deducting interest on the investment and the sinking sum, a net profit of $122,000, or an average of over $12,000 a mile of double track, which went into the city treasury.

HIS FOUNTAIN PEN LEAKED.

And Annabel Googan's Face Bore Evidence Convincing and Condemning.

"Annabel!" called a Manchester mother over the banisters, as she heard the front door close.

"Yes, mamma," replied a sweet, girlish voice, and Annabel Googan slowly framed herself in the darkness of the staircase, reciates London Tit-Bits.

"Was that Mr. Timberry, Annabel?"

"It was, mamma."

"Do you know it is 20 minutes past 11?" came in cold tones from the wrapped figure in the upper hall.

"Mamma, we hadn't the slightest idea it was so late," said the young girl, earnestly. "You see," she continued, "Mr. Timberry has been telling me about China and Japan. He said everybody ought to know about them, and it was so interesting, we never thought how late it was getting. Do you know, mamma," added the sweet girl, as she reached the landing, "that in China they—"

"Did Mr. Timberry draw a map of China on your face, Annabel?" asked Mrs. Googan, sternly.

"Why, mamma?" asked the girl in startled tones.

The young girl rushed to a mirror and saw with horror-stricken glance that the left side of her face was streaked and stained with ink.

"Heaven and earth!" she screamed; "his fountain pen must have leaked into his waistcoat pocket!" and with a shriek of horror the beautiful girl fell fainting to the floor.

The Doctors Failed.

Kilgore, O., April 11.—A rather remarkable case has just come to light in this place. Mr. John T. Riegle had been suffering for some time with an aggravated form of Kidney disease which had caused him a great deal of discomfort.

He tried the treatment of several doctors, but did not get any better. At last he chanced to read an advertisement of Dodd's Kidney Pills, a remedy which has been making many wonderful cures, and he bought some at once and began to use them. He says of the result:

"Dodd's Kidney Pills do just what they are advertised to do. I can praise them for the good they have done for me. They cured me completely after the doctors had failed, and I wish that every poor sufferer could hear of them, for I know they will cure Kidney trouble."

There seems to be no case of Kidney Trouble, Rheumatism or Backache that Dodd's Kidney Pills will not cure perfectly and permanently.

THE TWO WORKMEN.

One, a Teetotaler, Saved a Competence, While the Other Drank Up His Income.

Thomas Brown lived next door to Robert Smith, and both worked at the same factory. But, though they stood side by side all day, they had very different ways of spending their evenings. Smith's pleasure was to spend the hours with companions in the saloon, while Brown thought his own snug chimney-corner pleasanter and cheaper.

Brown was a "stanch teetotaler," as he called himself. He was hale and strong, and he found he did not need beer or whisky; he saw many of his fellow-workmen and their lads slipping down into the habit of spending a great part of their earnings in drink, and every now and then breaking out in drunken revels. So Thomas resolved to keep clear of the temptation to take too much strong drink, by taking none at all.

He was surprised himself to find out how much money this resolve saved him. He found that he had about $2 a week to spare, after paying all household expenses. He consulted with his good wife what to do with this $2, and they settled to put it in a building society which had lately been formed. So Thomas Brown took ten $100 shares, and paid his $2 a week to the society; while his neighbor and shopmate, Robert Smith, spent his surplus $2 in the saloon.

Several years passed over. The building society of which Thomas Brown was a member, was wound up, and Thomas received a check on the bank for $2,000, with which he bought a house, which brought him $2.50 a week for rent.

As he still had $2 surplus from his wages, and these $2.50 besides, he thought he could not do better than join another building society; and so he took 30 $100 shares, and paid in his $4.50 a week.

More years passed over, and the building society paid Thomas $4,500, with which he bought more houses, which brought him in about $10 a week—about $520 a year.

About this time work began to be slack at the factory, and the master sent for Thomas and Robert, and told them he was very sorry that he could no longer find employment for them.

Both returned home. Thomas was a little sad to think that he should not go to the old place, where he had worked for so many years; but Robert had a heavy heart, and when he told his wife, she pictured a dismal future, and burst into tears.

After their cheerless supper, Robert went out, but instead of going to the saloon he looked in to see his neighbor Thomas, and ask him what he was going to do; for Thomas, like a wise man, had not boasted about his savings or his property, and few of his shopmates knew anything about it. Thomas was at his supper when Robert came in, and he asked him to sit down and join him; but Robert was too excited to do that.

"What is to be done, Thomas?" said Robert; "this is a desperate bad job."

"Well," said Thomas, "for my part I don't intend to work in the factory any more. I can't take to a new place now after I have been so long used to the old shop."

"How do you mean to live, then?" asked Robert. "Has anyone left you a fortune?"

"No," answered Thomas, "but I have income enough to keep me without working in the factory."

"I wish," said Robert, "that you would give me a leaf out of your book."

"Nay," said Thomas, "I fear it is too late now. You know I have been a teetotaler for 20 years and more, and many a joke you and the rest have had at me for it."

"Well, you have the best of us now at any rate," said Robert; "but you don't suppose I have been a drunkard, do you? I have always made my wife comfortable and given her what she wanted for the house."

"I know you have," answered Thomas; "but my wife and I agreed to put $2 a week we could spare into a building association, and now we have $10 a week coming to us without working for it."

Robert looked surprised, and said, sadly, as he got up to go: "I see my mistake, now; though I have not been a drunkard, I have squandered away without thought what might now make my wife and myself comfortable for the rest of our lives, instead of having to set out and look for work in a new place amongst strangers."—National Advocate.

A TERRIBLE INDICTMENT.

Part Christian Nations Play in Debauching Native Tribe Through Liquor Traffic.

Referring to the devastating ruin brought upon native tribes by the introduction of intoxicating liquors on the part of Christian nations, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse says:

"We Englishmen, so proud of our country, must bow down with an awful shame at the thought of it. All that England has done and is doing to advance the welfare of the nations is undone, and worse than undone, by the curse of strong drink. It hurts one indeed to think of it, but it is just the awful and terrible truth that in spite of our Bible societies and of all our great missionary societies, the world would be better to-day if there were no England.

"In India it is said that for every native converted to Christianity, 100 natives are made drunkards. When the natives see a drunken man, they are accustomed to say: 'He has left Mohammed and gone to Jesus.' 'Now that Burmah is annexed,' says a missionary, 'it has become a place of cheap drink and great crimes.'

"I have only once been near a Mohammedan town, and this is what I saw: I had not landed five minutes before I was surrounded by a group of Arab boys carrying bottles of spirits—Mohammedan lads, whose religion forbids them to drink strong drink—and we were assailed with cries in broken English: 'Master, buy bottle brandy—three-six.' 'Miss, nice bottle brandy—three-six.' My heart prayed God that these lads might be kept sober Mohammedans rather than become such 'Christians' as they are accustomed to see. Little wonder that one of the most enlightened Brahmins cried: 'Oh, that we had never seen a European face; oh, that we had never tasted the bitter sweets of your civilization, rather than that it should make us a nation of drunkards and brutes.'

"Thus writes Arnold White, who has lived amongst the natives:

"'The Indians of America and Hindoostan, the wild races of Australia, the Kaffirs, the debased Hottentots, the West Coast negroes, the effeminate Cingalese, and the sinewy aborigines of Canada, have bitter reasons to rue the first day of their communication with the Anglo-Saxon race. England has polluted with drink and honeycombed with foul disease the lives of those races who still survive a contact all unsought by them. When our countrymen return from eastern lands, they tell us that for every missionary sent out there go also some 3,000 gallons of rum; that it is better to carry out Mohammedanism than Christianity, because Mohammedanism is temperate and Christianity is not.'

"Mr. Mackay, of the Nyanza mission, writes:

"'Oh, how often shall I write in my journal as I pass through many tribes: "Drink is the curse of Africa?" Go where you will, and you will find men, women and children reeling from the effects of alcohol. The vast west of Africa is ruined with rum.'

"Few men had such opportunities of seeing the world as Sir George Grey. His life has been spent in constant contact with savage races in Africa, with Zulus and Kaffirs, in New Zealand with the Maoris. He declared that when he came home to London he saw in a single week sights more shameful than he had seen during all those years among the savages, and it was all through strong drink.

"Rev. P. J. Ritchie, of Queenstown, in an address delivered as chairman of the Congregational union, said:

"'Is it not clear that the spread of drinking habits amongst the natives must inevitably tend to render them unfit for any useful service, to deprive them of the means of honest livelihood, and consequently to drive them into criminal courses, until they are good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under feet of men? The voice of their blood will cry from the ground unto heaven against their white destroyers. Our boasted civilization has given them the Bible with one hand and the brandy bottle with the other. It brings all heaven before their eyes in the mission church, and opens hell for them in the canteen. It gives the missionary the opportunity to put upon them the pressure of moral suasion for their salvation, whilst it gives its legislators power to take off the excise duty on Cape brandy for their damnation.'"

MODEL COOP FOR CHICKENS

As a Labor Saver the Contrivance Here Described in Detail Has But Few Equals.

Sketch and description of coop and run for setting hen and chicks. They can roost in it till the hen leaves them. Ends 1 inch thick or more; make ends first 2 feet, 2½ inches long, back edges 2 feet 3 inches, front edge 1 foot 11 inches. Front and back should be one-half-inch thick. Nail box together and nail two pieces on inside of back and front of coop 3x1, on which put a loose floor. Now take two pieces 2½x1-inch 7 feet long. Nail one on each side of coop at top edge of front, keep back one same distance from bottom. Let them overhang 6 inches at each end, to form handles. Put two on bottom 6 feet long; nail cross pieces same size, between the ends to form the run. Now, cut plasterer's lath in half for end of run and leave a space of 5 inches to slide a thin board in, another space 2½ inches to slide a piece in. Space the remainder and nail on. Cover front, back and top with lath or wire netting. Make an opening in end of coop for hen, and cover with a sliding board from back to front to keep hen in and skunks out. Now make your roof. Let it project 3 inches both ends and front; put leather hinges all the way along the back and shingle the joints to keep rain out. Now put in nest, and you can carry it around anywhere. To make the above give the best results it needs two pieces in between the rails, thus, X. Then nail the laths on 1½ inches apart. When you want to confine the chicks in the run, put loose laths in between them. When they are big enough to run around, take the loose laths out, so they can go in and out at will. Now put a piece 2x1 on each end 12 inches from the floor to put perches on, and put dirt, water, feed and grit in the coop when you set the hen. —J. Hagley, in Epitomist.

A HANDY LITTLE COOP.

POULTRY YARD CHATTER.

Cheap food is always at the expense of quality.

No food is cheap that does not bring paying results.

Provide plenty of nests where there are many hens or pullets.

Damaged food invites indigestion and various bowel troubles.

It's "trouble" to look after a flock of poultry in the way it should be done—but it pays.

Grit, either oyster shells or crushed granite, should be kept under cover accessible to the poultry.

Air the poultry house once a day, no matter how cold it is. Don't neglect to clean out the house every morning because "it is so cold."

Keep the cockerels and pullets separate until a couple of weeks before you commence saving eggs for hatching. Both will be the better for the plan.

The best "condition remedy" for poultry is good care, cleanliness in the houses, variety of sound food, grit, pure water, etc., and making the stock exercise in a scratching shed.

Keep the poultry busy scratching. Plenty of short, dry straw litter or leaves under a shed or in the house is the way and place. Scatter a little cracked corn or wheat several times during the day. Late in the evening give enough warm food to provide for the required amount.

Truthful Reporter Says Fowl Weighs 144 Pounds and Wears Rubbers in Winter.

Harry Pinkham, of Nevada, Story county, Iowa, owns a Toulouse goose which is indeed a monstrosity and has attracted a great deal of attention at the various places at which it has been exhibited by Mr. Pinkham. The fowl, which is a little over two years of age, weighs 144 pounds, and has been exhibited at the fat stock show at Chicago, at Des Moines, at the Iowa state fair, and will be taken to St. Louis to be exhibited this summer at the Louisiana Purchase exposition. The enormous weight of the goose has been too heavy for its web feet, and in order to protect the goose from the frozen ground this winter Mr. Pinkham made for the fowl a pair of rubber shoes which fit on the two web feet. The goose has been in the habit of laying an egg about every day, and these eggs are of enormous size, being as large as an ordinary water bottle, and the landlady at Pinkham's boarding house recently made 14 pies out of one of the eggs which the goose had laid.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Diversified Farming Safest.

The one-crop farmer is at the mercy of both excessive drought and rain, poor crops and low prices. There are too many things against him to succeed well. In diversified farming if one thing fails another succeeds. Then if there is a universally good crop he is better off than if he had only one crop. It is all right to do one thing particularly well, but keep every dish you have right side up.—Midland Farmer

Occasion for a Story.

A man had a story about a gun which he delivered himself of upon all occasions. At a dinner party one evening he writhed in his chair for over an hour waiting for a chance to introduce his story, but no opportunity presented itself. Finally he slipped a coin into the hand of a waiter and whispered: "When you leave the room again, slam the door."

The waiter slammed the door as directed, and the man sprang to his feet, with the exclamation: "What's that noise—a gun?"

"Oh, no," returned his host, "it was only the door."

"Ah, I see. Well, speaking of guns reminds me of a little story."—Tit-Bits.

SKIN PURIFICATION.

Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills Cleanse the Skin and Blood of Torturing Humors—Complete Treatment $1.00.

The agonizing itching and burning of the skin, as in eczema; the frightful scaling, as in psoriasis; the loss of hair and crusting of scalp, as in scalled head; the facial disfigurement, as in pimples and ringworm; the awful suffering of infants, and anxiety of worn-out parents, as in milk crust, tetter and salt rheum—all demand a remedy of almost superhuman virtues to successfully cope with them. That Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills are such stands proven by the testimony of the civilized world.

WOMEN BREAK DOWN.

Sometimes women drift into a condition of "half invalid." Continual languor—all tired out, run down, backache, nerves shattered, headache, terrible pain, no appetite, poor digestion. In nine cases out of ten it's because the kidneys fail to do their work of filtering the poisonous system waste from the blood. The kidneys are weak and need the strengthening help of Doan's Kidney Pills. Read how these pills repair a weakened physical condition when this condition is caused by sick kidneys:

Mrs. Sadie Mettles of 394 W. 4th Ave., Columbus, Ohio, says: "Prior to the year 1898 I suffered considerably from backache, pain in the head, languor and depression and weakness of the action of the kidneys. The pain was always worse in the morning and I felt miserable. I was induced to procure a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and I began their use. They proved prompt and effective. They cured me and there has been no return of the trouble since taking them. I owe all the credit to Doan's Kidney Pills."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mrs. Mettles will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. For sale by all druggists, price 50 cents per box.

Jesus Teaches Humility.

A strange and sad incident! It illustrates vividly the small progress Jesus had made with His disciples in teaching them the new ideal of life.

It was within thirty days of the end of his career, and they had had three years of instruction. Yet their notion of the nature of His kingdom was so vague and crude that the heart of the Master must have been distressed. They thought it something objective and material. They had taken his analogy of the twelve thrones literally, and were hungry for the spoils of office.

James and John, the very ones from whom He might naturally expect the most, really led off in the demand for official preferment. They seemed not to have profited by previous errors which Jesus had corrected. They had forbidden one whom they found casting out devils, because he did not follow them, and they had wanted to call down fire on the Samaritans. The Master had, in these instances, rebuked the earthliness of their aims and methods. But now they betray such a base notion of their Leader that they think he could be guilty of nepotism. Their mother, Salome, was Mary's sister, and they cousins of Jesus. Hence their claim to preferment. It is a family attempt to steal a march on the others. They are especially anxious to cut Peter out, the most aggressive of the apostles. They had reason to believe Jesus regarded them with special interest—for John was His favorite at table, and James was always included with the two others as witnesses of the most significant events.

In the form of their request they seem to have had the Sanhedrin in mind—the splendid supreme court and parliament of the Hebrew nation. The Prince of the Sanhedrin sat in the midst of two rows of elders. On his right sat the "Father of the Sanhedrin," and on his left the "Sage of the Sanhedrin." So James and John had an ambitious dream of being clad in gorgeous raiment and seated high in the marble court of the Elders of Israel, in the rehabilitated nation. It may not have been entirely unmixed selfishness. There may have been elements of patriotism and courage. But they totally missed the scope and spirit of the kingdom. This dullness of His best disciples must have been mortifying to Jesus. In fact, it was more trying to Him than the active and cunning opposition of the scribe and Pharisees.

With infinite patience Jesus began to teach the lesson all over again, and unfold the essential principles of His kingdom. He could be charitable to His tardy disciples, for He was founding a commonwealth, absolutely unique—the like of which the world had never seen before—a kingdom of the heart, entirely subjective, ethical, and spiritual. Well could Jesus say, "Ye know not what ye ask." Within a month they saw those coveted places at His right and left hand occupied indeed, but by crucified thieves! "Can you drink of My cup?" So far from being able to drink of the cup of His calamity, they did not even dream, in spite of all His teaching, that such a cup was soon to be pressed to His lips. There was no room for the cross in their conception of His kingdom. Again, the very ethical and spiritual nature of the new commonwealth makes the arbitrary distribution of position and emolument among favorites an utter impossibility. In point of fact, "lordship" in the common sense of that word, is entirely ruled out. The only greatness is that of love, obedience, humility, and service. And there can be nothing capricious in this. To the fit seat the fitted person only can come. Those nearest the King can reach their station only by the path the King Himself has taken.

Jesus must have been touched with pity when he said to these over confident disciples, "you shall drink of My cup." He knew the significance of the words. They did not. It compensated also for present disappointment to know as He did that these crude and vainglorious followers would finally learn His doctrine and imitate His example, and prove in heroic martyrdom their premature assertion, "We can drink Your cup."

The officious criticism of the "two" by the "ten" gave Jesus another opportunity to further illuminate and enforce the essential principle of His kingdom. The ten were not worthier than the two. In point of fact they were in the same fault. They were only incensed against James and John because they had forestalled them in the preferment of a claim. Jesus differentiates His kingdom from the Gentile state. In it there is lordship and authority, and consequent degrees of state and emolument. But it is not so in his kingdom. The very opposite maintains. The greatest is the greatest servant. And of this principle he is about to give the purest and sublimest example ever witnessed. He came not to be ministered unto, but to minister and to give His life.

The Teacher's Lantern

It may have been because Jesus had lately rebuked them, and they felt themselves not in good form, that James and John got their mother to prefer their request for them. She is supposed, also, to have been Jesus' aunt.

The request was in the "spoiled child" form. They sought to exact a promise before they named the thing they wanted.

The frankness and openness of Jesus is here illustrated. He was "out and out." He also knew that to have the disciples put their mean request in words in the hearing of all would help them discover the meanness of it.

Jesus here shows, in his reference to His cup and baptism, His perfect knowledge of what awaited Him. The end was not hidden from Him. His composure, courage, and fidelity extort our admiration.

There is nothing mystical in the term cup. It is a very familiar figure of Hebrew speech. Its origin is natural. In the Oriental family yet it is the father's custom to divide the meal according to his judgment, giving each his portion of meat and drink. So the good and ill of life is considered the portion dealt to each by the Heavenly Father. Gradually the cup came to indicate the sorrowful portion particularly. It became the common figure of calamity.

"We can" was the rash avowal of ignorance. But that pledge was later lived up to superbly by these very disciples.

The unfit person in the fit place is the most incongruous picture in history. The prepared place is for the prepared person and rice versa. High station has high price. Incompetence may stumble into office, but has no tenure.

Not men-selected-men have been the imortal heroes of the kingdom of heaven, but the heaven-selected.

This is not, however, a proof text against office in the Church. Reference is only to the spirit in which it is assumed and administered.

Unseemly that in that solemn hour, so near the shadow of the cross, there should be this fierce fire of controversy The displeasure of the "ten" is as reprehensible as the ambition of the "two." It sprang out of the spirit of rivalry which Jesus had lately rebuked. The "two" were selfish. The "ten" were jealousy.

"Lordship and authority, not so among you," is the announcement of a new law in the new kingdom. It is a bran-new principle in hopeless conflict with current ideas. It is service versus lordship. All the greatness known in Jesus' kingdom is the greatness of goodness, humility, and service.

Ambition to spiritual lordship has ruined men and Churches. The Church has ruined many a State and the State corrupted many a Church. In every instance, however, it has been when this initial principle of the kingdom of heaven on earth has been discarded.

The unintelligent things of nature exemplify humility. The lark soars high, but builds its nest low. The nightingale sings only when veiled in night. The fullest head of wheat bows lowest, as does the limb most laden with fruit.

LARGE BARN BURNED

At Cortner Wednesday Morning at an Early Hour.

The large barn on the farm of Peter P. Gortner, six miles south of Oakland, was entirely consumed by fire of a mysteelous origin yesterday morning about five o'clock.

When the flames were discovered by Mr. Gortner they had made such headway as to preclude any attempt to quench them and an attempt was directed toward saving the stock and implements. Everything of this nature with the exception of one calf was saved, including a number of horses, vehicles and farm machinery.

The barn was comparatively new, having been erected last year and was insured.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

In the Circuit Court for Garrett County. No. 1270 Equity.

John E. Winters, Plaintiff, vs. Anna A. Winters, Defendant.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii by the plaintiff from the defendant.

The bill states, that on the 10th day of June, 1900, the plaintiff was married to his wife, the said defendant, in Garrett county, with whom he resided until the 16th day of January, 1901. That the conduct of the plaintiff towards his wife, the said defendant, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and that the said defendant has, without any just cause or reason abandoned and deserted the plaintiff and has declared her intention to live with him no longer; that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years, and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties is beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation and that the said plaintiff and defendant have had no children born to them from said marriage, and that said defendant is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill prays for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief.

It is thereupon this 11th day of May, 1904, ordered, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 17th day of June, 1904, give notice to said defendant of the object and substance of the bill, warning her to appear in this court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 4th day of July, 1904, to show cause if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

GET RID OF THE WIRES.

All Telephone Wires In Oakland Should be Cabled.

Oakland with its great number of telephone, telegraph and electric light wires could be greatly improved in appearance if an ordiance were drafted and passed by the Council compelling the corporations owning these wires to enclose them in cables. This should be done in the case of the telephone wires especially as they outnumber ten to one the wires owned by the electric and telegraph company and are strung in a haphazard manner on all the principle streets of the town.

Along Second street there are at least sixty wires running with the street and about half the number crossing the thoroughfare at all angles and degrees.

With the wires in a cable not only the appearance of the streets would be improved but the danger of fire being communicated to buildings by telephone wires coming into contact with charged electric light wires would be materially lessened if not altogether done away with.

Let the wires be cabled by all means. True, there will be considerable expense connected with such work, but the telephone companies receive great revenues from the town and they should not object to making the improvement which will in the end benefit them more than under the present system.

A DELICATE OPERATION

Performed at the Oakland Sanitarium Monday.

Dr. Henry W. McComas, assisted by Dr. J. E. Legge, at the McComas Sanitarium in Oakland last Monday performed a very delicate operation upon Mrs. O. J. Schooley, of Mountain Lake Park, when they removed an abdominal tumor weighing nearly ten pounds.

About eighteen months ago Dr. McComas removed from the abdomen of the same lady a tumor weighing 28 pounds which was located on the left side. Her recovery was remarkable, she being discharged from the institution within three weeks after the operation.

The tumor removed Monday was located in her right side. It had attained such growth and was so situated that her intestines had intermingled with it and had become so diseased that it necessitated the removal of somewhat more than eighteen inches of the intestine.

Mrs. Schooley this morning is remarkably bright and unless something unforseen occurs within the next few days the physicians confidently expect her recovery.

THEY AGAIN CAME INTO THIER OWN.

The Browming Wing of the Democracy Controlled Convention.

HON. R. T. BROWNING PRESIDED.

With His Old-time Grace and Dignity —He Was Also Elected a Delegate to State Convention—Dr. Bartlett and Mr. William Miller Other Members of the Delegation.

Yesterday the old time Democrats of Garrett county, headed by the veteran warhorse of Democracy, Hon. R. T. Browning, met in convention in Oakland and that wing of the party who have followed Mr. Browning to victory—and defeat also—again came into their own and controlled the convention from start to finish. Mr. Browning being made temporary and later permanent chairmrn of the meeting with Mr. Chas. A. Deffinbaugh, editor of the Democrat, its secretary.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. C. M. Miller, who addressed the assembled delegates in his usual vigorous style and in closing his remarks intimated that he would be delighted to see Mr. Gorman named as the Democratic candidate for President. The delegates seemed to be of the same mind as they applauded vigorously, no doubt having in their minds eye that if Mr. Gorman were nominated and by accident elected that the pie wagon would pass their way when Federal appointments were in order.

After the preliminary organization had been made the usual committee on resolutions, credentials, etc., was appointed, which committee reported that of the fourteen districts twelve were represented in the convention, Nos. 3 and 12 being the absentees.

The resolutions presented and adopted follow:

Resolved, By the Democrats of Garrett county in convention assembled, this 25th day of May, 1904—

Without enunciating any policy, leaving all to the united wisdom of the National Democracy in convention assembled, to pledge our earnrst support to the platform that may be adopted.

Resolved, That the selection of the chief magistrate of our great nation is an event so fraught with its welfare as to appeal to every patriotic heart in the nation.

Resolved, That in the past history of our country no State of the original thirteen ever responded more promptly than our beloved commonwealth, and we are proud of her representatives for the national welfare on the battlefield, her Judiciary, or in the halls of national legislation.

In the great political struggle that awaits us in November next we leave the selection of our standard-bearer to the decision of the National Convention. Proud of the past in Maryland history we feel that our State can present a name of one whom we have honored, of one who has reflected lustre upon the State, of one well-known throughout the length and breadth of our great country, and we trust that he may receive earnest consideration. We of course refer to none other than the Honorable Arthur P. Gorman.

Immediately after the reading of the resolutions delegates were elected to represent Garrett county in the State Convention to be held in Baltimore to-day as follows: Hon. R. T. Browning, Dr. E. H. Bartlett, and Mr. William Miller.

The contest between the contending factions, however, took place in the election of delegates to the Congressional Convention to be held at Rockville on Sept. 28th. Messrs. W. R. Offutt, W. J. Barnard, E. J. Hamill, Charles Whitmore and G. S. Hamill, Jr., were placed in nomination. Of these on the first ballot Messrs. Offutt, with 11 votes; Barnard, 10 votes, and E. J. Hamill, with 6 votes, were declared elected. Mr. Whitmore received 3 votes and G. S. Hamill, Jr., 4 votes.

While there was no open break on the floor of the convention it was easily discernable by the most casual observer that a bitter feeling pervaded the breasts of many of the delegates opposed to Mr. Browning and his friends.

After making the selection of the delegates above named the convention adjourned.

Card of Thanks.

We take this means to offer our most sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors who kindly assisted us during the illness and death of our dear father, the late John Mackin.

CHAMPION SHEEP OF THE WORLD

Col. Treusdell's "Grand Duke" Sheared Fleece Weighing 22 Pounds.

ANIMAL WEIGHS 260 POUNDS.

The "Grand Duke" Was Imported from France by His Owner and Has Record of Being the Finest Animal in the World.—Will be Exhibited at St. Lonis.

Garrett county is justly proud of many things,—her climate, her people, her hills and valleys, her agricultural products and her progressiveness in all the lines of trade and commerce, and when Col. George Treusdell, of Washington, D. C., came up to the mountains and purchased a tract of over fifteen hundred acres of land and put it in prime condition to grow grain and other products, built roadways over and through his holdings, erected modern buildings and spent money lavishly in his efforts to develope his lands, she had another source of gratification. But when this same gentleman went over to France about two years ago and there bought the prize Rambouillet ram "Grand Duke," which held an international record and imported it to this country where he installed it upon his Garrett county farm for breeding purposes, another laurel was added. This animal since being imported has taken prizes at all the stock shows in the country and without doubt will continue to bring renown to its owner for years to come, barring accidents which may terminate its life.

The other day the Grand Duke was sheared of its eight-months' old fleece and the startling fact developed that the wool, clean as soap and water could make it, weighed just twenty-two pounds, which is more than three times the average yield the country over.

The ram is but five years old. Since been sheared he has been weighed and Mr W. H. Chadderton, Col. Treusdell's superintendent on the farm, vouches for the statement that the scales showed his weight as being 260 pounds.

On the farm Col. Treusdell has about four hundred sheep and lambs of different breeds, most of them being imported or descendants of those imported by him.

From the various flocks five thousand pounds of wool was clipped this season which has been graded and will soon be shipped to a commission house in Boston.

Col. Treusdell's farm lies along the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad near Altamont, nine miles east Oakland and is appropriately named "Altamont Springs Farm." He has a delightfully located cottage situated upon an eminence commanding a view of the entire country roundabout. His barns are models of architecture and are fitted with labor and time saving devices, including storage rooms for vegetable matter for the winter feeding of his sheep and other animals.

Mr. W. H. Chadderton, a model farmer, is the superintendent and has entire charge of the farm.

The Oakland Normal.

The subject of the lecture delivered by Mr. J. C. Renninger on last Friday afternoon was "Public Speaking." Mr. Renninger presented the subject very forcibly, by referring to the lives of great orators, such as Demosthenes, Cicero and Webster, whose works in oratory have claimed the attention of the whole civilized world; and by setting forth the necessity of cultivating the habit of speaking in public at an early age in life, in order to become a fluent and an appreciated speaker. The lecturer gave many valuable suggestions relative to this subject, one of which was that teachers should have public exercises on holidays, such as Washington's Birth Day and similar occasions. The importance of public speaking was undoubtedly indelibly fixed in the minds of all who heard the lecture.

Horse Dropped Dead.

A horse, belonging to Mr. Joseph Shaffer, of near Oakland, which was being driven by its owner along with three other animals attached to a road wagon, dropped dead in the harness at a point on the Deer Park road near Mr. Shaffer's farm Tuesday. Mr. Shaffer cannot account for the animal's sudden death as it seemed to be in its usual health.

NEW SWITCHBOARD INSTALLED

In the Oakland Office of the Garrett County Telephone Company.

Yesterday Mr. E. C. Vandiver, electrician for the Western Maryland Telephone Company came up to Oakland and has been engaged ever since in stalliug a new one hundred drop switchboard in the office of the Garrett County Telephone Company.

This board takes the place of the smaller switchboard which was put in here about two years ago and which has been found inadequate to meet the growing demands of the company. The old board would accommodate about fifty wires and with the new one better service is expected.

The central office which has been at Hoyes for a number of years will be removed to Accident shortly which point is more centrally located and where more direct connection can be made with the lines of the Western Maryland Company.

KILLED NEAR SAVAGE.

Young Man Returning from Bloomington to his Home Struck by Train No. 7.

George Allen, of Savage, West Va., a miner by occupation and employed in the Hampshire mine of the Davis Coal and Coke Company near Bloomington, met with a sad and sudden death Tuesday morning about one o'clock. The young man had been at Bloomington the night previous and was returning to his home by walking down the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. At Savage a freight train was going eastward and stepping from that track to the one opposite to avoid it he was struck and instantly killed by passenger train No. 7 which he did not notice. His funeral will take place today from Westernport and will be in charge of the Jr. O. U. A. M. of Bloomington, of which lodge he was a member. The deceased was single and a very excellent young man.

Gallant Sons of Heroic Sires

By SAMUEL HUBBARD

[Copyright, 1904, by American Press Association.]

THE many gallant sons of heroic sires whose names adorn the roster of the United States army are living contradictions of the time worn adage that the sons of great men never inherit the qualities of their fathers. That the military instinct at least is hereditary is abundantly shown in the perpetuation on the present army lists of the names of many old time war heroes who have passed away.

The most notable instance of this transmission of the military genius and spirit from sire to son is in the Grant family. While it may not be given to other Grants to fill so large a niche in the American Parthenon as does the hero of Appomattox, it can hardly be gainsaid that the spirit and characteristics that contributed to the greatness of Ulysses S. Grant are reproduced in remarkable degree in his son Frederick Dent Grant and in his grandson Ulysses.

Now in the prime of life, General Fred D. Grant is almost a perfect copy of his distinguished father at a corresponding age. He has the same square face, the same tawny beard, the same blue eyes and the same quiet and unobtrusive manner that characterized the great "silent soldier." The pictures of General Ulysses S. Grant taken at the close of the civil war and those of Brigadier General F. D. Grant taken today are strikingly similar. Veterans who have watched with keen interest the career of General Fred Grant in the Philippines and elsewhere are well convinced that he is worthy of his name and should opportunity arise would not be found wanting in those qualities which made his father one of the most conspicuous of American soldiers.

Fred Grant was with his father on the field at Vicksburg and for more than an hour was under a heavy fire without showing the least sign of fear. As he was then only twelve years of age, the father's pride was stirred by his son's exhibition of courage. The pluck that Fred Grant exhibited as a cadet at West Point showed that he had his father's fighting stock in him. He had been in the academy but twenty-four hours when he pitched into a cadet much larger than himself for a supposed insult to his father. At the conclusion of the Fourth of July oration an upper class man in a spirit of banter turned to young Grant and said:

"You know as well as any of us, do you not, that Washington was the greatest statesman and the greatest soldier that this country has ever produced?"

"It may be and probably is a fact that he was the greatest statesman, but I don't think he was any better soldier than my father," was Grant's prompt reply.

BRIGADIER GENERAL FRED D. GRANT.

"What!" shouted the upper class man. "There's no more comparison between your father and George Washington than there is between a plucked hen and the American eagle."

Then Fred sailed in. The two hammered each other until they were separated by older cadets, who told them that Fort Clinton ditch was the proper place and an hour before reveille the proper time for engagements of that sort. The two stripling soldiers fought it out the next morning at sunrise, and both afterward went to the hospital.

Fred Grant had other fights while he was at West Point, though his classmates declare that he never sought a quarrel. He had several encounters with Cadet Quincey O'Malley Gillmore, a son of General Gillmore of civil war fame, who, by the way, furnishes another instance of the transmission from sire to son of the military instinct.

It is a question whether he and Grant ever finally decided the question of their comparative fighting qualities. Sometimes one would thrash the other, and then the operation would be reversed. Fred's classmates always insisted that, however else he differed from his sire, he lacked nothing of his father's courage and perseverence, and the same tendency is heard from those who have been intimately associated with him in later life.

Another characteristic besides courage and perseverence which the present General Grant has in common with his father is that of sticking to his friends and doing things for people because they are his friends. Army officers who were lucky enough to have served at West Point with Grant have since had occasion to thank him for efforts in their behalf. The present General Grant is scarcely less popular among his military compatriots than was the elder General Grant.

General Ulysses S. Grant's second son, Ulysses S., known familiarly in his youth as "Buck" Grant, also inherited many of the Grant characteristics, though he chose a civil rather than a military career. The characteristic features and military spirit of the great soldier have, however, descended through more than one generation. No close study is needed to recognize them in Lieutenant Ulysses S. Grant, the third of the name. He is Fred Grant's son and was born in Chicago in 1881, appropriately enough, on the 4th of July, being named in honor of his grandfather, who took a special pride and interest in him. He looks like his grandfather. His nose, mouth and jaw emphasize the strong influence of heredity in the Grant family. A few days before his death General Ulysses S. Grant wrote to the president, asking him to appoint his grandson to a cadetship in West Point, and Mr. Cleveland gladly did so. He was graduated with second highest honors from that institution last June, assigned to the corps of engineers, U. S. A., and is now serving his country in the Philippines. He has the Grant courage and perseverance, and those who have watched his career thus far are fully assured that he will not dishonor the great name he bears.

Another scion of the Grant family is Lieutenant Algernon Sartoris, grandson of General Ulysses S. Grant and son of the latter's daughter Nellie, who married an Englishman. He demonstrated the possession of the military spirit by serving on the staff of General Fitz-Hugh Lee in the war with Spain and was subsequently given a lieutenant's commission in the regular army, but did not choose to follow the military profession and shortly after resigned.

In the class of 1903 at West Point with Ulysses S. Grant III. were two other sons of famous soldiers. These were Lieutenant Philip H. Sheridan, son of the distinguished cavalry general of that name, and Lieutenant Douglass MacArthur, son of General Arthur MacArthur, first governor of the Philippines. The struggle for first place in the class was between Grant and MacArthur, the decision being in favor of the latter.

Young MacArthur, who has a splendid physique and soldierly bearing, closely resembles his father at a time when the latter, a young Wisconsin lieutenant, earned a medal of honor by seizing the colors of his regiment at a critical moment and planting them on the captured works of the enemy on the crest of Missionary ridge, and no one doubts that the younger soldier is quite capable of the exercise of similar coolness and bravery if occasion arose. Young Sheridan is likewise "a chip off the old block" and could no doubt, if put to the test, duplicate the famous ride "from Winchester, twenty miles away," and fight with no less valor and spirit than did his heroic and dashing sire.

In the class at West Point just below that from which the three young soldiers named have graduated is another gallant son of a heroic sire. This is Sherman Miles, son of General Nelson A. Miles. Though yet an embryo soldier, he shows in marked degree the qualities which raised his father from the ranks to the command of the army of the United States.

The Spanish-American war brought into actual service the sons of many soldiers who had fought in the civil war, both the north and the south being represented. Among these were Lieutenant Thomas M. Anderson, a son of General Anderson of civil war fame, who also served in the Philippines. Lieutenant Anderson had the distinction of hauling down the Spanish colors from the blockhouse at San Juan and is now attached to the Thirteenth infantry. A son of "Fighting Joe" Wheeler, Joseph Wheeler, Jr., is a captain in the artillery corps and well known as one of the bravest young officers in the service. Another distinguished leader of Confederate horse, General Fitz-Hugh Lee, the Bayard of the south, has a son, Fitz-Hugh Lee, Jr., in the United States cavalry who was in service in Cuba and showed that he was worthy of his sire. James Longstreet, Jr., son of the famous General Longstreet, so justly respected by his adversaries of the north as a foeman worthy of their steel, is a first lieutenant in the gallant Thirteenth cavalry. A son of General Micah Jenkins, who was killed in one of the campaigns with Longstreet, is Major Micah Jenkins, who showed his heroic metal at Santiago. Captain Malvern-Hill Barnum of the Eighth United States cavalry, now assigned to duty as instructor in military and international law at the General Service and Staff college at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., is a son of General H. A. Barnum. General Samuel S. Sumner, who has been prominent in the Philippine campaign, but who won his first renown as a lieutenant in the civil war, is a son of General Edwin V. Sumner, an old time war hero, now retired.

Not infrequently does the son of a naval officer seek his fortune in the army, and vice versa. Thomas F. Schley, a son of Admiral Winfield Scott Schley, entered the army as a private in the signal corps and rose from the ranks, being now a captain of infantry. Another naval officer's son is Thomas E. Selfridge, Jr., who graduated last year from the Military academy, whose father and grandfather, both of them admirals, were on the retired list of the navy at the same time.

The instances of the gallant sons of heroic sires who have donned the uniform of Uncle Sam might be still further extended. Doubtless one reason why names are perpetuated in the army list from generation to generation is that high ranking officers are anxious to put their sons into the service and use their influence in Washington to that end. The nonpartisan appointments which the president makes to the army and navy are usually given to such applicants. Undeniably, however, the military impulse and genius, like many other qualities, are heritable, and this probably accounts in large measure for the fact that the scions of fighting fathers adopt so commonly and with so much alacrity the profession of arms. The military spirit plainly runs in the blood.

COMRADES FOREVER

A MEMORIAL DAY POEM

BY T. C. HARBAUGH

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY T. C. HARBAUGH

The rose today is blooming by the winding Tennessee,
Today the lily lifts her crest where stood the tents of Lee,
The oriole is singing where the cannon tore the pines,
And peace has raised an altar fair between the battle lines;
The grass is growing tender on the old war fields afar,
And Love has bid forevermore the gaping wounds of War;
No longer stand the sections where in hatred once they stood,
And sentries guard no sleeping camps in Chickamauga's wood.

The iron fleets have vanished from the rivers of the south;
The bluebird feeds her little brood within the cannon's mouth;
But deep within the forest and beneath the ocean's foam
Are camping yet the gallant men who nevermore came home.
They slumber in their coats of blue in Shenandoah's glen,
They sleep beneath the trenches that were filled with armed men,
They rest in Georgia's fields that shook beneath the warrior's tread—
On many a battlefield of fame are sleeping freedom's dead.

We cover them with flowers, for they nobly wore the blue—
We give the choicest blossoms to the heroes who were true—
On the flag that waved above them on the crimson fields of war
There's not today a missing stripe and not a missing star.
They covered it with glory and beneath its folds they died.
They followed through the battle's flame the banner of their pride,
And that is why we weave today with loving hands the wreath
And lay it on the breasts of those who died a hero's death.

Where the Soldiers Lie in Arlington Cemetery.

How peaceful is the landscape where the crimson rivers ran;
The air is filled with music by the rushing Rapidan;
The sword no longer flashes and the bugle now is still,
And children play where growled the guns upon the deadly hill.
Each day tattoo is beaten; each day beneath the tree
We lay some one who helped to make our country truly free.
The gallant ranks grow thinner, for the veterans are few,
And soon the rose will bloom above the last that wore the blue.

No comrade then will bear a wreath to where a comrade lies,
No comrade then will bend the knee beneath the vaulted skies;
But still by loving hands the wreath of fame will woven be,
And flowers on the brave will fall from sounding sea to sea.
The beauty of the lily and the glory of the rose
Will Nature shed in all the camps where freedom's dead repose,
Content to let her children rest where flowers deck the sod,
In the heart of their great country and the bosom of their God.

They'll wake in God's bright morning when the mists have rolled away,
The men who for their country stood before the ranks in gray;
The trumpets of Jehovah, ringing loud and ringing true,
Will call to heaven's camping grounds the mighty hosts in blue;
He'll call them from the meadows, from the mountain's rugged crest;
He'll call them from the rivers, from the ocean's heaving breast;
And once again united as they battled in their prime,
They will comrades be forever in that everlasting clime.

Miss Lucy's Memorial Day Romance

By CARLOTTA PERRY

[Copyright, 1904, by Carlotta Perry.]

She was a sweet faced, sweet voiced woman, with brown hair that had barely a gray thread in it and that had not lost its pretty trick of curling around the temples. There were very few lines on her face, none that discontent or weak repining had caused, and there was a delicate rose tint on her cheeks that had defied time in a way not usual with rose tints. She was fifty-six years old, though she did not look it, not by ten good years; even her enemies said that, or they would have said it, if she had had any enemies. She was country bred, and ten years in the city had not reconciled her to the big apartment buildings which her friends and relatives thought so delightful. So she lived, like St. Paul, in her own hired house in a charming suburb. There was a dear little lawn in front where, in their season, red geraniums and double petunias blossomed in the generous fashion of the old home garden in "York state." In the rear were rows of hollyhocks against the fence and a grass plot that was even dearer to her than the one in front. She said it looked homey. In order to maintain her own establishment and not lose herself in the families of nieces and second cousins she rented out a couple of rooms. A card with the legend "Furnished Rooms" was, as occasion made necessary, placed in a window that in a sidewise fashion faced the street.

On the morning of this Memorial day one of the two roomers unexpectedly went away. The lady expressed much regret at leaving without notice, but Miss Bassett said: "Never mind, my dear. If you are called to go, some one else will be called to come." Then with unruffled serenity she set the card in the window.

As was her custom, in honor of the day she hung a cherished old flag out on the porch. She heard the music of a band in the distance and wondered if it would pass her door; then, remembering her promise to a veteran's widow, she went out to gather such flowers as the garden yields to the late May in the northern climate. Lilacs, syringas, violets, jonquils—her generous basket made a brave showing as the waiting messenger took it.

"For memory's sake," she said, thinking of the old village burying ground where her soldier dead were sleeping. She had pinned a tiny flag on her white gown just as she did, so many years ago, when Company K marched down the street of her little native town. The young lady next door, whose lover was in the Philippines, smiled at her from her own porch, and the gay sixteen-year-old girl across the street said she supposed Miss Bassett was one of the girls who got left in 1864, that war grandpa served in.

Then a tall, fine looking, elderly man with a Grand Army button on his coat and a rose pinned close to it, passing along, saw the woman in the garden and an instant later the card in the window. He hesitated a moment, then a moment more, and Miss Bassett was saying in response to his question:

"I'm sorry, sir, but I take only ladies. I find it pleasanter. I'm sorry," she repeated, noticing the button, "and you a soldier too."

"Don't feel bad on that account, madam. I was a soldier, but I'm not bearing gun and knapsack now. Business keeps me in Chicago for a month, and it occurs to me that it would be pleasant to spend a part of the time away from the crowd. The city is such a horror."

AN ELDERLY MAN SAW THE WOMAN IN THE GARDEN.

"Indeed, it must be," she responded. "I think it horrid myself."

"But you are so delightfully removed from the noise and confusion"—then suddenly—"you seem to have a kindly feeling for the soldier, madam. Probably you remember the civil war; possibly you have sons in our army now?"

Miss Bassett replied promptly, ignoring the last infliction: "Certainly I remember the civil war. Why not? I was a soldier's daughter and a soldier's sister."

"Ah, then we might talk over old times together. Perhaps you would permit a tired veteran to rest awhile on your pleasant porch."

Miss Bassett looked in vain for any sign of weariness in the face or frame of the man, but saying, "I think we will find it pleasanter inside; this east porch is rather sunny," she led the way into a little sitting room. Then they sat down and talked like old comrades. They compared experience. She told him of the father that fell in battle, of the brother that brought death home with him. He had been a three months' man, she said, then at the second call re-enlisted and served until his regiment disbanded. He left the service with the rank of colonel and a bullet wound in his shoulder. Then he spoke of the day his company left home, of the girls who waved them goodby as the train moved away. Looking straight in her eyes, he said, "There were the Hadley girls, Mollie Potter, Anna Campbell, Linda Kimball and you, Lucy—you! Oh, I knew you at the first glance! The years have been kind to you, Lucy."

MISS BASSETT'S WARTIME PICTURE.

"I was sure of it!" she cried. "You are John Armstrong!"

"Beyond a doubt I am, and you were Lucy Bassett."

"I am Lucy Bassett," she answered.

It was easy talking of old times now. All the friends of their youth they remembered, all the good times they had when she was eighteen and he five years older. They looked through an old photograph album together. "I wouldn't show this to any one else on earth," she said. "It does make one feel so antiquated."

"Rather so," he responded. "Here we all are in line just as we used to be—Tom and Charley and Will, and here am I too. Brave boys were we with the fierce eye and the feeble mustache and now and then a shoulder strap. 'Grim visaged war,' aged twenty-three! And here are the girls, 'the girl with blue eyes that sang alto and the girl with brown eyes that sang air.' By the way," he continued, "do you remember the songs we sang together, you and I? We sang well together in those days, so we thought. No one but the soldier knows what the old songs were to the boys in camp. They were not all war songs. We sang of love and home oftener than of fame. The night before Charley died in the hospital tent he sang snatches of 'The Mocking Bird,' whispering Mollie Potter's name softly. 'Under the Willow' was a favorite. And 'Lorena'—how the boys loved it! We sang every one of the eight verses and wept. Weeping when one is young has its pleasures. One verse of the song ran something like this." He repeated the words slowly:

"We loved each other then, Lorena,
More than we ever dared to tell,
And what we might have been, Lorena,
Had but our loving prospered well."

Miss Bassett studied the photograph album intently.

"This was the last verse:

"But there is a future, oh, thank God,
Of life this is so small a part.
'Tis dust to dust beneath the sod,
But there, up there, 'tis heart to heart."

Still she did not lift her eyes.

He rose and, holding out his hand, said: "I must go. I thank you for this hour. Goodby, Lucy."

"Goodby, John."

He had reached the door. Then he turned back. "What idiocy to think I can leave you this way. Why must it be 'up there,' wherever 'there' may be. Why not here, Lucy, why not here? I lost you once. How it happened I do not know. Never mind, so it doesn't happen again. Lucy, answer me!"

"But, John, we are so"—

"So old, you want to say. We are not old. You are a beautiful woman and I'm a splendid looking fellow—everybody says so. We'll be a thousand times handsomer couple than we would have been thirty years ago. And you will go with me away from this big city into the land of roses and vines, and peace and quiet and love, and we'll be so happy as to make up for the departed years. Say 'yes,' Lucy, dear, say 'yes.'"

An hour later he went down the street walking as one who keeps step to glad heart music. Miss Bassett went to the window and took down the card. She must have said yes.

Trust Companies and National Banks

By W. B. RIDGELY,
Comptroller of the Currency

TRUST companies, organized under state laws originally designed to provide for companies doing a STRICTLY TRUST BUSINESS, are taking advantage of the liberal character of those laws, and a very large portion of the new organizations are merely COMMERCIAL BANKS, having trust company privileges, perhaps, but in reality doing comparatively little strictly trust business. The laws of the different states, particularly in regard to the cash reserves to be held and with regard to loaning money on real estate security, are so liberal that organizations of this character have a great advantage over the national banks in the inducements they can offer their customers.

The question of what shall be done in the way of control of these new trust companies is a very important one. It would be a great mistake for the different states to allow the national banking system to be broken down or even SERIOUSLY WEAKENED by new organizations which are able to do so because they are less carefully examined and controlled by the states than the national banks.

The regular trust company business is a very important part of any financial system, and calls for the highest degree of character, honor and ability. When the trust companies attempt to add not only ordinary commercial banking, but in many cases underwriting and promotion of all sorts of new enterprises, the case becomes entirely different. It can hardly be said to be a reasonable or proper regulation of the banking and trust company business to allow the organization, under the same law, of concerns which not only have the power to act as trustees in important capacities, but which also have the power, if the management is so recklessly inclined, to do a general commercial banking business WITH LITTLE OR NO CASH RESERVE, and even to underwrite, as has been done in a recent notable instance, an issue of bonds and securities several times in value the combined capital, surplus and deposits of the so called trust company.

If there is any reason why a national bank should maintain reserves against commercial deposits the same reason will apply to commercial accounts in any other bank, whether called a trust company or not. A trust company with a large business in its trust department, if it also has a banking or savings department, owes it to its customers and to the public to see that the banking department is not so conducted as in the slightest degree to endanger its trusts.

THE VERY EXISTENCE OF THOSE TRUST OBLIGATIONS SHOULD MAKE ITS BANKING DEPARTMENT ULTRA CONSERVATIVE AND CAREFUL, AS SO MANY OF THEM ARE.

The trust company whose chief business is in its banking and savings department, and is carefully and conservatively managed, is more interested than any one else that reckless and incompetent, not to say dishonest, men shall not be given similar charters under laws which are so liberal as to permit them to run competing banks without proper reserves and all the SAFEGUARDS which experience in all countries have shown to be necessary in conducting the banking business.

Whatever regulation or control there is to be of the trust companies must come, for the present at least, FROM THE STATE GOVERNMENTS. Federal control of the national banks has been so satisfactory and successful that some desire is expressed for federal control of OTHER banks and trust companies. There has not been, however, so far as I know, any practical suggestion made by which institutions can be forced or persuaded to submit to federal control, especially if it is to be more severe than that now experienced by the states.

FEDERAL CONTROL, THEREFORE, DOES NOT SEEM TO BE A PRESENT PRACTICAL QUESTION.

The Patriotism That Is Needed

By MAY WRIGHT SEWALL, President International Council of Women

THE one thing which we know must be done in order that the international court of arbitration at The Hague may be made PRACTICAL is the abandonment of national arrogance and the substitution therefor of a RATIONAL, HIGH MINDED PATRIOTISM. We need a patriotism which shall recognize that the democracy which we have been so proud to establish between man and man in our own country is equally applicable to nations.

BEFORE THE COURT OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION SHALL BE PRACTICAL AND HELPFUL THERE MUST BE A DEMOCRACY OF FEELING AMONG THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD.

It must not be any more possible for a nation to take ALL THE VIRTUES to itself and ascribe ALL THE IGNORANCE to the Latin races or to the Asiatic races than it is possible within a republic for an individual to assume for himself any virtue to which the humblest member of the commonwealth may not aspire. We need that kind of patriotism which shall be neither arrogance nor a maudlin sentimentalism, but which shall be a love of one's country LARGER THAN THE LOVE FOR ONESELF, because in one's country one is mutiplied by many millions, because in the aggressive man one sees a larger reflection of the image of the creative God.

COLONEL MONROE

A Reawakening of Patriotism Called For and Predicted by the Colonel In His Recent Address In Lincolnville

By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

Copyright, 1902, by Frederick Upham Adams

THE published extracts from Colonel Monroe's oration in Lincolnville have been so widely copied and so favorably received as to warrant an accurate report of his concluding remarks. After calling attention to the more conspicuous of the scandals which have disgraced state and municipal legislation and the administration of public service the speaker continued as follows:

"Where shall we lay the ax in order to strike the taproot of the tree of political corruption? In what school were reared these boards of public thieves, these shameless betrayers of a confidence reposed in them by the people? A day has come when the thieves and their methods are known. Here and there we hear languid denunciation of a guarded and impersonal character, but I fail to note any sign of a popular uprising which shall bring rascality to justice. Why this negative tolerance of venality? These are questions which all true patriots and all honest lovers of their country should ask of each other on this day.

"I am firmly convinced of the truth of the saying that a community or nation always has as good a government and as honest a set of officials as it deserves. Show to me a dishonest alderman and I will point to you a district or ward inhabited by dishonest people. As a rule, corrupt municipal councils are possible only in cities whose leading and more influential citizens are personally corrupt and the mass of whose voters admire and seek to emulate successful plunderers. A series of corrupt legislative bodies is a brand of infamy on the brow of any state which elects and tolerates them. A man is known by his works and a community by the character and acts of its representatives.

"Back of every representative, senator, judge or other public official stands a community which should be and which in the final analysis is responsible for his actions. Elected and elector are mutually representative, but the larger share of responsibility rests upon the latter.

"An honest community, whose members have a proper sense of pride in their citizenship, cannot make the mistake of electing a dishonest man to office. There are honest citizens who are careless in their duties as electors, and the same can be said of certain communities, but any constituency which returns discredited and suspected officials deserves to share the obloquy of its accredited representatives.

"The plea of a district that it is misrepresented is a confession of indifference, stupidity or cowardice. Honest, intelligent and patriotic men do not tolerate the domination of selected thieves. The time has arrived when the responsibility for the rule of corruption must be placed where it belongs—with the individual voter. In a monarchy corruption springs from the king or his court. In a republic its fountain head is the people.

"Let us look the truth full in the face. The passion for wealth, the craze for possessions and the frenzied struggle for money have reached a climax in which moral principles are ignored and almost forgotten. Money! Money! Money at any price! These are the cries which swell into an angry chorus, deafening all words of admonition or warning. We have no popular ideals other than those expressed in dollars and cents. Our great men are our moneyed men. To be rich is to be exalted; to be poor is to be disgraced. No longer do we have honorable poverty, and by the same token no longer do we have dishonorable wealth.

"I do not overdraw the picture. We are witnesses to such spectacles as powerful corporations combining into pools in defiance of the enacted and valid laws of the land, and we watch these conspirators as they secretly violate these illegal compacts in order that one faction may obtain a financial advantage over the other in the shattering of a 'gentlemen's agreement.' Who now quotes except in derision the motto, 'Honesty is the best policy?' The customer watches the retailer and the retailer suspects the customer. Ten thousand factories are flooding the markets with adulterated or counterfeited articles. Wholesalers extend their trade or defeat their rivals by bribing the trusted representatives of purchasers.

"The reign of 'graft' is not confined to public officials. The janitor exacts tribute from the various purchases of the tenants he is supposed to serve. Coal dealers are aware of the fact that in innumerable instances no 'business' can be done with certain customers without first paying a 'commission' to some subordinate. From the barber who shirks his duty because of the refusal of a bribe in the form of a 'tip' to the president of a vast corporation who authorizes the corruption of a chain of state legislatures there has spread a system of thievery. What shall be said of the moral tone of community when 'kleptomania' has become a fad and when 'ladies' and 'gentlemen' display to their visiting friends the collections of silverware stolen from the public and private places to which they have been admitted as guests?

"I may be in error, but I hold that the average official does about what his constituency expects of him. If he is honest he reflects honesty, and if he is dishonest he reflects dishonesty. It is a severe statement to make, but the conclusion is inevitable that the low moral tone of our public service has its foundation in the low moral tone of those who create it.

"I met a young man recently who had been appointed to a public position of considerable importance. He is a man of high moral character. He was reared by parents who had old fashioned views of honesty, and the boy is worthy of their training. He was much discouraged when he came to me.

"'I hold a position,' he said, 'which compels me to finally pass upon the awarding of contracts involving the expenditure of large sums of money. I like the work, and the salary is satisfactory. I fear, however, that I shall be compelled to tender my resignation.'

"When I pressed him for reasons for taking such a step he said:

"'I am constantly subjected to insults from those whom I considered my friends and to indignities from those with whom my official position throws me in contact. Nearly all of my old acquaintances assume that I am in a position where I can—well, to put it bluntly, steal money. It seems to be established beyond a doubt that my predecessor took unfair advantage of his place, and he died rich and respected. My friends seem to be divided into two classes, one of which assumes that I am lining my pockets at the expense of the public treasury. These congratulate me on my luck or influence in securing so favorable a field for loot and advise me to make hay while the sun shines. So much for the first class. The second class esteems me an honest man and consequently an ass. I am assured by these advisers that no one will be the wiser if I exact a commission from successful bidders; that it is a recognized and established custom and a legitimate perquisite to which I am entitled; that I never will acquire influence until I put powerful interests under obligation to me; that I am expected to derive such revenues and to pay a liberal percentage of them into the party treasury in order to win a victory in the next election, and, finally, that my notions of honesty are so out of date as to stamp me as a fool or a hypocrite. I am alternately threatened or cajoled by those whose accepted bribes would permit them to rob the community.'

"I listened to him, and when he had ended asked him if there was not a third class he had forgotten.

"'Surely,' I said, 'there must be some who know your attitude and indorse it. The commendation of these honest citizens should more than repay the slurs of your false friends.'

"He assured me that no such class existed in his case, or had come under his observation. Shortly after this interview the young man resigned his position and was succeeded by a 'practical' politician.

"It is idle to hope for political or official honesty until such time as there is a national revival of civic and business honesty. There will come a time when the frenzy of money madness will be succeeded by a return to sane morality. Nature seems to have ordained that all things move in cycles, and this one will pass away. The future student of history will read the puzzling record of these times and doubt the accuracy of the historian who declares that an era once existed when the dazzled worshipers of money almost forgot the distinctions between vice and virtue.

"Our country stands in need of the patriots and of the patriotism of honesty. The great heart of the nation and of its people yet beats true to the lofty ideals of the past, but its eyes are fixed on the gleaming heaps of gold which lie scattered along its path of progress, and its ears are ravished by the incantations of its devotees. Destiny holds in store for this people a grandeur which never comes even as a dream to the delvers and graspers after material greatness."

A Little Too Much.

The celebration of the carnivals, as the last days before the coming of Lent are called in European countries, reached its highest and gayest point in Paris during the old monarchy. Everybody went into the streets to be pelted with confections and to have a mad time generally.

A royal prince, the Duke of Orleans, wishing to take part in the merriment, put on fanciful garments and went out with his friend Dubois.

"Now," said the prince to Dubois, "in order that my identity may not be suspected, you must not treat me as if I were a prince, but, on the contrary, with familiarity."

"Very well, monseigneur," said Dubois.

They went out. The fun grew fast and furious, and Dubois, in the midst of his other familiarities, ventured actually to kick his royal highness.

"Hold on!" said the prince, with a groan. "Stop that! You're disguising me too much!"

FOR CONGRESS:

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

CARRIE NATION lost $50 on a bet that President Roosevelt used tobacco. She can get her money back by putting it on Roosevelt in the presidential race.

THERE is no chance of Senator Gorman's moving onto Executive Avenue, Washington, D. C. There is only one house, a white one, on that street, and it is not open to Democrats.

THERE will be none to refuse to pay the highest meed of tribute to Dr. S Weir Mitchell, whether as man, poet, romancer or physician. But when he rises in the might of his assured position and insists that goat's blood and not good, old Bourbon, is the sovereignest antidote for the bite of the rattler, it is time to kick. At least it is time to enter a protest against the attempted overturning and destruction of a faith that is as old as Bourbon, if not as old as the snake as a disturbing element.

TRUSTS and the tariff will be important issues in the coming campaign. It is important that the position of the two great parties in reference to these questions should be well understood by the voters.

The attitude of the Republican party toward the trusts is that while great organizations of industry are the natural outcome of our present industrial system, their interests are second to the interests of the nation; they are amenable to the law, and like the humblest private individual, they must be made to obey the law. The only anti-trust laws now on the statute books were enacted by a Republican Congress, and were enforced only by a Republican administration. The Democratic attitude on the trust question is an unknown quantity, lying somewhere between the Hearst trust-busters and the Cleveland trust-boosters. If the Democrats were in power next fall they would probably never come to an agreement as to what was to be done with the trusts, and if they did agree they they could not do anything, as the Senate will remain Republican no matter how the fall election may run.

The Republican position on the tariff will be summed up in their platform about as follows: Protection, which guards and developes American industries, is a cardinal principle of the Republican party. The Republicans recognize that particular tariff schedules are neither sacred nor immutable, and may be changed when altered conditions demand their revision. Such revision should be undertaken only when it is clear that the benefit will more than compensate for the disturbance of business which inevitably attends a revision of the tariff schedules. The Democrats' position on the tariff is a matter of guesswork. Just before Congress adjourned, W. Bourke Cockran, their star orator, made a violent free trade speech. A few days later Representative Williams, their leader in the House of Representatives, declared that free trade was impossible. However, the Democrats believe either in free trade, tariff, revision, reciprocity, or protection; here also there are Democratic busters and boosters. If they were to come into power next fall, the Republican Senate would prevent them from changing the tariff, but their reckless and planless attacks upon it would probably bring about once again the disaster and panic of 1893.

Looking at the situation carefully, it is seen that there is sound sense in the Republican advice: Let well enough alone; stand pat; take no chances.

MINOR POLITICAL PARTIES.

Presidential years are usually hard on the minor political parties. The lines are tightly drawn for supremacy between the two great parties, and comparatively few voters ally themselves with organizations which confessedly will poll but a scattering vote of the vast total that will be cast in these quadriennial contests.

The vote of minor parties in 1896 and 1900 was unusually small because in those two years the Populist vote was merged in that of the Democrats in support of Bryan. In 1900 one branch of the Populists, under the title of People's party, refused to fuse and supported Wharton Barker for president, who received 50,109 votes. This year, however, the two wings of the Populist party will likely work together, having united in a call for a Populist convention in July. This is on the assumption that the Democrats will cut loose from Bryanism and nominate some "reorganizer" like Parker or Gorman.

Speaking of minor political parties the New York Tribune says:

"The Prohibition party has apparently exhausted its capacity for growth. It is losing rather than gaining ground. In 1892 Bidwell, as a Presidential candidate, got 270,367 votes. In 1900 Wooley got 209,062. There is no prospect of a turn this year in this weakened and stagnant party's fortunes. The Socialists party, known in 1900 as the Social Democratic party, has shown in recent years some signs of vitality. Its vote in 1900 was 92,142. It preaches governmental socialism and labor unionism; and should the present tendancy in the Democratic party toward socialistic policies be checked by the nomination this year of a conservative like Judge Parker, of the Socialist party, like the Populist, failing a bolt from the convention and the nomination of a radical Democratic ticket, would profit appreciably by Democratic disaffection. The Socialist Labor party is a somewhat mysterious organization, with a smaller following than any of its rivals among the minor parties. It polled 33,375 votes in 1900, over a third of that total being cast here in New York. In the main, the American people care little for third parties. They believe in the bipartisan system, and avail themselves of the smaller organizations only when the two great parties fail them and they are driven to register some sudden and violent protest. There is little prospect this year of any popular upheavel such as gave General Weaver more than 1,000,000 votes in 1892. Only a serious Democratic schism can justify refulgent dreams on the part of minor party managers."

JENNINGS

Last Thursday evening a camp of American Woodmen was organized at this place, twenty-eight charter members being initiated. More to follow next week.

Mr. Stanley S. Jennings' smiling face has been missed from Jennings Bros.' store for the past two weeks, as he has been on the sick list.

Mrs. Stanley Jennings, who has been very sick with the chickenpox, is improving slowly.

The tennis court is now in fine condition, and some interesting games are being played.

Jennings Bros. expect to peel a large amount of bark this coming season, and bark peelers are in demand. It is a fact that the town is so booming that there is no difficulty experienced by anyone who is desirous of securing employment.

Mr. T. E. Pole has recovered from a severe attack of appendicitis.

Mr. Ed. Hazelbarth and Miss Allie Smith, of Salisbury, visited this town on Ascension Day, and went fishing in company with Miss Gerda Marriott and Miss Sara Jennings. We might add that the amount of fish taken did not overload Mr. Hazelbarth's buggy on his return.

Mr. David Mitchell was struck by a flying edging while working in the saw-mill one day last week, and the missle broke his arm and several ribs. He is doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances.

Since the gardening season commenced Mr. C. M. Tozer is the early bird. The sound of his hoe in the early hours of the morning disturbs the slumbers of those living near his residence.

Mr. Herman Behr is the chief agriculturalist and landscape gardener in this vicinity. He is improving the appearance of his grounds very much.

Last Friday evening there was a dance in the Bevans hall, given by Messrs. Clarence and Ray Bevans.

Mr. May, of Boynton, Penna., is making arrangements to come here and embark in the barbering business.

Married.

Harvey—Aronhalt.—On Thursday, May 19th, 1904, at the residence of Mr. George M. Mason in Oakland, by Rev. J. H. Koch, of Brandonville, West Va., Mr. Elliot C. Harvey and Miss Laura Aronhalt, both of Garrett county. The groom was a member of the last Legislature and well known throughout the county as a worthy gentleman. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Aronhalt, of District No. 8 and has a host of friends. THE REPUBLICAN extends its congratulations coupled with the wish that the newly wedded pair may live long and prosper.

GEN. CHAFFEE AND STAFF WILL VISIT OAKLAND

Tuesday of Next Week When They will Inspect Proposed Camp Site.

WILL BE ACCOMPANIED BY WIVES.

Party Returning to Washington from Morgantown Where They will Participate in Memorial Day Exercises Monday—Stay in Oakland will be Short.

A last and final effort will be made by the citizens of Oakland on Tuesday next to have the permanent army camp located near Oakland upon which occasion General Chaffee and three or four members of his staff, accompanied by their wives, will stop in Oakland on their return to Washington from Morgantown where the gentlemen of the party will participate on Monday in the Decoration Day exercises to be held there.

Upon arriving at Oakland Tuesday morning in a private car the party will be met at the station by a committee of Oakland citizens with conveyances in which they will be taken to the ground proposed to be used for the army camp and after viewing it the return will be made to Oakland where dinner will be served and in the afternoon a pleasure drive will be taken through Mountain Lake Park to Deer Park and return.

Arrangements to this effect was made at a meeting held at the Schley Hotel last night which was participated in by a number of interested citizens.

BITTINGER.

A party of sportsmen from Boynton, Pa., passed through here last Monday enroute for Deep Creek, where they will spend a few days fishing. The party was piloted by Mr. Martin Bowman, a former Garrett county school teacher.

Mr. Daniel J. Brenneman and Miss Michaels, of Firm Rock, were quietly married last Sunday, and on Monday evening a reception was given in honor of the occasion, at Mr. Brenneman's home on Manadier's Ridge.

Mr. William Livingood, of Somerset county, Pa., was 'Squire Ralston's guest last Friday night.

Messrs. Simon Meyers and Young Lohr, of Oakland, are here lathing the new parsonage, getting ready for the plasterers who are expected on in a few days.

Mr. Albert Brenneman and family and Mr. Chas. Sechler and family went over into Pennsylvania last week for a visit with relatives.

Mr. Simon Brenneman, contractor and builder, began work last week on the first job of the season, a new barn on Mr. John Hetrich's farm.

Mrs. C. E. Ellithorpe is numbered among the ailing this week.

Mr. Perry Broadwater keeps close to the house, playing peep with a brand new daughter. It has been keeping him company since Monday, May 16th.

Mr. Simon Beechy narrowly escaped serious injury recently. Last Saturday afternoon while felling timber for the Meadow Mountain Lumber Co. a falling limb struck him, slightly bruising his face and shoulder.

Orphan's Court Proceedings.

The semi monthly session of the Orphan's Court was held in Oakland last Tuesday with Judges Wilson, Feik and McMillan and Register Friend present, when the following business was transacted:

Letters of administration were granted Mrs. H. Lashorn on the personal estate of her late husband, Joseph Lashorn.

The court heard testimony in the case of Michaels vs. Custer which consumed several hours.

Accounts were passed as follows:

First and final account of H. G. Sanders administrator of Mary L. Sanders.

First and final account of J. H. Sterling administrator of Robert Sterling.

First account of Sarah E. Harvey, administratrix of Daniel R. Harvey.

Fifth account of Sallie Brenneman, guardian.

The inventory of the personal estate of James R. Bishop, deceased was filed by his administrators.

DEATH OF DR. MINNIE MAY SMITH.

Which Occurred at McKeesport, Pa., on May 14th.

Dr. Minnie May Smith, a former resident of Hoyes, but for several years past a resident of McKeesport, Pa., died at that place on May 14, of nervous prostration. She was a very progressive, interesting young woman, loved and respected by all who knew her, both at home and abroad, and leaves a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

She has crossed over death's dark river and is resting under the shade of the trees, waiting to welcome her friends and loved ones to that land of eternal spring and never fading flowers.

She left the home of her girlhood a few years ago and accepted a position as clerk in the W. F. Fredricks music store at McKeesport. While there she made many friends and by her untiring efforts and industry contributed largely to the success of her employer's business. From there she went to the office of Dr. J. B. Clifford and later took up the profession of optician, graduating with honors in one of the best schools in Chicago, and still wishing to make herself more proficient in her chosen profession, she went to Philadelphia where she took a special course, graduating as trained nurse. After returning from Philadelphia, she opened an office in the new Natatorium building, Fifth avenue, where she died. Her remains, accompanied by her brother Will, Mrs. W. O. Marks a close friend, and attending physician, Dr. J. B. Clifford, were brought to Hoyes and after a very appropriate sermon by the Rev. D. A. Friend, her remains were interred in the family cemetery at Hoyes, her casket being covered and grave decorated by banks of the most beautiful flowers contributed by her many friends.

Her brothers and sisters were all present and her pall bearers were her playmates and childhood friends, Misses Olia and Bernadette Mattingly, Blanche and Dessie Callis, Bertha, Clara, Sadie and Ethel DeWitt.

From the McKeesport Times the following is republished:

"A large circle of friends will read with much regret the sudden death this morning at 10 o'clock of Dr. Minnie May Smith, a popular young lady optician, at her quarters in the new Natatorium building, Fifth avenue. Death was due to nervous prostration, from which she had been suffering the past five weeks. She only returned from Philadelphia April 1, last, where she had taken special course in her profession and only recently opened an office in the Natatorium building. Her health had not been vigorous and the attack of nervous prostration followed constant study in her profession. Deceased was 33 years old, born in Hoyes, Garrett county, Maryland, and had been a resident of McKeesport the past several years. She was formerly a clerk in W. F. Frederick's music srore and from there went to Dr. J. B. Clifford, and later took up the profession of optician. She was a most popular young lady, of a cheerful and winning disposition and had surrounded herself with many friends. Her brother, from Hoyes, Md., was at her bedside when she died. Deceased had apartments with Mr. and Mrs. W. O. Marks, in the Natatorium building. The services will be conducted there tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, entrance from Ringgold street, Rev. J. A. Maxwell officiating. The remains will be taken to deceased's home, Hoyes, Md., for interment next Monday morning."

CHAS. J. NEWMAN,

Letter to Clark Deberry.

Dear Sir: We manage to get some fun out of paint. J. H. Kohlmeyer, Grove City, Pa, put-in Devoe. Along came a salesman of somebody else's paint before ours had got there. Salesman said ours was short-measure. Kohlmeyer weakened hung-fire and flopped; stopped ours and took his.

It was our turn now. We emptied our can into his and his into ours.

The short-measure was his, not ours; and we kept our man.

And ever since then, that paint-manufacturer gives full-measure; his paint is not pure, but his gallon contains four quarts.

Go by the name; and the name to go by is Devoe lead-and-zinc.

Yours truly
F. W. Devoe & Co.

BALLOTS BURNED.

Those Used in Last Election Go Up in Smoke.

Election Supervisors C. M. Miller, Edmund Jamison and Edward E. Sollars, in the presence of the Judges of the Orphans' Court, burned the ballots used in the election last fall in the furnace of the Oakland Roller Mills. This was done in accordance with the provisions of the election law.

The Supervisors will meet again on June 24th, at which time Officers of Registration for the next year will be appointed.

Pension Granted.

Web Orcutt, a volunteer soldier in the Spanish-American War, and after the cessation of hostilities stationed at Porto Rico where he contracted malaria fever and later discharged as an invalid, has been granted a pension of $24 per month dating from October last. He received his voucher Saturday for the back pay amounting to $167. The pension was secured through Messrs. Offutt & Reninger, of Oakland.

DIED.

CONNER—Mr. C. W. Conner, who was one of the founders of Mountain Lake Park, a member of the board of directors of the Park Association, and for many years one of the annual committee of Mountain Lake Park, departed this life May 18th, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Laura Smythe, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. C. was a useful citizen of this community. He will be greatly missed. He was buried at Wheeling on the 21st inst.

MACKIN—At the home of his son-in-law, John A. Hughes, Esq., in District No. 8, Thursday, May 19th, of a disease incident to advanced years, John Mackin, aged about 77 years. Mr. Mackin was born in the Parish of Milltown, County Galway, Ireland, and came to this country in May, 1866, settling on the farm owned by him at the time of his death, which is located a mile or two west of Oakland, where he raised a large family of sons and daughters, five of whom, Mrs. John Hughes, Mrs. John Foley, John, Owen and James, are living. For the past month or more he resided with his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. Hughes. His funeral took place Sunday afternoon from St. Peter's Catholic Church of which he was a life-long and consistent member.

SHAFFER—At her home two miles north of Oakland, after a brief illness, Mrs. Henry Shaffer. The deceased was a native of Germany and had resided on the farm where she died for well on to forty years. She was a member of the Catholic church from which edifice her funeral took place Sunday afternoon.

RIES—At her home in Accident on Saturday evening, of dropsy, after an illness of several weeks, Mrs. Fred. C. Ries, aged about forty years.

The deceased prior to her marriage was a Miss Snyder, being a sister of the late Christian Snyder. She leaves her husband and several children. Her funeral took place Tuesday from her late home. The bereaved family have the sympathy of their friends.

Alleged Theif Arrested.

Monday afternoon Sheriff E. J. Frantz brought to Oakland from a point down near Bittinger a man named Wilt who was charged with having stolen some articles from certain persons living in that community. Wilt was placed in jail and will probably remain there until the September term of the Circuit Court.

Rev. J. H. Koch, formerly of Aurora, and well known in Oakland, passed through here last Thursday on his way to Brandonville, West Va., where he is now stationed as pastor of the Methodist church. Rev. Koch was ill nearly all the winter and at one time his life was despaired of. He has fully regained his health and is active in his work at Brandonville

SHYLOCK

Shylock was the man who wanted a pound of human flesh. There are many Shylocks now, the convalescent, the consumptive, the sickly child, the pale young woman, all want human flesh and they can get it—take Scott's Emulsion.

Scott's Emulsion is flesh and blood, bone and muscle. It feeds the nerves, strengthens the digestive organs and they feed the whole body.

For nearly thirty years Scott's Emulsion has been the great giver of human flesh.

We will send you a couple of ounces free.

FIRE DESTROYS LUMBER MILL.

Was the Property of Judge Elias Merrill and Sons at Merrill.

Fire on Saturday morning at 2 o'clock, which, presumably, caught in some saw-dust and smouldered from about six o'clock the evening before, destroyed the saw, shingle and chop mill at Merrill, belonging to ex-Judge Elias Merrill and sons, entailing a loss of one thousand dollars with no insurance.

Besides burning the mill and machinery about twenty thousand shingles and two thousand feet of manufactured lumber was destroyed. A stack of 75,000 shingles was saved by removing them after the fire had been discovered.

Judge Merrill thinks that the engine and boiler of the mill can be repaired at a slight expense which will materially lessen the loss above given.

The mill will be rebuilt as soon as possible and the business resumed.

DECORATION DAY

Will Be Quietly Observed In Oakland on Next Monday.

Decoration Day, May 30th, will be quietly observed in Oakland next Monday, May 30th, by Crook Post, Grand Army of the Republic, and the organized bodies of the town.

The members of the Post will meet at Post Hall at ten o'clock. The public school children are requested to assemble at the public school building and march with the scholars of the Normal to the Post headquarters where they will join the veterans and organized bodies and proceed thence to the cemetery where the graves of the departed will be decorated as is the yearly custom, and the ritual of the G. A. R. carried out. At the cemetery an address will be made by an old soldier and a literary program rendered.

Flowers for the purpose may be left at Sturgiss pharmacy where they will be gratefully received and appreciated by the soldiers.

Owners of burial plots at the cemeteries have been busy this week cleaning up their lots, cutting the grass and making them generally presentable for the occasion.

Muco-Solvent is an indispensible household remedy because it is a preventive as well as a cure, and because it arrests development of all contageous germs and bacterial diseases. It cures croup, colds, tonsilitis with its associated ills and all inflamed and catarrhal conditions of the mucous surface. It is a harmless vegetable preparation that may safely be administered to the tenderest babe. If not for sale in your neighborhood, write to

DEATH OF SAMUEL JOHNSON.

Expired Yesterday Afternoon at His Home In Frostburg.

Mr. Samuel Johnson, twin brother of the late Joshua Johnson, died yesterday afternoon at the home of his sister, Mrs. Coulehan, in Frostburg, from an attack of pleurisy, at the age of 65 years.

Mr. Johnson removed from his farm in this county to Frostburg several years ago where he associated himself in the saw mill and lumber business with his brother and on the death of his brother Joshua a few months ago he was appointed administrator of the estate. Some days ago Mr. Johnson was stricken with pleurisy and continued quite ill, gradually getting worse until his death occurred yesterday afternoon at two o'clock. He was a very conservative business man and had amassed considerable wealth. He was well known throughout this county.

Wedding at Firm Rock.

Miss Amandania Michaels, daughter of Mr. Kelita Michaels, was married to Mr. Daniel Brenneman, a retired farmer of Garrett county, Md., at the home of the bride's parents at Firm Rock, Sunday, May 22nd, 1904, Rev. Collins of the M. E. church, Piedmont, officiating. The ceremony was witnessed by a large number of friends of both bride and groom.

The bride was attired in champagne silk, with drop yoke of Irish point lace.

After the ceremony the happy couple and friends were ushered into the spacious dining room where they sat down to a sumptuous repast. In an adjoining room were many costly and useful presents that will serve to recall the joyous day of their union.

Among those present were Mr. F Simon, of Lonaconing; Mr. and Mrs. John Meek, Jr., of Barton, Md.; Mr. and Mrs. Cam. Michaels, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Durst, Mr. George Brenneman, Miss Carrie Klipstein, Miss Mildred Sanders, Mrs. Major, and Mr. Archie Michaels, of Barton.

Mr. and Mrs. Brenneman departed Monday morning for their future home near Jennings, Garrett county, Md., where they were accorded a hearty welcome by Mr. Brenneman's old friends and neighbors.

Oakland Model Steam Bakery

To my Patrons and the Public:

Owing to the steady increase in my business and the determination to give my customers the best service and goods that can be produced anywhere, I have installed in my Bakery an up-to the-minute steam plant by which the product of my establishment is more than doubled and in consequence no delay is anticipated in putting upon the market twice daily fresh, nutritious Bread, Cakes, Pies, etc.

The dough mixer in my establishment has a capacity of three barrels which is driven by an engine and is of the latest pattern and a model in every respect. The dough is mixed by this machine and turned upon the table without being touched by the hands, thus ensuring better mixed bread and cleanliness in every respect. "Cleanliness" is our motto.

I have also installed a power ice cream machine and am better prepared than heretofore to manufacture Ice Cream and sell at wholesale and retail on the shortest notice.

I respectfully invite the public to inspect my plant.

Very truly yours, HENRY LAUER.

A Wireless Message

By James Raymond Perry

Copyright, 1903, by James Raymond Perry

IT was in the smoking compartment of a Pullman on a journey from New York to Chicago that I met him. I had just finished reading in a magazine an article upon Marconi's achievement in wireless telegraphy, and, raising my eyes, I saw that the stranger was glancing down at the magazine page.

"A remarkable achievement, sir," I said. "Have you read this article?"

"On Marconi? Yes," the stranger replied.

"It seems almost past belief," I said, "that a message could be sent across the sea without the aid of wires. Yet Marconi seems to have accomplished it unless possibly the three ticks he heard were the result of accident, and the fact of that particular signal having been prearranged may have been only one of those singular coincidences that now and then astonish us."

The stranger removed the cigar from his lips and said: "No; the sounds Marconi heard are not to be classed among the accidental and coincidental. It was a real signal sounded by his assistants in England and received by him in St. John's. I entertain not the slightest doubt of that."

He spoke with conviction. Pulling at his cigar until the end glowed again, he continued, "I might have had doubts had I not previously heard and seen things achieved along similar lines far more wonderful than Marconi's feat."

Seeing that he paused, I said: "You interest me. May I ask what those achievements were?"

For a moment the stranger was silent. Then he said: "You are aware, of course, that the vibratory theory—the theory of etheric waves—is not new. The idea that all planetary bodies, our earth included, are imbedded in what the magazine article somewhat aptly describes as ether jelly, the jelly of space, is an idea which Marconi has made use of, but did not originate. What he attempted—and has succeeded in doing—was to jar the jelly and register the jars. While giving him full credit for the Columbus-like daring of his thoughts, I will say that that achievement alone was not difficult.

"For more than a dozen years I have been engaged in an attempt to establish wireless communication between distant points. Marconi was scarcely in his teens when I began, and if I have progressed further than he in this study it is not necessarily to my credit. In all scientific research time is the principal factor, the great perfecter.

"When the ultimate discovery in this direction shall have been made and the last word concerning it uttered, it will probably be found that the suspected but hitherto unproved fourth dimension had no small part in the great discovery. However, it is not my intention to go into that phase of the question now.

"Have you ever happened to hear the statement, seemingly incredible, that the slightest motion anywhere—the lift of an insect's wing, for example—starts a wave motion that does not die until it has reached and affected to some extent the innermost core of the outermost star of the universe?"

"I think not—I'm not sure, though—but I have in my readings run across some such hint. Probably I did not credit it. An effect so remote from a cause so slight must be small indeed."

"MAY I ASK WHAT THOSE ACHIEVEMENTS WERE?"

"To our senses inconceivably infinitesimal—yes. However, I am of those who believe it is so. So sensitive is this ether jelly in which the universe rests that when it is jarred at all it is all jarred. The half flutter of an insect's wing and the explosion of a star in outer space both set the waves in motion, and the one wave travels as far as the other."

"May I ask you which invention seems to you the more wonderful—the telegraph or the telephone?"

"The telephone," I answered unhesitatingly.

"To me also," said the stranger. "The telephone is personal, the telegraph impersonal; therefore the range of imagination about the former is immeasurably wider. Possibly I am more imaginative than Marconi, or perhaps it was only accident. At all events he seems to have worked with the telegraph in mind, while through all my labors my imagination was dominated by the telephone.

"Now, when a telegraph message from New York to Chicago is ticked off the wire nothing has really passed across those thousand miles of space. The ether jelly has been jarred in New York and the jars have been recorded and read in Chicago. So with the long distance telephone the voice itself has not been carried on an electric current across all those miles, but again the jelly was jarred, and the sensitive eardrum, aided by transmitter and receiver, has heard the vibrations. In both instances the wire has made an easy road for the vibration to travel over, but it does not follow that the road was necessary. One can pass across fields as well as along asphaltum walks. Marconi and others have realized this; only most of the others, Marconi included, have made the error of supposing you must go over fields and mountains, not through them. Yet the path lies through them as easily and naturally as over them, and herein is involved, in a manner, the fourth dimension, an explanation of which, however, we need not enter into in order to understand the operation of ether vibrations.

"I have spoken of the earth and the planetary bodies as being imbedded in the ether jelly. For our purpose let us alter the simile a little. Let us imagine a mass of colorless jelly with here and there a drop of chromatic fluid, forming, say, little crimson globes at intervals. Let us imagine now that the colorless portion represents the ether and the colored spheres the so called solid bodies—our earth and the other planets. The simile is necessarily crude and inexact, but it will serve. Now, while those bits of color are imbedded in the mass of jelly, they are nevertheless jelly, like the rest of the mass. Jar the jelly, and ether and planets are both jarred by the same motion, the innermost point of the colored globe being sensitive to the motion as well as the surface which comes in contact with the colorless portion. In this way we may perceive dimly how a wave motion—the uplift of an insect's wing or a thousand tons of exploding dynamite—shall reach the earth's core and the heart of the outermost star.

"In other words, we are assuming that all material things are of essentially the same composition as the ether. Of course they are not—at least to our senses—but so far as my observation of the operation of these ether vibrations goes they are the same in that the so called solid bodies offer no slightest resistance to the progress of the waves. Progress is not quite the right word, but I have to use it. Thus an ether wave traveling, say, from Venus to Mars would not break upon the earth and pass around, as a sea wave might break upon a rock, but would pass directly through the earth, impeded by its presence no more than if no solid body had been in its path, or, to draw the scale down to small proportions, I hold my hand up—so—and the waves set in motion by my words vibrate to you through my hand as freely as they do above, below and on either side of it. The hand might be a bar of steel, or for that matter a section of twenty inch armor plate. The vibration would pass through it and not seek an easier way around it. If there were an easier way around it, no doubt it would seek it, as the sea wave does at the rock, but to go around is not any easier for the ether wave. It knows no 'easy' and no 'hard,' because what seem to us obstacles in its path to it are nothing.

"Marconi clearly misconceived the operation of these ether vibrations—that is, he presumed them to be subject to obstruction. Hence he established lofty stations for setting in motion the waves and flew kites high in the air to catch them as they passed a distant point, whereas he might have accomplished the same results on level plains or in deep canyons. His error was in supposing the vibrations passed around the rock—like sea waves around the rock—instead of through it. When that signal from overseas reached him, it was in his thought that the waves that brought it had come over the earth's curvature, though in reality they had vibrated through it in the straightest possible path. Had he been at a point antipodal to the transmitting station the waves would have vibrated to him from directly under his feet, and a wire sunk in an artesian well would have served as well as a kite flying in the air. The tremor of an earthquake travels in precisely the same way—from any one spot in the earth to any and every other spot in the straightest line.

"I admit that when the thought is new it seems difficult to believe the ether waves pass through solid bodies as freely as through thin air. But that is because we understand so imperfectly the nature of the vibrations. Why shouldn't they pass through them freely? By aid of the X ray sight passes freely through an opaque solid. I mention the X ray merely because it is of recent discovery, is novel in its workings, and yet has won popular belief for itself through its demonstrability. It would be quite as much to the point, however, and far more apt by way of illustration, for me to cite a plate glass window or a crystal globe. Both are very solid to the sense, yet they furnish no obstacle to the passage of sight. I don't pretend to say that etheric waves vibrate through solids in precisely the same way that sight passes through a plate of clear glass; not at all. But after such an illustration I fancy you will not find the other idea quite so unbelievable.

"I have gone into an explanation of these etheric vibrations at some length because without some knowledge of them you would probably find it difficult to credit the rest I have to tell.

"As the writer of that magazine article states, quite the most wonderful achievement of Marconi is what he calls the 'tuning' of the vibrations. I fancy that in this his invention—discovery perhaps I should call it—differs very little from my own. I have called it 'timing' instead of tuning. I transmit a sound at the rate, we will say, of 12,000,000 vibrations a second. If my receiver is adjusted, or 'timed,' to 11,999,000 vibrations per second, or to 12,001,000 vibrations, the receiver remains unresponsive; but, if I time the receiver to 12,000,000 vibrations—or any number of vibrations exactly corresponding to the rate of transmission—the receiver instantly responds and the transmitted sounds are received."

"The transmitted sounds!" I ejaculated.

"Yes. I see you are surprised; but, really, it is not so remarkable. You place a telephone receiver to your ear and hear the voice of some person a hundred or a thousand miles away and experience no particular wonder. You know the sounds have reached you over the electrical wire road and believe they could not have reached you otherwise; but don't you see you are still clinging to the thought that asphaltum walks are the only paths a man can travel over and are ignoring open fields? If a man 'cuts across lots' he may reach you quicker and more easily than if he comes around on the asphaltum walk. The same is imaginably true of the telephone wire.

"I PLACED THE RECEIVER TO MY EAR."

"For a dozen years I have been working on an invention which embodies this idea of wireless telephony. Six months ago my invention was practically perfected. If I were to go into a detailed description of it—which I am not going to do—you perhaps would not understand me unless you possess unusual knowledge of the science of sounds. I will say, however, that the invention is composed of a transmitter and a receiver, having some of the features of the ordinary telephone transmitter and receiver, and, necessarily, several added features, and, broadly speaking, the invention is based upon the law of etheric vibration, the subject which I have just been discussing. It is a fundamental law, like the law of gravity or like that other law not yet generally recognized, but which is involved in the fourth dimension—the law of levity.

"I made no public announcement of my invention while in its imperfected stages, because if I failed I did not care to endure the ridicule of the more, so called, practical scientists. I had but one confidant, and that a woman. You think a woman cannot keep a secret? Well, she kept one of the greatest secrets science has yet tried to conceal.

"Six months ago my invention was as nearly perfect as I could make it. Our first test was made in Chicago, between the north and south sides. Our success was all that we had hoped for. Then I took with me to New York the receiver—I had completed but one receiver and one transmitter—leaving my assistant in Chicago with the transmitter. The result of the test made between those two cities was also successful. But I was not yet ready to announce my invention. I wanted to first make a supreme test of it, and so I journeyed to Calcutta, and there, installing my receiver, I cabled to my assistant that I was ready. On a certain day, at a certain hour, she was to go to the transmitter and there repeat to me a message. While in New York she had sent me inclosed with another letter a sealed envelope. 'I will repeat to you,' she wrote, 'when you reach Calcutta a certain message. After hearing it from the receiver break the seal of this envelope, and you will find within the message which I will utter. Then you will know there has been no mistake.'

"Near midnight in Calcutta at a moment corresponding to exactly noon in Chicago I placed the receiver to my ear, and then and there, with no wire connecting transmitter and receiver, I heard repeated as distinctly as you have ever heard a voice by telephone this message: 'This is Josephine. It is my voice that you hear. I am in Chicago. It is noon.' Breaking the seal of the envelope, I then read in my assistant's familiar handwriting this message: 'This is Josephine. It is my voice that you hear. I am in Chicago. It is noon.'

"After that she told me many things, but I could only listen and not answer. I could receive a message, but could not transmit one.

"The voice of my assistant was vibrated to me through nearly 8,000 miles of solid earth. Incredible as it sounds, it yet was really nothing. Had she been stationed on Mars with my transmitter her voice would have reached me just the same. It would have reached me the same from the sun or from Sirius or from the remotest star in the universe, only it would have been longer coming. A wave once started radiates through all space.

"I am on my way to Chicago now, where I shall construct a second transmitter and receiver. With these completed I shall repeat the tests and then announce to the world my invention.

"We are nearing our destination, I perceive. Thanking you, sir, for your polite attention, I will bid you good day." He tossed away his cigar stump and left the compartment, nodding good naturedly in response to my bow.

THE UNIVERSAL EXPOSITION

The Achievements of Individuals and Nations Faithfully Recorded by This Encyclopedia of Society.

By FREDERICK J. V. SKIFF, Director of Exhibits, World's Fair.

"The wisdom of all ages is none too great for the world's work." In this single salient sentence, uttered in his famous address at Buffalo in September, 1901, President McKinley described the object and the result of expositions.

A modern universal exposition is a collection of the wisdom and achievements of the world, for the inspection of the world, for the study of its experts, by which they may make comparisons and deduction and develop plans for future improvements and progress. Such a universal exposition might well be called an encyclopedia of society. It constitutes a classified, compact, indexed compendium of the achievements and ideas of society in all phases of its activity, extending to the most material as well as the most refined. It offers illustrations covering the full field of social performance, from the production of the shoes on our feet and the pavement beneath them to a presentation of the rarest and most delicate creations of the brains and hands of men in what are called the fine arts of civilization.

The Universal Exposition in St. Louis in 1904 will be such a social encyclopedia in the most comprehensive and accurate sense. It will give to the world in revised and complete details "a living picture of the artistic and industrial development at which mankind has arrived" and will actually provide "a new starting point from which all men may direct future exertions." It will present for the inspection of specialists in all lines of industrial and social endeavor and for the public an assembly of the best which the world has done and has to show in industry, art and science, and, what is very important, it will offer these achievements of society, these trophies of civilization, in a highly selected, accurately classified array.

The creators of the St. Louis Exposition have had the experience of all previous great expositions by which to plan and effect its high organization. The continuous and repeated burden of the message of experience handed down by all expositions has been more perfect, more effective classification and arrangement of exhibits.

The classification of the St. Louis Exposition has been prepared to present a sequential synopsis of the developments that have marked man's progress. On its bases will be assembled the most highly organized exposition the world has yet seen.

The St. Louis classification is divided into 16 departments, 144 groups and 807 classes. These grand departments in their order will record what man has accomplished at this time with his faculties, industry and skill and the natural resources at his command in the environment in which he has been placed.

At the head of the Exposition classification has been placed Education, through which man enters social life. Second comes Art, showing the condition of his culture and development. Liberal Arts and Applied Sciences are placed third, to indicate the result of his education and culture, illustrate his tastes and demonstrate his inventive genius, scientific attainment and artistic expression. These three departments equip him for the battle and prepare him for the enjoyments of life. The raw material departments, Agriculture, Horticulture, Mining and Forestry, show how man conserves the forces of nature to his uses. The Department of Manufactures will show what he has done with them; the Department of Machinery the tools he has used. The Department of Transportation will show how he overcomes distances and secures access to all parts of the world. The Department of Electricity will indicate the great forces he has discovered and utilized to convey power and intelligence. And so through the several departments to Anthropology, in which man studies man; and to Social Economy, which will illustrate the development of the human race, how it has overcome the difficulties of civilization and solved problems in which society is involved.

Last is placed physical culture, in which man, his intelligence having reached the supreme point, is able to treat himself as an animal, realizing that his intellectual and moral constitutions require a sound physical body to prompt them to the proper performance of their function.

Education is the keynote of the Universal Exposition of 1904. Each department of the world's labor and development will be represented at St. Louis, classified and installed in such manner that all engaged or interested in such branch of activity may come and see, examine, study and go away advised. Each of the separate sections of the Exposition will be an equivalent of—or, rather, will be in actuality a comprehensive and most effective object lesson in—the line of industrial and social achievement and progress which its presents.

Cost of Seeing the World's Fair.

From any point within 300 miles of St. Louis a person may travel to the World's Fair this year, view the wonders of the Exposition for three days and expend the same money he would pay in any other year for train fare alone. This is an absolute fact.

The Western Passenger Association has agreed on a ten day excursion rate, 250 miles or more from St. Louis, for one and one-fifth fare for the round trip.

ALL THE STATES AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Many Beautiful Pavilions and Pretentious Buildings Show Forth the Enterprise of American Commonwealths.

A beautiful city has grown up among the trees on the World's Fair grounds at St. Louis. It has nothing to do with the immense exhibit palaces, but is a thing apart. The houses in this new city are of various styles of architecture. Some are palatial in size and appearance, while others look merely cozy and inviting. Never before have so many notable and historic buildings been constructed in one group. This new city might be called the City of the States, for the houses included in it are the state buildings at the Fair.

The city is not compact, but somewhat straggling, as befits the picturesqueness of the view. Yet there is nothing suggestive of a Stringtown-on-the-Pike about this city, for the grounds surrounding each of the houses are beautified with gardens typical of the state represented.

All the states are to be represented at the World's Fair. This means a great deal, a shining triumph for the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and furnishes another illustration of the fact that this Exposition's completeness is the marvel of the age.

Fifty-one states, territories and possessions of the United States have taken the steps necessary to participate in the World's Fair on an important scale. But two states were still outside the fold at the last report, and in each of these was a well defined movement in favor of being represented at the Fair with buildings and exhibits. New Hampshire, the old home state, and Delaware are the states referred to. In New Hampshire a fund for participation is being raised privately by patriotic citizens, so that in the event of legislative inaction this commonwealth may be represented.

The states and territories are expending over $7,000,000 in their efforts to show off to best advantage at the Exposition. This is a million and a third more than was expended at the Chicago exposition by the states. In addition to this, large cities in many states will have municipal exhibits, the funds for which are not included in these figures. The municipal exhibit idea is entirely novel. From a number of the states there will be prominent county exhibits provided by special appropriation of county funds.

This City of the States presents a picture of surpassing beauty. Nature has done much to aid in the creation of the picture. Never before has any exposition been able to grant such advantageous sites for state buildings. The buildings are situated on a plateau about seventy-five feet higher than the level ground to the north upon which stand the main exhibit palaces. There are hills and ravines here and there, enabling the landscapists to lay out a most delightful pattern of roads and terraces and lawns.

The smallest of the state buildings is that of Arizona, which stands near the southeastern entrance to the grounds. One of the largest is that of Missouri, from the dome of which it is said that perhaps the very finest view of the Exposition may be enjoyed. This building is a palace in the Italian renaissance architecture, built at a cost of $105,000. Near by is the reproduction of the Cabildo at New Orleans, in which the Louisiana Purchase transfer ceremonies took place—Louisiana's state building. Ohio has a clubhouse of highly ornate design, in the architecture of the French renaissance. Illinois is prominent with a most pretentious structure, with wide verandas and a commanding cupola.

A description of each of the state buildings, with any detail, would more than fill a newspaper page. It is only possible here to hint at some of the interesting structures. California, for instance, has reproduced in exact size the famous old La Rabida Mission. Connecticut presents a replica of the Sigourney residence at Hartford, home of the poetess Lydia Huntley Sigourney in her time. This building is said to be the finest specimen of purely colonial architecture now standing. The New Kentucky Home, from the Blue Grass State, is a handsome clubhouse that would make some of the mansions along Fifth avenue, New York city, look insignificant. Beauvoir, the quaint old house which Jefferson Davis owned and occupied for many years, is reproduced by Mississippi. Its wide verandas or galleries give it a most inviting appearance. Washington's headquarters at Morristown, N. J., are reproduced by New Jersey. Virginia contributes Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson.

The state of Washington contributes a structure of unique design. It is called the Wigwam, five stories high, built of wood from Washington forests. The building is octagonal, with gigantic diagonal timbers rising from the ground and meeting in an apex ninety feet in the air, above which is built an observatory, from which a splendid view of the Exposition may be had. An elevator will carry visitors to the observatory.

New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Arkansas, Colorado, West Virginia, Indiana, Wisconsin, Texas and many other states are represented by buildings which cannot fail to arouse admiration. The Texas building is in the shape of a five pointed star, an appropriate idea for the big Lone Star State. Iowa has a magnificent mansion, with classic porticoes and a central tower containing an observatory chamber. Kansas, Indian Territory and Oklahoma each uphold the growing reputation of the southwest for enterprise and fertility of resources.

CLOTHCRAFT

The Two-Button "Rugby"

is popular with young men who want the very latest "wrinkle" in clothing.

The "Rugby" is the latest model, but there's not a wrinkle in it.

Look at the illustration and see how beautifully the suit fits—see how broad and graceful the shoulders are, how smoothly the front hangs, how shapely the trousers are.

And all that beauty and shape will be retained throughout the life of the suit.

Mark that well.

Clothcraft Suits aren't made to give service for a few weeks and then lose their fit and become shabby.

They're made to withstand hard wear—to give you such complete satisfaction that you'll buy them season after season.

There's nothing cheap about them except their price—$10 to $25.

The first Clothcraft Suit you buy will prove the truth of this assertion.

There's not a better one to begin with than the "Rugby."

We'll be glad to show it to you at any time but TO-DAY is the best day.

Get the style book to-day, too.

The Passover

All the singing pilgrim caravans had come to a halt with the high ...ce-note of the last "song of de...s," "Our feet shall stand within ...y gates, O Jerusalem." Green booths and snowy tents dotted all the valley and slopes around the city, and three millions worshipers made ready for the morrow. Over two hundred thousand lambs had been purchased and marked for sacrifice, and all the details of the joyous festival were being attended to.

Jesus tarried yet in the sweet and restful seclusion of Bethany; but His disciples knew very well that He who had said, "Thus it becometh Me to fulfill all righteousness," would not ignore the great Paschal. The question was not if He would eat it, but where He would do so. Two of the disciples are at once commissioned to make the necessary preparations. They are sent with sealed orders, no doubt, to keep the traitor off their track. Not one of the remaining ten could possibly divine the place until they arrived there in the evening. A man doing a woman's work (carrying water) would be novelty enough to serve them as a sign. Jesus bade the messengers ask for a lowly place, some hallway. He will fain make the circuit As He spent His first night on earth in "a lodging" so He would fain to spend His last one. He knows beforehand, however, that His nameless but well to do disciple, John Mark's father, perhaps, will give Him the best his stately manor affords.

The disciples are off at once upon their errand. They find it as Jesus had said. The proprietor of the house gladly places at their disposal a spacious room, capable of holding a hundred paschal parties. They shall have it in completest privacy. It is in the second story which will add to their seclusion. Its walls have been freshly whitened, and tile-floor scoured for this very occasion. The low, gayly-painted table is already in position, with the couches forming three sides of a hollow square about it. The hanging-lamps, dishes, basin and water-jars, all are in position. The disciples view the place with grateful satisfaction, and then hurry ...to make the necessary purchases ...e wine, the cakes of unleavened bread; the vinegar, salt and bitter herbs; the nuts, raisins apples, and almons to make the compost of, reminder of the clay in the brickyards of Egypt; and most important of all, the year-old lamb. One of them carried the lamb on his shoulders, the sacrificial knife sticking in its fleece or tied to its horns. At two o'clock in the afternoon, at sound of trumpet-blast, with all others who had been similarly commissioned, they went into the inner court of the temple. At three blasts, they, with thousands of others, struck the death-blow to their victims while the priest caught the blood in a golden vessel, and passed up to the high altar. As the disciples held the lamb upon a stick that rested upon their shoulders, it was quickly flayed. The parts devoted to God were seperated; then wrapping the victim in its own skin, they started for the house where they were to celebrate the feast. The carcass, trussed upon skewers of pomegranate in shape of a cross, was baked in the household oven.

At sundown, Jesus, with the Ten, approached the city, knowing well where He would find the waiting disciples and the supper room. They enter, and the Master views the preparations with evident satisfaction. The three first stars are shining now, and the silver trumpets signal the feast to begin. Shame, shame! The unseemly dispute as to precedence breaks out once more as the disciples scramble for the most eligible places. Jesus rebukes them in an acted parable, performing for them the menial task of a scullery drudge. Now the paschal banquet begins. The ritual is used, the rubrics observed. The cup is passed with thanksgiving. Bitter herbs, dipped in vinegar, are eaten in remembrance of Egypt. The unleavened bread, with a bit of the roasted lamb upon it is taken, by each. Another cup is passed. There is the customary hand-washing. Jesus, as the symposiarch, discourses upon the significance of the feast. They break out in the joyous singing ...e first part of Hallel. (Psa. cxiii-...) The third and last cup goes from hand to hand, and then they sing the second part of the Hallel. (Psa. cxv-cxviii.)

At times through the feast, Jesus gave intimations, increasingly distinct of His betrayal and betrayer. He suffers not His manner toward Judas to change. He probably let him take the chief place at the table. He certainly washed his feet, and gave him his portion with His own hand. But the devil was in his heart, and the thirty pieces in his scrip. An incubus was lifted when the apostate left the table. All that remained of the paschal ritual was the blessing of praise with which it was always closed. They were all expecting it. The innovation could not but be noticed by those who had followed one program annually from the time when they were ten years old. Instead of lifting His hand in benediction, Jesus reached over the dish of unleavened bread upon the table, and taking up a piece, He rose from the mat and blessed it, and, as He passed from one to another, He broke it, giving each a morsel, saying, "Take, eat; this is My body." Then He filled a cup, and, again giving thanks, and passing it from one to another, He said, "This is My blood of the new covenant, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Then followed His words of institution, "This do in remembrance of Me."

The Teacher's Lantern.

The anachronism of Leonardo da Vinci's lovely and justly famous fresco of the Last Supper is obvious. He represents Jesus and the Twelve sitting, in Occidental style, at a modern extension-table. They did not sit at all but reclined. It was this reclining that made it easy and natural for John to lay his head on Jesus' bosom, and for Peter and John to hold their sotto voce conversation without the traitor's observing them.

Perhaps we emphasize disproportionately the sadness of the Last Supper. Jesus, as a host, would not allow the occasion to lose its festive character. It was a goodly scene that the well-trimmed lamps shone down upon. The fresh turbans of blue, crimson, and yellow, the animated faces, the table covered with damask and well supplied, make a study to delight a painter. The feast extended over several hours, and only the somber incidents are recorded. There must have been much joyous converse as well.

The presence of Judas was the one ugly spot in the feast of love. Jesus, without openly criminating him before the company, plainly announced the one of the Twelve would betray Him. He did this for their sakes, that they might know He was perfectly aware of His impending fate, and, not being at all surprised, voluntarily submitted to it. He did it for Judas' sake. It was His last appeal to the traitor. He gave Judas the chief place at the table, washed his feet, gave him his portion with his own hand, lovingly let him know he read his wicked heart, and only when it was clearly of no avail He bade him do quickly his wicked deed.

No question but that this upper room, forever endeared to the hearts of the apostles and probably the property of a disciple), witnessed the appearance of the risen Christ in their midst, and of the Pentecostal effusions of the Holy Ghost. If so, it was the very cradle of the infant Church.

The various names by which the Lord's Supper is known are in themselves very significant. It is the Eucharist, meaning our "good thanks" for the Lamb that was slain; it is the sacrament (communis), sign of the intercourse and agreement we have with God and each other.

The believer should be always ready to pray. But this does not render special preparation undesirable; for the communicant finds in the sacrament what he brings to it, no more and no less. Jesus is present in the ordinance only to the thought and feeling of the communicant; present only as His suffering and death are realized by faith.

To ask and to take the solemn tokens of redemption is to confess before the world and before the Church faith in the great fact.

At the table of the Lord's Supper man and God meet—man with his highest aspirations, God with His richest gifts.

Incidentally the communion is a pledge of the reunion of Jesus and all His disciples. He said He would eat no more of the bread nor drink of the cup until the kingdom should come. Then He will visibly banquet with us all in the kingdom of His Father, according to His promise.

REPUBLICAN PARTY PLATFORM PLANNED

Draft for the Committee Has Been Completed.

THE PRESIDENT IS COMMENDED

His Conservative Diplomatic Policy Approved and Protective Tariff Upheld—Similar in Some Features to That of Massachusetts.

The draft of the Republican platform of 1904, which will be submitted to the committee on resolutions of the national convention by Senator Lodge, the prospective chairman, as the basis of its deliberations, is completed. It is a notably terse platform, nowhere open to equivocal interpretation, sharply contrasting with anything a disorganized, fusion-compromise opposition can present for popular approval.

After the usual expression of confidence in the eternal principles of the Republican party the platform will specifically commend Theodore Roosevelt, the man for his faithful adherence to the policies of McKinley, for his fearless discharge of the duties of his high office with the single purpose of promoting the public welfare, for the important part he played in the crisis of the anthracite strike, and for representing the highest ideals of American manhood.

The platform will then review the foreign relations of the United States under President Roosevelt's administration, asserting that no function of his office rendered an untried and unsafe President more liable to involve the nation in grave and inextricable complications than the administration of its foreign affairs.

Among the achievements of Theodore Roosevelt's administration will be enumerated the accomplishment of Cuban reciprocity and the ratification of the treaty with Cuba which incorporates the Platt amendment. The wise and conservative course of the administration in the Venezuelan affair, which resulted in the most signal recognition by foreign powers of the Monroe doctrine, as an important triumph for arbitration and in the protection of Venezuela's American creditors, will be so exhibited as to throw into strong contrast the Venezuelan message of President Cleveland.

The settlement of the Alaskan boundary dispute, another triumph for American diplomacy and for arbitration, accomplished by peaceful means, under critical circumstances will be made the basis for further approval of Mr. Roosevelt's administration.

The skillful and farseeing diplomacy which effected the negotiations and ratification of the treaty with China, whereby the United States, in the face of subtle but powerful opposition, acquired treaty rights in Manchuria which the victor in the present war, be it Russia or Japan, will be bound to respect, and which guarantees to American commere a wider opportunity in China than has ever before been accorded to any nation; the subsequent not to the European powers by which the "administrative entity" of China is assured against the desire of the powers to accomplish its partition, and the world-wide diplomatic understanding that the United States will be selected to adjust the terms of peace when Russia and Japan shall determine to abandon their resort to arms will be cited in substantiation of the assertion that Theodore Roosevelt is an exceptionally conservative and wise executive.

The administration and Congress will be warmly commended for the acquisition of the Panama canal, the completion of which must accrue so largely to the advantage of the United States and to the world at large.

The President will be praised for his successful enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust law, which was enacted by a Republican Congress and first applied by a Republican President.

Grateful comment on the extraordinary prosperity of the nation will be followed by a brief contrast of existing conditions with those of 1893 and by the assertion that the monetary system of the nation is now on such a stable and satisfactory basis that men look back with wonder and amazement when they recall the wild vagaries and still wilder Democratic theories of 1896.

The section which deals with protection follows:

"Protection, which guards and develops our industries, is a cardinal principle of the Republican party. We insist upon the maintenance of this principle, but we recognize that particular tariff schedules are neither sacred nor immutable. Other planks deal with the nation's debt to those who imperiled their lives for the preservation of the republic, which will be declared to have been faithfully paid; with the responsibilities incurred by the treaty of Paris, which will be declared to have been sacredly kept, as witness the prosperity of Porto Rico and the Philippine islands; with the sacredness of the ballot, the equality of all citizens, etc.

BLOOMINGTON

Piedmont Indedendent.

Elinor Watson, aged 17 years died at the home of his parents, Pine Swamp, near Hampshire, on last Sunday morning at 4 o'clock. He was buried from the M. E. church, on last Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Interment took place in the grave yard at this place. Rev. Howard officiated.

Squire Fazenbaker, of District No. 4, held his court in the Bloomington Hotel, on last Monday morning and disposed of some very interesting cases. The testimony and discussion between witness and the parties interested at several stages of the trial, became warm, animated and almost red hot. The Squire by a strong effort preserved the majesty and dignity of the code and rendered his decisions with justice and equity. Constable Moorehead was on hand and executed the mandates of the court in a dignified and official manner.

Postmistress Fannie Bartlett was moved last week into the house recently vacated by Mr. Kemp.

Mr. Peter Welsh Jr. of Barton, was in town Wednesday in the interest of his property holdings in this vicinity.

We understand that Miner's Sunshine Council Jr. O. U. A. M. has purchased two lots on the street below and opposite the M. E. church for the purpose of erecting a large and commodious hall. The structure will be two stories high, the upper one devoted entirely to the use of the order. The lower story will likely be converted into business apartments.

Mr. Grant Harshbarger has one of the prettiest homes in town It comes out this week fresh from the hands of the painter with a new coat of paint that is beautiful and attractive.

The Board of School Commissioners for Garrett Co., will erect a new school house ot Chestnut Grove, this district, some time between now and the opening of the schools this fall. The town of Bloomington expected a new school house this summer but from the recent action of the board as above it is likely the old school house against which there has been so much complaint will remain with us for at least another year.

Mr. and Mrs. Noah Burke, of Hampshire, were called to Paw Paw on Wednesday on account of the death of Mrs. Burke's mother.

Work at Pattison's mine still continues slack.

Dull times in the coal regions hereabouts are practical for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Pat. O'Donald, of Cumberland, were the guests of Mrs. O'Donald's sister, Mrs. Maggie Collins on Sunday and Monday.

Mr. Ed Paugh, of Cross, was in town on Wednesday.

Mr. "Coon" Metter was only joking when he said the new girl baby at his house was a boy. He didn't mean it but he is just as happy "all the same."

Some one has suggested that if Mr. Greene change the name of the Highlanders the spell will be broken and they will commence to win ball from now on. The same fellow suggests that he call them the nightmares because as he says, he gets the night mare every time he goes to see them win.

Rev. Snedegar is now prepared to receive bids for the construction of the new church including foundation. Specifications can be seen at the M. E. parsonage at any time from now until 10 a. m. May 28th, at which time all bids are expected to be filed with the building committee.

Hon. Cookman Howard left on No. 12 Wednesday night on a business trip to Philadelphia.

Mr. Dennis Eagen, of Franklin Hill was the lucky owner of ticket No. 161 that won the horse at the big drawing on Tuesday night. The tickets were $1.00 a piece, and many tickets were sold. A large crowd was present, nearly every ticket holder being represented. Seventy-five dollars were offered for the horse as soon as the result was known, but refused.

Mrs. Anna Kemp, wife of Dr. H. M. Kemp, is visiting friends in Pennsboro, West Union and Parkersburg.

Messrs. Edward Divine and Clarence Howard, youngest eaglets in the nest had their feathers plumed and turned loose from the respective aeries on last Friday night.

Grant's Left Flank March

A FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY WAR STORY

May 19-23, 1864

[Copyright, 1904, by G. L. Kilmer.]

AFTER the failure to carry the key position at Spottsylvania by the assault on the "Bloody Angle" the 12th of May, 1864, Grant continued to hammer at Lee's works for a week. On the 19th the Army of the Potomac again marched forward by the left flank.

The new Federal movement was met by a counter attack upon Grant's right flank at Spottsylvania by the Confederate corps of General Ewell. With troops composed principally of Stonewall Jackson's former command, Ewell made a detour and struck the road to Fredericksburg, which was Grant's line of communication with his base. It happened that there were no Federal troops at the point attacked, except Tyler's brigade of heavy artillerists, a body of men just out of the fortifications of Washington, whose appearance at the front in "spick and span" uniforms had been greeted by the war worn soldiers with derisive chaff.

General Ewell had no cannon. His troops barricaded the road and the woods adjoining with fence rails, compelling the "heavies" to charge bayonets in order to dislodge the intruders. The charge was made in gallant style. Fighting was kept up from 5 o'clock until dark and the line held while reenforcements were marching back from one of the veteran corps.

Had Ewell succeeded that day in cutting Grant's communications the Army of the Potomac would have been forced to turn back from its flank march to reopen the road to its base. In saving the army in that crisis the eleventh hour "heavies" were in the right place, even though it was the rear, and their baptism of fire was as bloody as that of many an infantry regiment in a grand battle charge. The First Maine heavy artillery entered the fight with 1,600 men. It lost 147 killed and 329 wounded, about 30 per cent. The First Massachusetts heavy artillery mustered about the same number of effectives and lost 362 killed or wounded.

It was the 23d of May when Grant's army on its flank march to Richmond reached the near bank of the North Anna river. The Confederates immediately arose into view across the stream. From the very beginning of the campaign the Federal leaders had assumed that Lee would make a stand on the North Anna. In fact, they had not expected to encounter the enemy short of that point.

On reaching the North Anna, General Warren's Fifth corps crossed at the Jericho ford with but slight opposition. The lead was given to General J. J. Bartlett's brigade. Bartlett's men plunged into the stream with their accouterments on and waded waist deep to the opposite bank. Using a high bluff for a rampart, they kept down the enemy's fire until a bridge was laid and the artillery across.

KEYSTONE AND PALMETTO BOYS MEET AT JERICHO FORD.

The guns and infantry supports brought forward by Warren to cover the party making the crossing had barely got into position when Colonel Brown's South Carolina brigade charged on the advance line and doubled up the right flank. Bartlett's brigade hurried to the rescue of the exposed flank at double quick, and in the maneuver occurred one of those encounters which give to war a touch of romance. One of Bartlett's regiments was the Eighty-third Pennsylvania, a body of veterans that had been in the field since 1861. Brown's command included the First South Carolina. These two regiments ran into each other, but the Pennsylvanians got in the first fire. One Keystone man seized Colonel Brown and made him prisoner, and another shot down the leader of the First South Carolina.

This was the second collision of these regiments, the first having taken place at Gaines Mill two years before. Both had fought on every field of battle in the east from 1862 to 1864, and their losses in killed and wounded were about equal throughout the war. The First South Carolina lost 281 men killed in battle, and the Eighty-third Pennsylvania scored a death roll of 282. The loss of the Carolinians was next to the highest suffered in a southern regiment and that of the Pennsylvanians next to the highest among northern regiments.

In Warren's fight at North Anna the famous "Mink's battery" performed one of its many gallant exploits. When Brown's Carolinians struck the right flank of Warren's line and sent it back in confusion Mink's pieces were moving to position on a knoll behind the Federal troops, facing the attack. The Confederate line arose from behind a ridge, fired one volley and then charged. Mink's stirring cry, "Forward into battery!" was quickly responded to, but the guns could not fire at the men in gray without sweeping down the Federals also.

Brown's column made a dash for the bridge behind Mink's guns. Only two sections of the battery were ready for action, those of Bates and Ritchie. Bates suggested that the pieces be retired by prolongs, firing as they retreated, but Mink told him to hold on and station three cannoneers to each of the four pieces. Captain Mink was disabled at the time by a cracked ankle, a reminiscence of the enemy's shrapnel at Spottsylvania, and could not dismount, so he kept in saddle and not only directed his battery, but helped to rally the retreating infantry behind his guns.

"It looks tough for Mink," said an artillery officer, watching the movement from the rear, to a comrade beside him. But when the guns began to bark the comrade responded, "Do you see that and that and that?" Mink said afterward, "It was enough to warm the cockles of an artillerist's heart to see the way those twelve canisters cleared our front."

One of Mink's officers, Augustus C. Buell, states in his "Reminiscences of a Cannoneer" that the captain's wounded ankle swelled to double the normal size. He couldn't wear a boot and used an old army shoe sizes too large. The surgeon repeatedly urged Mink to have the wound dressed, but he simply answered, "Fill my flask with brandy, Doc, and I'll take care of the leg."

While Grant was making his flank marches through the wilderness region toward Richmond a fleet of Federal gunboats on the James river, co-operating with an army under General Benjamin F. Butler, advanced on the Confederate capital from the south. On May 16 Butler's lines closely invested Fort Darling, at Drewry's bluff, seven miles below the city. Sheridan's cavalry corps was also at hand to aid Butler, and the Confederates were alarmed lest these forces combined should force them to evacuate Richmond. To meet the crisis Jefferson Davis ordered an attack on Butler's line with three divisions under General Beauregard, while another division under General Whiting would strike in the rear of Butler and cut his army off from its base.

Beauregard's column moved to the attack under cover of a heavy fog at 5 o'clock in the morning with the divisions of Hoke, Ransom and Colquitt and quickly overpowered Butler's right flank. Troops were brought over from the Federal left to succor the right, but Beauregard forced the fighting all along the line, and Butler ordered a retreat. Fortunately for Butler, General Whiting's raid on his base proved a failure, for Beauregard followed the retreat from Fort Darling to Bermuda Hundred and there securely "bottled up" the Army of the James.

It was really a steel thread which saved Butler that foggy morning at Fort Darling, a netting of telegraph wire ingeniously spread to snare the intrepid Confederates. Beauregard sent forward Hoke's division to surprise and overpower the Federal right held by Weitzel's division. In front of Weitzel's line a forest had been cut, leaving a field of stumps standing a couple of feet from the ground.

The afternoon preceding Beauregard's attack Captain David Steele of the Second New Hampshire, an old "forty-niner" fertile in expedients, had the audacity to suggest to army headquarters that the stump lot might be converted into a veritable pigeon trap by stringing among the stumps several miles of wire found dangling from the poles along Richmond turnpike. Permission was granted, and busy hands worked all night stringing the wire in front of two brigades.

Every inch of the stump lot was familiar ground to the New Hampshire soldiers, who had trained their rifles across it for two days. Not a shot was wasted by the men from the Granite State as Hoke's charging lines emerged from the fog and stumbled among the wires.

Three times Hoke's men recoiled and again surged forward. When all was over the ground was matted with the forms of Hoke's brave southerners who went down in the rash attack. In one South Carolina battalion in front of the New Hampshire line the flag was pierced fifty-seven times, and in one company of the battalion sixty-five soldiers were struck by Yankee bullets. Beauregard lost over 2,000 men killed or wounded at Fort Darling and Butler about the same number, besides 1,500 taken captive by Beauregard. The fight decided the fate of Richmond for a year or until Appomattox.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK OFFICERS

Held a Meeting Tuesday—Appropriate Action Taken on the Death of Mr. C. W. Conner.

On Tuesday of this week the Board of Directors of the Mountain Lake Park Association held a meeting and quite a number of matters were taken up and acted upon preparatory to the opening of the season.

The boat house is being repaired and painted. New boats have been ordered. The base ball ground and athletic field was placed in the hands of Mr. C. H. Nuttler, of Frostburg, a graduate of Dickinson College, and now Secretary of Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Richard J. Cadler, of Baltimore county, has been employed to take charge of the boats and will reside in the Association's cottage at the lake.

Notice was received informing the Board of the death of Charles W. Conner, which occurred on the 18th day of May. The following resolutions were passed by the Board:

WHEREAS, Our associate Director of the Mountain Lake Park Association, Mr. Charles W. Conner, has been removed by death from activity in our affairs, to which he gave himself for many years,

Resolved by the Board of Directors of Mountain Lake Park Association, That we express our sincere grief at the death of our associate in office, and desire to put on record our appreciation of his long, active, zealous and constant attention to the affairs of Mountain Lake Park.

Resolved, That we extend to Mrs. Conner and her family our hearty sympathy in their affliction, and earnestly pray the blessing of our Heavenly Father upon them.

Resolved, That this paper be entered in full upon the records of our Board and a copy be sent to Mrs. Conner, and also furnished to the papers for publication.

Rev. W. M. Frysinger was appointed by the Board to fill the place in the Annual Committee made vacant by the death of Mr. Conner, until the regular meeting.

Quite a number of very desirable lots were staked off and will be offered for sale at reasonable prices.

Superintendent Long will be ready to show these lots and quote prices.

FRIENDSVILLE.

Among the busy places here is the exchange of the Garrett County Telephone company and the agent D. S. Custer is kept busy all the time and appears to be all ears and listening for the tinkle of the bell, and to watch him a half hour or so a person would think that all the business of the county centered here at this exchange; this company can reach all the principal points in Garrett county, Md., and Fayette county and all points in West Virginia from Piedmont, at the foot of the Mountain to Bayard in the centre of the state and also to Kingwood, Terra Alta, and other points in the same state. This line also connects with Confluence, Ursina, Unamis, Listonburg, Addison, Somerfield, Markleysburg in Pennsylvania; W. A. Maffett of Oakland is president and general manager of the company and from the way new telephones are being installed the company must be doing a very successful business.

A. K. Geist, our popular butcher, returned last week from a visit to Harrisburg, Greensburg, Lancaster, Confluence and other points in the Keystone state and got back Tuesday. Mr. Geist is doing a good business here in the butcher calling and also dealing in cattle so that he does not fear "The Meat Trust."

W. L. Nugent, the popular livery stable keeper near the Crawford House has a well equipped stable with a fine stock of good horses, buggies, carrvalls and is always ready to accomodate the public. He keeps good horses and good drivers and since his stables were established in 1903 he has had the best success.

Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Shirk of Lancaster, Pa., visited here Wednesday. Mr. Shirk is a lumber dealer who is interested in the lumber business in this section and Mrs. Shirk accompanied him on a pleasure tour.

The Crawford Hotel here has changed proprietors, Mr. Welsh, the former proprietor, having sold out to Messrs. Schlossnagle and Mitchell, the present proprietors who have renovated and refitted the building from cellar to attic and refurnished it throughout. Both gentlemen have had long experience in the hotel business. Andrew Schlossnagle having run this hotel several years and Charles A. Mitchell having almost a life long experience in the business. The house is a most commodious one having in all 25 rooms of which 18 are bed rooms, and electric lights in every room. The parlors have all been refurnished. Fred Mitchell has charge of the bar.

Edward Schlossnagle the livery stable keeper is doing quite a large business having the stables well supplied with all kinds of vehicles.

The lumber business is in a very prosperous condition.

Pianos tuned and repaired. Charge for tuning, $2.50.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

Which Treats Upon Variety of Interesting Topics

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1904.

George Bruce Cortelyou, Secretary of the new Department of Commerce and Labor, has been chosen by President Roosevelt for chairman of the Republican National Committee. The vice-chairman will be either Harry S. New, of Indiana, or J. W. Blythe, of Iowa, and the treasurer, Cornelius N. Bliss, of New York. Owing to ill health Postmaster-General Payne will resign his present position as vice-chairman. Upon being formally elected to this new office Mr. Cortelyou will resign his seat in the Cabinet, but it is expected that he will later become Postmaster General. It is not yet known who will succeed him in the Department of Commerce, but the name of Carroll D. Wright has been suggested. Secretary Cortelyou is regarded as thoroughly fitted to manage the Republican campaign, and the President's choice meets the approval of all party leaders.

Since Senator Hanna's death, the question of who would be the chairman of the Republican Committee has been much discussed. The names of many prominent Republicans were suggested at the White House. For some time President Roosevelt has been thinking of Mr. Cortelyou, his newest and youngest Cabinet officer, and after Mr. Bliss, of New York, decided definitely not to accept the heavy burdens and grave responsibilities of the chairmanship, the choice fell upon the President's former private secretary. Mr. Cortelyou's qualifications for the position are beyond dispute. For five years, as private secretary to President McKinley and President Roosevelt, he had opportunity to become familiar with political conditions in every State in the Union. His relations with both Presidents and with Senator Hanna were necessarily both intimate and confidential. Being a man of retentive memory, this experience was doubly valuable to him. His power as an organizer was fully demonstrated by the manner in which, as first Secretary of Commerce and Labor, he built up this new department.

Mr. Cortelyou was born in New York, and is not quite forty-two years old. He studied law, became a law reporter in New York City, and has been in the public service since 1889. He was at one time stenographer to President Cleveland.

"I am for the St. Louis nominee," declared William Randolph Hearst, when interviewed here on the report that if he were not nominated by the St. Louis convention he, with Bryan and other radical members of the Democracy, would bolt and form a third party. The young presidential aspirant added: "I should of course, like any other man, be honored and gratified should the Democrats see fit to nominate me. But I do not have to be bribed by office to be a Democrat. I have supported the Democratic ticket in the last five campaigns. I supported Cleveland three times and Bryan twice. I expect to support the nominee of the party at St. Louis, whoever he may be. I have been making my fight for the nomination in the name of progressive Democracy but I have been making my fight within party lines."

This declaration of Mr. Hearst is regarded here as destroying the chances of the formation of a third party of any magnitude. Bryan and others have not yet spoken, but as the New York editor, with his big "bar'l," built up the organization, which began to assume a third party attitude, it is thought that other would-be bolters at St. Louis could do nothing without Mr. Hearst's aid. It is believed now that the large radical vote which the New York Congressman could have gathered together in support of a radical platform will now be scattered. Few will go to the Democratic party, if it is controlled by the Hill-Parker faction; many will go to President Roosevelt, and many to the growing Socialist party, which is now looked upon as the natural register of discontent.

By forbidding members of the Marine Band to take the place of striking civilian musicians, President Roosevelt has taken a hand in the long conflict between the American Federation of Musicians and the United States Marine Band. After a controversy with union musicians, who demanded increased pay, the management of the Lafayette Opera House dismissed several union musicians from the orchestra and employed members of the Marine Band in their stead. The president of the local organization of the American Federation of Musicians called on Secretary Loeb at the White House and presented asking that members of the Marine Band be forbidden to the places of the union musicians. After considering the matter fully, President Roosevelt instructed Assistant Secretary of the Navy Darling to issue an order prohibiting members of the Marine Band from taking the place of civilian musicians on strike growing out of a labor dispute. This action of the President was satisfactory to the Musicians' Union and is regarded as just and right.

The Republican platform, which is to be presented for the ratification of the Chicago convention, has been written. It will be presented to the committee on resolutions by its probable chairman, Senator Lodge. The tariff plank is perhaps the most important. On good authority, it is said to read as follows: "Protection which guards and developes our industries is a cardinal principle of the Republican party. We insist upon the maintenance of this principle, but we recognize that particular tariff schedules are neither sacred nor immutable. Rates of duty may be altered when changed conditions demand their alteration, but no revision should be undertaken unless it is clear that the benefit will more than compensate for the disturbance of business which inevitably attends a revision of tariff schedules. Nor can such revision be intrusted with safety to any other than the party of protection. To intrust it to the Democratic party is again to invite the Democratic disaster and panic of 1893."

Representative Hitt, of Illinois, is regarded here as the certain choice of the Chicago convention as President Roosevelt's running mate. He is willing to serve, and his candidacy is looked upon with favor by Republican party leaders. With the presidential and vice presidential candidates and the national chairman selected in advance, by common consent, and with the party platform all drawn up, the Chicago convention will have its work much simplified. This is in strong contrast to the Democratic gathering at St. Louis, where all will be uncertainty until the last moment.

A local clergyman has caused some merriment here by criticising the President because he and Mrs. Roosevelt do not attend the same church. The President goes to the Dutch Reformed and Mrs. Roosevelt to the Episcopal. The children go to either. Some one has suggested that the clergyman was trying to furnish campaign material to the Democrats, but so far the leaders of the Democracy have not taken advantage of the information.

ORDER OF PUBLICATION.

In the Circuit Court for Garrett County. No. 1270 Equity.

John E. Winters, Plaintiff, vs. Anna A. Winters, Defendant.

The object of this suit is to procure a decree for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii by the plaintiff from the defendant.

The bill states, that on the 10th day of June, 1900, the plaintiff was married to his wife, the said defendant, in Garrett county, with whom he resided until the 16th day of January, 1901. That the conduct of the plaintiff towards his wife, the said defendant, has always been kind, affectionate and above reproach, and that the said defendant has, without any just cause or reason abandoned and deserted the plaintiff and has declared her intention to live with him no longer; that such abandonment has continued uninterruptedly for at least three years, and is deliberate and final, and the separation of the parties is beyond any reasonable expectation of reconciliation and that the said plaintiff and defendant have had no children born to them from said marriage, and that said defendant is a non-resident of the State of Maryland.

The bill prays for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii and for general relief.

It is thereupon this 11th day of May, 1904, ordered, by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 15th day of June, 1904, give notice to said defendant of the object and substance of the bill, warning her to appear in this court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 4th day of July, 1904, to show cause if any she has, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

DROWNED IN THE POTOMAC RIVER.

Sad Termination of the Life of a Deer Park Youth Near Washington.

The Deer Park correspondent of this paper, under date of Tuesday, May 31st, writes as follows:

On Wednesday evening last, May 25th, a telegram announced the drowning in the Potomac river at Washington, D. C., at 3 o'clock of Job P. S. Cormany, a bright young boy, just entering his 16th year. Deceased was the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Cormany of this place, and had been spending the last two winters in Washington going to school. He was born and raised at Deer Park and from his early childhood was admired as one of the brightest boys of our town and in intelligence far bevond his years. He was the idol of his father and mother, and a general favorite of his young companions, and by his gentlemanly bearing had attracted both old and young. He was a faithful attendant at the M. E. Sabbath school and Epworth League, and was a member of the Deer Park band, whose members paid tribute to his dead remains on their arrival here on No. 55 Friday last.

The funeral was conducted from the M. E. church, Rev. H. E. Friend, the pastor, officiated, and the following young gentlemen, all school mates and warm friends of deceased, were selected to meet the train and act as pall bearers: George Hennen, Roy Thrasher, Gay Wheeler, Harry Thrasher, James Gotfelty, Howard Thrasher. Clarence Lashorn, taking the place of his lamented father, so recently deceased, who at all times in the absence of an undertaker, kindly performed this duty.

As a token of the respect this intelligent boy was held by his friends in Washington, the floral wreathes that accompanied the casket containing all that was mortal of "Little Job" speak for themselves louder than words or encomiums could express.

By his genial and polite bearing he had attracted the attention and admiration of gentlemen and ladies such as Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Van Reypen, Surgeon Gen'l. U. S. Navy; Mr. Herbert G. Dering, Sec'y to the British Embassy, who sent wreaths among the most costly the botanical gardens of Washington could produce. The Matropolitan Club gave a pillow from admiring friends of magnificent proportions and exquisite flowers. His three brothers living in Washington contributed a beautiful harp; his young playmate and companion who was with him boat riding when he was drowned, and the proprietor of the Sherman Market were the first to extend sympathy and contribute floral offerings, and many others both in Washington and here, that space forbids mentioning, but in all the most magnificent display of flowers "love emblem" that was ever seen in Deer Park, and would grace the tomb of a prince.

If space would permit the writer in paying this feeble and hasty tribute, could say more of this bright young life, cut down just as he was budding into young manhood with such a bright future awaiting him in the National capital, but I close and by personal request of the father and mother, four brothers and five sisters in extending their heartfelt thanks to all the citizens of Deer Park and to the many friends in Washington for their kindness and sympathy in this to them the most trying ordeal of their lives the taking away of their baby boy and brother.

A FRIEND.

SENATOR M. S. QUAY DIED LAST SATURDAY

At His Home In Beaver, Pa., After Months of Suffering.

HAD A STORMY POLITICAL CAREER

He Was a Close Personal Friend of President Roosevelt—In Politics Since 1864, When He Was Elected to State Legislature.

Col. Matthew W. Stanley Quay senior senator from Pennsylvania, whose death occured at Beaver, Pa on Saturday afternoon, had one of the stormiest political careers of any man in public life. In recent years he was fighting for what he desired and fighting to keep what was his. And in every battle he was victor. Time and again he was seemingly defeated but only to rise more powerful than ever.

He was an intensely practical politician and the course he pursued after he came into national politics was the same as that which had made him a power in the political field in his own state.

His political career began with his election to the state legislature in October, 1864. From the very first he occupied a prominent position in the legislature and was re-elected in the fall of 1865.

During these years he was advancing steadily in political prestige. In 1866 he was secretary of the Republican State Committee and was thereafter recognized as the guiding spirit in politics in Beaver County. In January, 1873, he was chosen by Governor Hartranft to be secretary of the commonwealth, and held that office for five years.

At the beginning of 1878 Quay resigned the position of secretary of the commonwealth to accept the appointment as recorded of Philadelphia a lucrative position created for him by special legislation. He held this office less than 12 months. Colonel Quay was then chosen chairman of the Republican State Committee, and conducted a successful campaign. He then retired from the chairmanship, and was appointed by Governor Hoyt in January, 1879, to has former position as secretary of the commonwealth.

Matthew S. Quay came into national prominence in the "third term" movement of 1880, engineered by Senators Conkling, Cameron and Logan. The Pennsylvania Republicans started the Grant boom by a convention held in Harrisburg, February 4. At this convention Colonel Quay was the controlling spirit, as the agent of Senator Cameron, yet his name does not appear as taking any part in the proceedings. His work was done as in all the years since he attained political power, in the secret councils of the leaders before and during the sessions of the public assemblage.

The Pennsylvania delegation was instructed for Grant by a vote of 133 to 113, and the unit rule was adopted by acclamation. The delegates-at-large were Matthew S. Quay, James McManus, Lynn Bartholomew and C. L. Magee.

In 1884 Colonel Quay yielded to the pronounced popular sentiment in Pennsylvania and headed a Blaine delegation to the national convention.

Pennsylvania gave Blaine a plurality of 81,000, which under the existing conditions, was considered a splendid record.

In 1885 there was still some grumbling against Quay's leadership, and to vindicate his position he decided to become a candidate before the people for the office of state treasurer.

At the state convention Quay was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 199½ votes, for 54 for all other candidates and he was elected by a plurality of 43,516, the largest given, up to that time, any candidate for state treasurer.

Quay becomes state treasurer in January, 1886, and continued his predecessor, Livsey, as chief deputy. At that time Livsey enjoyed the confidence of all who knew him. In this year General Beaver was again nominated for governor. Colonel Quay gave his especial attention to the election of members of the legislature. He decided that the time had come to realize his ambition to become a member of the United States Senate. In this he received the assistance of Senator Cameron.

Beaver was elected governor by 42,000 votes over Chauncey F. Black and the legislature was Republican by more than two to one. As soon as the result was known Quay permitted it to be known that he was a candidate to succeed Mitchell in the Senate. All serious opposition disappeared before the legislature met. The Republican caucus was held in the forenoon of January by 154 votes against 9 cast for Galusha A. Grow.

In the interest of a protective tariff Quay accomplished two notable things in the United States Senate. The McKinley bill was presented in the Fifty-first Congress. It passed the House in 1890, but was debated long and resisted bitterly by the Democratic members of the Senate. At the same time the Lodge bill for the federal supervision of elections, known as the Force Bill, was on its course through the Senate. The opposition of the Democrats to it was intense. A majority of the Senate was Republican, but under the peculiar rules of that body the Democrats were able to delay either measure until the expiration of the session. It was in this emergency that Quay effected a compromise with the Democratic leaders for which he was severely criticised in radical Republican quarters. For the sake of securing the passing of the tariff measure he and a few Republicans united with the Democrats in ditching the Force Bill and forever removing it from the path of legislation.

The Bardsley scandal in Philadelphia, in May, 1891, gave the enemies of Quay another chance to attack him. Efforts were made to connect him with the Philadelphia treasurer's defalcations. Among Bardsley's papers was found a check for $10,000, indorsed by Quay, which Attorney General Hensel secured and caused to be published in several of the Democratic newspapers of the state. Senator Quay instantly brought suit for criminal libel against some of the papers. It developed that Quay had indorsed the check as collateral to secure a loan for the state committee, and the editors of two papers were convicted. Two Beaver county editors were sentenced to a short term of imprisonment in the Beaver county jail by Judge Wickham, and for this hardship the senator was severely criticised.

In January, 1893, Quay was easily re-elected to the United States Senate. The Philadelphia machine was for him and the Pittsburg machine against him.

In the meantime another state treasury scandal had broken out. Quay was ever a speculator in stocks and he had made and won large fortunes by the rise and fall of securities in Wall street. After the failure of the Keystone Bank the People's Bank of Philadelphia had become the political bank of the state. Here were deposited enormous sums of the state's money, from which various men borrowed.

The bank failed in the early days of Quay's fight to succeed himself and the cashier committed suicide. Of the state's funds $600,000 had been lost. James McManes, an old-time politician, whom Quay had fought through many a year and whom he had finally driven out of the leadership, wrote his own check for $600,000 to make good the deficit. When the authorities took charge of the bank's affairs they found in the desk of the dead cashier letters and telegrams which indicated that Quay and others had influenced the deposit of large sums of the state's money in the bank, and in turn had borrowed money from the bank for speculative purposes.

But he was acquitted, and that very day he got his second "vindication," for Governor William A. Stone appointed him to the vacancy in the Senate, for which he had failed to receive an election by the legislature.

Still the fight against Quay went on. The legality of his appointment by the Governor after the legislature had failed to act was questioned by the Senate, and Quay was denied his seat by a majority of one vote. That vote was cast by Senator Hanna, of Ohio. Quay's friends were furious, but Quay was not dismayed. The very next day the Republicans State Convention met at Harrisburg, and Quay was nominated for the United States Senate, to be voted for by the legislature to be elected that fall. He won, as usual and the legislature elected him to the Senate just as the campaign of 1900 was coming on. Quay did not keep up his fight with McKinley after the Republicans convention in Philadelphia, and he was a prominent factor in the campaign of 1900, being in charge of the Eastern headquarters at New York.

HELD BY A HAIR

By Elliot Walker

.....Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure.....

When Happy was ushered into this world of light and shadow John Mollett consulted Sextus Sears regarding a suitable title for the little stranger.

Mr. Sears was the village authority on Christian names, being addicted to a superficial study of classic literature. Having afflicted seven of his own hopefuls with appellations calculated to attract attention (and they had), his services were quite frequently in demand.

So he at once decided upon Hypatia as eminently attractive to the ear, and Mr. Mollett ambled homeward, much pleased. Patience, his wife, welcomed this relief from responsibility with becoming gratitude. Hypatia, of course, had as yet no words to express a sense of the honor thrust upon her. As soon as she began to babble, though, "Happy" was the best she could make of it. Thereafter Happy Mollett obtained, even Mr. Sears making no objection.

Now she was twenty, round and rosy, and laughed nearly all the time, barring church services, slumber and funerals.

Very amused blue eyes had Happy, dimples and a tangle of sunny hair, one thread of the latter being sufficient to bear the sword which literally hung suspended over the head of Damocles Sears, fourth son of Sextus.

Damocles, whose common sobriquet among jocular youths of his acquaintance may be better imagined than written, had suffered for two years in a bashful state of suspense, longing, yet not daring, to chance the severance of cordial friendship by a declaration of his consuming passion.

He knew Happy would laugh. That could not be borne. No; it were best to wait, pine and grow thin.

Miss Mollett observed this, smiled broadly and mentally dubbed the unfortunate a fool. Possibly a passing thought of his nickname broadened the smile. She herself always addressed this bashful lover as Mr. Sears. This was proper and dignified, but had she once departed from grace Damocles would have greeted it as a step in the direction of deliverance.

He had had many chances, being high in the mirthful affections of Happy, who enjoyed his quiet ways and rare bursts of levity, deeming herself silly with her well nigh uncontrollable merriment. Knowing naught of this, the disconsolate lover knew only that he wanted her, and she seemed far removed. He could afford to marry. Sextus named, brought up and established his boys with mechanical justice, and it was now the turn of Damocles. The thrifty old man had already a tidy farm for him when he "got ready."

Happy was fully aware of all this. She had no ambition beyond her familiar surroundings, plenty of work and a kind husband. To be a rolly poly old grandma was her ultimate view. Then she could sit and knit, with cats and children about, laughing at the past, cheery in the present, beloved by all, and regard her inevitable end with the resignation of a useful life.

After all, she guessed Damocles Sears was the one, if only he would brace up. If not, well, she should not wait too long. There were plenty of others. "Perhaps," Happy giggled, "if she could accidentally have something happen maybe he might see how she felt about it. No need of his acting afraid to sit up with her. Now, if he would only come in tonight, with her parents quite ready for bed. It was lovely on the bench under the maple trees—a moon too. Was that his step—yes—and going by."

"Mr. Sears," called Happy. "Is that you?"

"Thought the folks were going to bed," mumbled Damocles, coming in haltingly, "and of course"—

"And of course you wouldn't dare to visit with me out here in the moonlight," chuckled Miss Mollett. "Oh, come on in and sit with me. I was just thinking about you."

"And laughing, I'll bet," returned her lover tremulously. But he sat down on the end of the settee, with a faint sidelong glance of admiration.

"Well, I was a little bit. You're so funny. Move up here by me, and I'll tell you."

Mr. Sears drew a long breath and hitched along slowly.

"Nearer," said the girl; "right up here in the shade. I don't want every one to see us. Father and mother will be peekin' out, listenin'. If they don't call me in we can sit here ever so long, and I never get a chance to talk with you lately. Seems to me you have mighty little to tell me about what is going on with your folks and what you hear down at the village nowadays."

Damocles gave a tiny grunt of apology, his heart beating rapidly as his arm touched her plump one. "Haven't been feelin' much like talkin' to any one," he muttered. "I'm sort of cross this spring—and—and—wore out. Laugh if you want to. What was it?"

Happy drew close, her lips to his ear. "I was only smiling about something," she whispered.

"Well, what?"

"Just wonderin' what you would say if some day I should unexpectedly call out when you were going by, 'Hello'— Oh, I guess I won't say it—I wouldn't, of course—your nickname, you know."

"I wish to gracious you would," said Damocles savagely. "Anything's better than Mr. Sears from you, Happy."

He sat, stilled by his temerity, waiting for an outburst of mirth, but none came. Only a queer silence. Had he offended her? "Time I went," he groaned. "Always sayin' the wrong thing."

"My, there's a bat!" cried Happy, with a squeak of apparent fright. "Don't let him get in my hair! Has he gone?"

Her curly head was wriggling against the upper buttons of the vest of Damocles. He held it close for a second with a long quivering gasp, then released her.

"Yes, he's gone," he said kindly. "Too bad to scare you so. Why, what's the matter?"

"I've got a hair caught in one of your buttons. No, I can't get it off. Ow! Can you undo it? I'm held fast, Damocles. There, I'll put my head down—so—you don't mind, do you? See if it will come loose."

The man's fingers fumbled at the golden thread. "It's off," he said hoarsely. "You can lift your head now—but—but I wish it could stay there forever."

"I wish so too," murmured the girl. "It's where I want it to rest, dear."

Where the Blame Lay.

Sternly the judge regarded the prisoner before him. He beheld a man of tender, unripe years, whose face was fair to look upon, bearing as it did every known mark of honesty. Appearances gave no reason for committing the crime, and yet the jury had decided, on first ballot, that the prisoner was guilty. In fact, the plea for the defense was very weak.

"It seems incredible," said the judge, "that a man with your connections should have stooped so low as to become a common forger. Surely some one else must have been the cause of your downfall."

"There was some one," replied the prisoner. "It is yourself, your honor."

"I?" ejaculated the judge, amazed.

"Just so. A short time ago I was a member of the graduating class in my college. You were one of the speakers at the farewell session. You may remember your words: 'The world lies ahead of you. But you must push your way steadily. I want each one of you to forge to the front; I want to soon see each occupying a prominent position in the eyes of your families and of the world.'" The prisoner paused and smiled. "I forged quicker than the others. I've gained a place before the public. And now, what next?"

"Three years," laconically said the judge. "Next case!"—New York Times.

English Battle Axes.

What was the great weapon used by the Englishman at Hastings? With what weapon was he armed for the most part when he dealt such deadly blows upon the Norman horsemen in the earlier part of the day? As to the answer to this question we are left in no doubt. History and tradition alike ascribe his long resistance to one weapon, and one weapon alone, the famous Danish ax.

With one exception every single act of valor which the Englishman achieved at Hastings was wrought with the ax or the gisarme. As the Norman weapon was the lance, so the English was the ax. "The Normans," says Harold to his brother Gurth, "are good vassals, valiant on foot and on horse. They have long lances and swords, and we have sharp axes and great edged bills." A few lines further on we read that the English were armed with "hache or gisarme," "with axes and well cutting gisarmes."—Contemporary Review.

Not Square.

The Teuton is a long time in learning British idioms. One who had been here for a year or more and could speak some English before his arrival—a very short and corpulent man, by the way—went to his grocer's and paid a bill which had been standing for several weeks.

"Now you are all square, sir."

"I vas vat?"

"You are square, I said."

"I vas square?"

"Yes, you are all square now."

Hans was silent for a moment, then, with reddening face and flashing eyes, he brought his plump fist down upon the counter and said:

"See here, mine frent, I will hav no more peezness mit you. I treat you like a shentleman. I pay my pill, und you make a shoke of me. You say I vas square ven I know I vas round as a parrel. I don't like such shokes. My peezness mit you vas done."—Tit-Bits.

An Old Favorite

GRIGGSBY'S STATION

By James Whitcomb Riley

JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY, the western American dialect poet, is one of the younger writers who have given to the newer native literature a quality expressive of interesting and typical local conditions. A man of the people, he has in his homely and heartfelt song uttered their joys and sorrows, to be repaid by the affectionate admiration of his Indiana Hoosier folk and by a wide popularity throughout the United States.—Warner's Library of the World's Best Literature.

PAP'S got his patent-right, and rich as all creation;
But where's the peace and comfort that we all had before?
Le's go a-visitin', back to Griggsby's Station—
Back where we ust to be so happy and so pore!

The likes of us a-livin' here! It's jest a mortal pity
To see us in this great big house, with cyarpets on the stairs,
And the pump right in the kitchen! And the city! city! city!
And nothin' but the city all around us everywheres!

Climb clean above the roof and look from the steeple,
And never see a robin, nor a beech or ellum tree!
And right here in ear-shot of at least a thousan' people,
And none that neighbors with us, or we want to go and see!

Le's go a-visitin' back to Griggsby's Station—
Back where the latch-string's a-hangin' from the door,
And ever' neighbor round the place is dear as a relation—
Back where we ust to be so happy and so pore!

I want to see the Wigginses, the whole kit and bilin',
A-drivin' up from Shallor Ford to stay the Sunday through;
And I want to see 'em hitchin' at their son-in-law's, and pilin'
Out there at Lizy Ellen's like they ust to do!

I want to see the piece-quilts the Jones girls is makin';
And I want to pester Laury 'bout their freckled hired hand,
And joke her 'bout the widower she come purt' nigh a-takin',
Till her pap got his pension 'lowed in time to save his land.

Le's go a-visitin' back to Griggsby's Station,
Back where they's nothin' aggervatin' any more,
Shet away safe in the woods around the old location—
Back where we ust to be so happy and so pore!

I want to see Marindy and he'p her with her sewin',
And hear her talk so lovin' of her man that's dead and gone,
And stand up with Emanuel to show me how he's growin',
And smile as I have saw her 'fore she put her mournin' on.

And I want to see the Samples, on the old lower eighty,
Where John, our oldest boy, he was tuk and burried—for His own sake and Katy's,—and I want to cry with Katy
As she reads all his letters over, writ from The War.

What's all this grand life and high situation,
And nary a pink nor hollyhawk bloomin' at the door?—
Le's go a-visitin' back to Griggsby's Station—
Back where we ust to be so happy and so pore!

THE DINNER HOUR

By Owen Meredith

O HOUR of all hours, the most blest upon earth,
Blest hour of our dinners! The land of his birth,
The face of his first love, the bills that he owes,
The twaddle of friends, the venom of foes,
The sermon he heard when to church he last went,
The money he borrowed, the money he spent,
All of these things a man, I believe, may forget,
And not be the worse for forgetting; but yet
Never, never, oh, never! earth's luckiest sinner
Hath, unpunish'd, forgotten the hour of his dinner!
Indigestion, that conscience of every bad stomach,
Shall relentlessly gnaw and pursue him with some ache
Or some pain; and trouble, remorseless, his best ease,
As the Furies once troubled the sleep of Orestes.

We may live without poetry, music and art;
We may live without conscience, and live without heart;
We may live without friends; we may live without books;
But civilized man cannot live without cooks.
He may live without books—what is knowledge but grieving?
He may live without hope—what is hope but deceiving?
He may live without love—what is passion but pining?
But where is the man that can live without dining?

WITHIN A MILE OF EDINBORO' TOWN

By Thomas D'Urfey

'TWAS within a mile of Edinboro' town,
In the rosy time of the year,
Sweet flowers bloom'd, and the grass was down,
And each shepherd woo'd his dear;
Bonny Jockey, blythe and gay,
Kiss'd young Jenny making hay;
The lassie blush'd, and, frowning, cried,
"Na, na, it winna do;
I canna, canna, winna, winna, munna buckle to."

Jockey was a wag that ne'er wad wed,
Tho' lang he had follow'd the lass;
Contented she earned and ate her brown bread,
And merrily turn'd up the grass.
Bonny Jockey, blythe and free,
Won her heart right merrily;
Yet still she blush'd, and, frowning, cried,
"Na, na, it winna do;
I canna, canna, winna, winna, munna buckle to."

But when he vow'd he wad make her his bride,
Tho' his flocks and herds were not few,
She gied him her hand, and a kiss beside,
And vow'd she'd forever be true.
Bonny Jockey, blythe and free,
Won her heart right merrily;
At kirk she nae mair, frowning, cried,
"Na, na, it winna do,
I canna, canna, winna, winna, munna buckle to."

Uncle Eli's Fables

Story of the Farmer and the Wolf, and the Peasant and Jupiter.

ONE day as the Farmer was working in his field and making the dirt fly over most of Calhoun county he was approached by a Wolf with a grin on his face.

"Anything new on the Venezuelan question?" asked the Farmer as he wiped his perspiring brow on a huckleberry bush and felt in his pocket to see if he had lost his recipe for keeping cider sweet the year round.

"Nothing in particular," replied the Wolf, "but I was just thinking what a good chance there was for us to have some fun. You knew I was fond of a joke, didn't you?"

"BY GEORGE, I SEE A BARREL OF FUN AHEAD," LAUGHED THE FARMER.

"Well, I rather suspected it from the way you bit the tail off one of my calves the other night."

"That was all pure fun, and I trust he took it as such."

"And were you joking when you got in two bites on my goat?"

"For sure. It can't be possible she took me seriously. If she did I shall never bite her again."

"But what about this other joke?" asked the Farmer as a blandness began to spread over his countenance and his eyes to twinkle.

"Why, I was thinking that if you would provide me with a sheepskin I'd go down among your flock and have a little fun. The surprise of the gentle eyed sheep when I throw off my disguise and utter a howl will tickle you half to death."

"By George, but I see a barrel of fun ahead," laughed the Farmer, and he straightway provided the Wolf with the disguise and patted him on the back for a joker.

The Wolf soon joined the flock and appeared to be one of them, but at a proper moment threw off the skin and started a surprise party. It was a surprise party on him. Two other disguises were thrown off at the same time, and the Farmer's two dogs pitched into him and took no vacation until they had wounded him so that he could hardly crawl.

"Well, where does the laugh come in?" queried the Farmer as he stood over the Wolf.

"Alas, that you should have doubted my honest intentions!"

"Oh, I didn't doubt your honest intentions in the least. I simply disguised the dogs and sent them down after you for fear the sheep might do you an injury."

Moral.—Men come to grief from oversmartness as often as from stupidity.

One morning the Peasant awoke to find a boil on his neck, and it soon began to pain him so badly that he called upon Jupiter for relief. Jupe happened to be handy by, and he put in an appearance and said:

"My friend, I will relieve you of the boil, but I must replace it with toothache."

The Peasant said that anything was better than a boil, but he hadn't had toothache more than a day when he boxed his wife's ears, ran the children out doors and besought Jupiter to break up the trust.

"I'll do it, my boy," was the answer. "That is, I'll give you a limp in the left leg to break up the monotony. Always come to me for first class limps. A full stock of all kinds of limps always on hand and mail orders filled the same day."

The limp didn't greatly bother the Peasant for two or three days, but when he came to plow he was soon tired out, and when he desired to get over a fence he had to find a hole to crawl through. His wife advised him to go slow about calling on Jupiter again, but after vainly trying to climb a ladder he raised his voice and cried his fourth appeal, and the good god replied:

"Well, what can I do for you today?"

"I am sick and tired of this blamed old limp."

"And you want another change? All right, old man. Here's a stiff neck that will suit you to a dot. I am almost certain."

"But I don't want a stiff neck."

"Then take an earache."

"I don't fancy 'em."

"How would a rheumatic shoulder suit you?"

"Out of date."

"Oh, well, I'll leave you a bunion on your heel and let it go at that, and it will be useless for you to appeal to me again. Had you been a philosopher and poulticed your boil it would have been busted ere this."

Moral.—He who bears ill luck the lightest is soonest over it.

M. QUAD.

A Ballad of the Pike.

YOU kin have yer marble buildin's and yer statoos set apart,
Yer palaces of industry and galleries of art;
Yer kin have yer architecture like a fairy-land in white
And yer furrin exhibitions, fer I reckon they're all right,
But I'm lookin' fer my money's worth, so when I hit the hike
I'm a-goin' to St. Louis jest to see that durned old Pike.

I want to see the zoo
And the panyrama too,
I want to look at everything I like.
I've heard o' the Plaisance
And the Cairo girls that dance—
Say, I wonder if they'll have 'em on the Pike?

I want to see the furrin cities all along the track,
I want to go through Paris to Jerusalem and back,
I'd like to see the hull of it—I think I'd jest as soon
Take the submarine to hades and the airship to the moon,
I don't care how I git there, friend, but when I make a strike
It's me fer old St. Louis jest to live along the Pike.

It must be kind o' phoney,
Like an eddycated Coney,
Or a solid mile o' Barnum, if ye like,
And I jest tell you, by jingo,
I'm a-hopin' that I kin go
Fer a week or so to rubber on the Pike.

I'd like to see the Zunis an' the Kunis an' the Japs,
The mujiks an' the Moslems an' the Romanys an' Lapps;
I don't much care about the names they have, but I must say
It'll be right smart instructive jest to see 'em anyway.
What's the use to cross the ocean an' fer weeks or months to hike
When the world in twenty minutes can be saw along the Pike?

You kin reach the polar clime
Fer a quarter, while a dime
Takes you plumb to the equator, if ye like.
You can travel clean to Mars
An' a ways beyond the stars
Fer a dollar thirty-seven on the Pike.

I want to see the Filypinos livin' on the plain,
An' the dawnin' o' creation an' the sinkin' o' the Maine,
An' other great inventions, like the Chinees an' the Turks,
An' the men from France an' Borneo a-carryin' their dirks,
Then the cityful o' sideshows—there's the kind o' thing I like.
I reckon I'll go busted when I travel down the Pike.

I spend no golden gravel
On yer dinky furrin travel
Or bargain sale excursions on a bike,
But the time is swiftly nearin'
When I'll be jest disappearin'—
And I reckon you can find me on the Pike.
—Wallace Irwin in Collier's Weekly.

The Fisherman—By George, if Bill Jones don't come around with that boat pretty soon I won't wait for him.—Chicago American.

Grandfather's Good Service.

"Yes," said the indolent youth, "we have decided that grandfather is entitled to some consideration."

"Really?"

"Oh, yes. Of course we can't afford to say much about him because he was in trade, but we have given a lot of thought to the matter, and we can see extenuating circumstances."

"Perhaps he couldn't help it."

"We considered that, but it's not the main thing."

"He left you a big fortune."

"Oh, yes; but that is of trifling importance, except as it is associated with the one really great boon."

"Which is?"

"Why, if he hadn't been in trade we would be, don't you know. He saved us that humiliation."—Chicago Post.

America's Non-Marrying Men

By Mrs. FRANK LESLIE

TO want what he hasn't got is the NORMAL condition of man. Probably it is a good thing for the world that this is so, for UNSATISFIED DESIRE IS THE SPRING OF EXERTION, and we all know that the man who can lie all day under his banana trees and eat their luscious fruit without even the labor of plucking it will not be likely to toil all day in the sun to raise a crop of corn.

Similarly a man who does not wish to marry and is deaf to the voice of the charmer, who is perfectly satisfied with his home in a boarding house and THE FAMILY COVERED BY HIS OWN HAT, will not labor and plan and push for money and place as will he who ardently desires to take to himself a wife, to provide for that wife a fitting home and to see that home filled with his own children.

Nobody here in America need marry if he doesn't want to, and consequently most marriages are those of INCLINATION. Now the question is, Are these marriages likely to be happier than those contracted from motives of policy?

Some persons will add, Is ANY marriage likely to be happier than no marriage?

It is a common saying that marriage is a lottery, and, like most other trite sayings, it is so true that it has been worn to rags by the constant use of those who found the coat so well fitted to their own backs that they could not resist putting it on.

Marriage IS a lottery, and when we ask, Is it better to marry or to remain single? it is as if we asked, Is it better to give all that we possess for a ticket which MAY entitle us to a splendid fortune and which may turn up—BLANK?

Just so with marriage. One cannot take up a newspaper without reading of divorces, of wife murders, of domestic treachery and wild revenge, of all sorts of misery and sin and shame that in one way or another have resulted from marriage. Without going to the public prints one looks through the list of their own acquaintance, and for each happy marriage one finds two that conduce more to the misery than to the bliss of the parties.

In the LOVE marriage both parties set out with an ABSOLUTELY IMPOSSIBLE ideal, not only of the character and capabilities of the chosen partner, but as to the conditions under which they are to live together. The marriage relation as formulated by a pair of true lovers is one that never was and NEVER WILL BE REALIZED ON EARTH, and, as we are told upon the best authority that there are no marriages in heaven, we may fairly conclude that it is absolutely ideal and never to be realized anywhere. It is a pity, for I suppose the human mind is unable to conceive of anything more satisfactory than an ideal marriage—a husband noble, lofty, wise and powerful among men, tender, deferential and protective toward his wife—a sort of combination of Napoleon, Solomon and Romeo.

WHICH, THEN, IS BETTER, OR, TO PUT IT A LITTLE CYNICALLY, WHICH IS THE LESSER EVIL, THE SCYLLA OF MATRIMONY OR THE CHARYBDIS OF SINGLE LONELINESS?

And if one decides for matrimony, which is the blacker gulf—that of a mariage de convenance, which we style a "sensible" marriage, or that of a marriage of romance and delusion, sure to end in bitter disillusion?

I DO NOT PRETEND TO ANSWER. LIKE THE SPHINX, I ONLY ASK AND WAIT FOR A REPLY.

The Assassination of Rulers

By JOHN TURNER, British Anarchistic Leader

DO I believe that the assassination of rulers helps forward the cause of anarchy? That is a funny question. We must go way back into history, because we cannot go back to recent events. Every man must judge for himself. If we came down to deal with the present everybody believing in present institutions would become excited. It belongs to you to judge. THE ADVOCACY OF THESE THINGS I BELIEVE HARMFUL. The harmfulness of any one advocating the assassination of rulers is that it offers suggestions to OTHER people. Any one doing this and remaining himself in personal safety is a coward.

Professional Women And Marriage

By FANNY BLOOMFIELD ZEISLER, Eminent Pianist

THERE is no reason why the woman engaged in ANY of the arts should not marry. It is a great mistake for a working woman to scoff at matrimony because she cannot BETTER her condition through it. She will find that with a home and children of her own she is BETTER FITTED to advance in her profession than when she is living in a boarding house and in the loneliness of a bare room.

The business or professional woman may be away from home all day, but in the evening she is with her children and ready to minister to their needs with the rare love that a woman feels AFTER SHE HAS RUBBED SHOULDERS WITH THE OUTER WORLD. This woman who has learned to appreciate the blessings of the family hearth is vastly more competent to raise children to be useful to the state than is the woman who comes home from a dance early in the morning, sleeps until noon, goes to the theater in the evening, and the next morning maybe ASKS HER MAID if the children are still in school.

NINETY PER CENT OF THE WOMEN OF THE STAGE, HOWEVER, ARE UNFITTED, EITHER PHYSICALLY OR MORALLY, FOR MARRIAGE.

COLONEL MONROE

Extracts From an Oration Delivered In Lincolnville by Its Leading Statesman and Philosopher

By FREDERICK UPHAM ADAMS

Copyright, 1903, by Frederick Upham Adams

COLONEL MONROE accepted an invitation to deliver an address before a state convention of reform societies held in Lincolnville. He selected "Patriotism" as his subject, and Judge Sawyer has kindly favored me with the notes of the same, from which the following extracts are made:

"I have no sympathy with that alleged brand of patriotism which consists in boasting, self laudation and glorification, with our national greatness as a subject. If we as a people combine all of the splendid virtues which are enumerated by thousands of orators a proper degree of modesty should suggest that such encomiums be reserved to those citizens of foreign birth and allegiance who have been thus impressed by a study of our transcendent superiority. If we have not reached that exalted national plane, such oratory is worse than wasted.

"The world progresses very slowly away from the patriotism of savagery. Civilization yet thinks it necessary to stir the blood of its young with war songs, battle cries, recitals and pictures of bloody encounters and the hero worship of victorious generals. The savages of six continents know no other kind of patriotism. That Indian is esteemed the greater who on any public occasion is most resourceful in language extolling his personal prowess as a warrior and the greatness of his tribe. He chants the tale of unnumbered victories, is silent concerning unnumbered defeats.

"Our civilized orators usually do not find it necessary to sound their personal praises. When a speaker declares that he represents the peerless city of the principal county of the greatest state of the grandest nation on the face of the globe, the imagination of his hearers should supply the inference that the orator has no mean idea of the honor conferred on himself and no hesitancy in accepting it.

"Patriotism is not national vanity. It was that spurious patriotism that Johnson had in mind when he declared that 'patriotism is the last refuge of the scoundrel.'

"Patriotism is that love of one's country which impels a man or a woman to make personal sacrifices in its behalf.

"Patriotism is not a blind worship of any form of government or of any institution or set of institutions. When you hear a man declaiming about the sacredness of institutions or the sacredness of anything except sacred things, keep one eye on him and the other on your pocketbook. A thousand governments and ten thousand institutions have been weighed in the balance of justice and found wanting. Patriots have established them and patriots have overthrown them. No man is gifted enough to codify patriotism. Patriotism is justice aroused to action.

"A patriot is a man who is anxious to give more to his country than he possibly can receive from it. He is one who, without hope of gain or thought of fame, lays his services or his life itself on the altar of his country.

"A patriot is one who is honest with the country of his birth and to the community in which he lives. A patriot is a social gentleman. He is chivalrous, honorable and considerate as a citizen.

"I wish to make absolutely clear my conception of what constitutes patriotism. One may take advantage of his neighbor and yet be a patriot, but the moment he attempts to take advantage of the community, the state or the nation he is no longer a patriot. He may be in debt to individuals, but he cannot be remiss in his obligations to his country and remain a patriot. A consistent clubman is exact in conforming to the rules and ethics of his organization, a zealous church member needs no prompting to do his full duty, and a true patriot esteems his country as a grander club and his citizenship as a social religion.

"When a burglar enters and despoils a house he inflicts a financial injury on an individual; when a man withholds fair dues or service to a club or church he works an injury to a limited number of persons, but when he puts his hand into the public treasury, or fails to pay into the same every dollar due from him, he has committed a crime against all of the living and has done an injury to coming generations.

"True citizenship demands from the individual exact justice to the community of which he is a member, but patriotism transcends citizenship. The patriot is a lover; his country is his mistress.

"Patriotism is the flame which serves as a beacon light to citizenship. It is on this day, more than on all others, that we should see if the lamps are trimmed and burning.

"I have given no stern definition of citizenship and have not idealized patriotism. Who are the patriots of America today, and what are they doing for their country? Do any dangers menace, or have we reached a period so perfect that patriotism can slumber? The independence of the nation was assured in 1776, and its indissolubility in 1865, but what stands as a guarantee of its increasing greatness and its perpetuity? I answer, the honesty of its citizenship and the fervor of its patriotism.

"Did you ever plant a fruit tree and watch with almost loving care its struggles and triumphs? In the depth of winter the winds wrench its ice laden branches, the frost reaches for its heart, and in treacherous springtime all of the elements of nature seem in conspiracy toward its undoing. Cautiously it puts forth its buds, leaves and blossoms. Gentle rains and warm sunshine work the magic of reincarnation, and in the fullness of time the tender fruit takes its first imperfect form and gleams between the leaves. The skies are fair overhead, the winds are soft with balm and the soil instinct with the thrill of life. All the gifts of nature have been showered on that tree, and with its background of sheltering and verdant hills it is a delight to the eye and to the senses.

"Occupied with other cares, you look no more at the tree for a time, but when you do what a change has occurred! As in the night an invading army of worms has encamped in the tender foliage. Their ugly webs and crawling larvae blur the leaves and encompass the tender fruit. They have established centers of distribution and communication and seemingly have set about the work of complete destruction. Here and there are branches yet free from the contagion of their presence, but even as you look a slender web is thrown across, and the first slimy enemy has secured a footing. Already some of the leaves are riddled and yellow. The ravaging army spawns and increases at an alarming rate. The tree, so fair only a few days before, is now in danger of its very life. If the tree and its harvest are to be saved immediate and heroic remedies must be used.

"Such an army is swarming over the branches of the tree of the republic. There are two types of these parasites, and they bear party names, but when once firmly attached to a leaf not even the most skilled naturalist can distinguish a Republican from a Democratic worm. Their appetite is so prodigious as to defy all known laws. If not dislodged or destroyed they will strip a branch clear of any semblance of life. None but heroic remedies is of avail.

"Never since the foundation of the republic has so low a scale of public honesty and morality been reached. There have been corrupt men and corrupt eras in all recorded history, but never before has a republic had to meet so vast a problem as that presented by the organized venality in a score of state capitols and in the administration of innumerable cities. Not one-tenth of the truth has been made public or ever will be. The spoliation of the public treasury has become a recognized profession.

"There are thousands of men in this country of ours who should blush with shame at the sight of the American flag unfurled to the breeze. And yet, strange as it may seem, these are the very men most likely to be vociferous in their expression and demonstrative in their display of patriotism. The flag floating above the property of a millionaire who has committed perjury in order that out of his prodigal abundance he may withhold his fair share of taxation—is not that a sight to make a stoic weep? Myriads of such flags wave in the breeze on Independence day and other patriotic holidays. School children are addressed by men who through bribery have forced the passage of ordinances and franchises by means of which they are enabled to rob their neighbors. Paid retainers of corrupt organizations pose as exemplars of good citizenship and expounders of patriotism. Leaders of thought who know that what I am stating is more than true are silent for fear that the expression of their convictions will hurt them financially or socially."

Having quoted more extensively from Colonel Monroe's notes than was intended, it is necessary to reserve his deductions until another time.

A Common Danger Signal.

There seems to be one signal that animals and birds understand in each other's language, says Mr. John Burroughs in the Century Magazine. That is the danger call. Let the mother turkey, while hovering her brood, give the danger signal, and the young will hide in the grass to give her a chance to fly and decoy the enemy. Young chickens are said to do the same.

Some California quail hatched under a bantam hen in the zoo in New York did not heed the calls of their foster mother at all the first week, but at her alarm note they instantly squatted, showing that the danger cry of a fowl is a kind of universal language that all species understand. One may prove this at any time by arousing the fears of any wild bird. At once all the other birds catch the alarm.

Charles St. John says that in Scotland a stag that is being stalked is sure to be put to flight if it hears the alarm cry of the cock grouse. It is more important that the wild creatures should understand the danger signals of one another than that they should know the rest of their language.

FOR CONGRESS:

GEORGE A. PEARRE,

of Allegany County.

THE platform that Senator Gorman forced down the throats of the Maryland Democrats is a complaint not an enunciation of issues. The object of his written wail is quite plain. This is especially true of the plank which criticizes the manner of acquiring the Panama canal. When that matter was before the United States senate Mr. Gorman attempted to whip the members of his party in that body into his way of thinking through an iron bound caucus decision. A number of Democratic senators of breadth of mind and greater patriotism revolted against this ultra partisan scheme. As a consequence Mr. Gorman was badly defeated. Now he seeks to discredit an accomplished fact by assailing the success which attended the negotations for the canal rights through an academic declaration in a political platform of his own making. We do not believe that the majority of the Democrats of Maryland are in sympathy with the anathema he launches against President Roosevelt and his administration. And time and events will prove it. The Maryland platform stands out quite distinctly as a recital of the personal grievances and political disappointments of one man—Arthur Pue Gorman.—Wheeling Intelligencer.

GORMAN'S LITTLE SLIP.

Senator Gorman has made quite a specialty of attacks on President Roosevelt, and it is therefore a little singular that he should make such a slip as that which is to be noted in his little speech at the State Convention yesterday. After stating that Roosevelt has "made himself the master of his party," Senator Gorman went on to say: "He formerly was of the school that did not believe in party organization. He had these views when he became President, but he is now the most partisan President we have had since the war." This is a most curious blunder. Few things about Mr. Roosevelt are better known than the fact that throughout his career, he has been an avowed and emphatic believer in party organization. In his attachment to this idea, he has gone to lengths which to many persons have always seemed extreme. He was elected a Republican member of the New York Legislature at the age of 23, and he was only 28 when he accepted the Republican candidacy for the Mayoralty of New York, though Abram S. Hewitt, an ideal candidate, was running for that office on a ticket supported by the best element of both parties. Roosevelt justified this at the time by declaring his firm belief in the necessity of maintaining the party organization, in municipal as well as national contests. Mr. Roosevelt has always been a vigorous supporter of civil service reform, but has never regarded this as in the least incompatible with the most constant party loyalty. It was not a happy thought on the part of Mr. Gorman to accuse Mr. Roosevelt of inconsistency in a matter upon which he has never varied his position. Whether he has permitted his notions of party organization to override other principles which ought to be held inviolable we are not now discussing—but that is another story. —Baltimore News.

TOWN TREASURY ENRICHED.

Several Disorderly Cases Determined by the Police Justice.

Tuesday Police Magistrate Gonder was kept extremely busy during a portion of the day hearing and determining cases brought before him.

A crowd of eight, four whites and four negroes, who were arrested the evening previous for fighting at Hessen's saloon and spent the night in jail, contributed in fines to the corporation $61 and costs, amounting in all to $109. The cases against these parties was prosecuted by State's Attorney Fred. A. Thayer.

Fred Parker, another negro, was arrested and fined $1 and costs for profanely swearing upon the streets.

HOW MEMORIAL DAY WAS OBSERVED HERE.

Large and Orderly Crowds Were Present in Town and at the Cemetery.

THE GRAND ARMY POST IN CHARGE

The Address Delivered by Rev. E. Manges at the Cemetery and the Poem Read by Miss Leary—Flowers in Profusion.

Monday was the "Festival of the Dead" in Oakland as well as in many other towns all over the country, for upon that day the graves of all known and unknown soldiers who died during and after the war of 1861 were decorated with flowers gathered for the purpose.

The program of the day was entirely in the hands of Crook Post, G. A. R., Col. A. G. Sturgiss commanding. The point of rendezvou of the old soldiers as well as the school children, Knights of Pythias, Jr. O. U. A. M. and Knights of St. John, was the Post Hall on Alder street, where the parade was formed and the march made to the cemetery to which place hundreds of persons had preceded the parade.

Arriving at the cemetery details of soldiers and of the organized bodies was made who placed flowers upon the graves of thetr departed comrades and brothers, after which all assembled at the grave of the unknown where the ritualistic services of the G. A. R. was gone through with, including the reading of President Lincoln's Gettysdurg address by Capt. J. M. Jarboe, the reading of a poem by Miss Marion Leary and an address by Rev. E. Manges, pastor of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, followed by the dismissal of the assembled throng by Rev. S. M. Miller, pastor of the Presbyterian church, who pronounced the benediction.

Miss Leary's poem follows:

HE DIED FOR ME AND YOU.

Four hundred thousand men—
The brave, the good, the true—
In tangled wood, in mountain glen,
Lie dead for me and you.
Four hundred thousand of the brave
Have made our ransomed soil their grave—
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.

In many a fearful swamp,
By many a black bayou,
In many a cold and fearful camp
The weary sentinel ceased his tramp
And died for me and you.
From western plain to ocean tide
Are stretched the graves of those who died
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.

On many a bloody plain
Their ready swords they drew,
And poured their blood like rain,
A home, a heritage to gain—
To gain for me and you.
Our brothers mustered by our side,
They marched and fought and bravely died,
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.

Up from many a fortress wall
They charged—those boys in blue;
'Mid surging smoke and volleyed ball,
The bravest were the first to fall,
To fall for me and you.
These noble men—the Nation's pride,
Four hundred thousand men have died,
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.

In treason's prison-hold
Their martyr-spirits grew
To stature like the saints of old,
While amid agonies untold
They starved for me and you.
The good, the patient and the tried—
Four hundred thousand men have died
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.

A debt we ne'er can pay,
To them is justly due;
And to the Nation's latest day
Our children's children still shall say—
"They died for me and you."
Four hundred thousand of the brave
Made our ransomed soil their grave,
For me and you,
Good friend, for me and you.

The address made by Rev. Manges was devoted principally to a eulogy of the veterans of the Civil War and the lessons that great struggle has taught to the world. Rev. Manges' address follows:

Comrades and Friends:—It is but right that we should thus assemble and pay a cheerful and loving tribute to our departed comrades. Their march has ended, they have gone into bivouac, they have grounded arms, they have answered the last roll-call, they heard taps sound, they have gone to sleep but have also heard the reville and entered into rest. We are marching closely on their heels. We are growing old together; another decade and but few of us will be left in this solemn but loving service.

Not only here but all over the northern part of this Union millions are gathering in training for the observance of this day. And not only in the North but in the South loving hearts gathered about a month ago to perform a similar service.

Bravery always appreciates bravery though it fights on the other side. No Union soldier would have been ashamed if in the South to march with the floral procession to the cemetery a short time ago, and place on the Confederate grave a token of respect and esteem. No Confederate soldier would be ashamed to march with us today to this cemetery to decorate a Union grave.

The Grey and the Blue have mingled together. We have stacked arms. The bayonet and the cannon of the North face this way. The bayonet and cannon of the South face southward.

It is said of a battle in the late Civil War, that the Confederates were driving the Union army who were in swift retreat. A Union officer dropped, wounded. One of his men stopped at the risk of his life and put his arms around the officer to carry him from the field. Fifty Confederate muskets were aimed at the young man who was helping the officer. But a Confederate captain shouted: "Hold! Don't fire; that fellow is too brave to shoot." And as the Federal officer, went limping slowly off the field the Confederates gave three cheers for the brave private, and just before the two disappeared behind a barn both the wounded officer and the brave private lifted their caps in gratitude to the Confederate captain.

Some one who has seldom witnessed sach a gathering as this might ask: What do you mean by it? We mean to instruct the incoming second generation, since the war closed, in lessons of patriotism. Subtract 1865, when the war closed, from 1904, and you find that 39 years have passed away, and what a multitude has been born since. A generation came and has rapidly passed away. A second generation is coming on the stage of action. No one under forty-five years of age remembers much about it. Who of you here under forty-five remembers anything about it? Here and there may be one who can recall the day when the sad news came of a battle fought and the father was killed, when mother fainted away or the sister bowed in tears that brother is missing. There are others who cannot remember the roll of the drum or the tramp of a regiment, nor do they remember the time when there was one dead in nearly every house.

Now it is the duty of those who do remember to tell those who do not. My young friends there were partings at car windows, at steamboat wharf, at front doors of comfortable homes such as I hope you may never witness. Oh, what a time it was when fathers and mothers gave up their sons, never expecting to see them again, and never did unless they were brought home mangled and torn. Perhaps the young wife standing in the door watching the retreating form of her husband, as he vanished in the bend of the road or shut off by the woods, holding up high her little babe in final farewell. The bethrothed young lady kissing her lover a last farewell forever, so far as this life was concerned. These were partings such as you may never witness. These were four years of bloodshed, four years of hostile experience, four years of grave diggings, four years of funerals, coffins, mournings. Like General Sherman said: "War is hell." What an anxious waiting for news. The news came: Tomorrow a battle must be fought. Then the news that the battle is going on. Still going on the next day and the next. Then the news—thirty thousand slain, great generals killed, some wounded, but no news of the boy from the humble home. Then the news of his missing—and is still missing.

And by this National ceremony we mean to honor courage.

It is said of a certain artist that he mixed brain in his colors. So it may be said of the good soldier. He puts his heart in his powder. It was courage that led General Grant on to Vicksburg, though repulsed time and again. It was courage that enabled Colonel Roosevelt and his Rough Riders to make that terrible charge at Santiago. It is courage that enables the brave Japanese to drive the boasting Russians from their strongholds. Courage enabled Miltiades to meet with 10,000 soldiers the 100,000 Persians on the plains of Marathon and defeat them. Courage helped Leonidas with his 7,000 Spartans to hold at bay the 2,000,000 Persian soldiers, for two days at the Pass of Thermopylæ, and with 300 Spartans and 700 Thespians fought till every one was slain.

Many of those departed soldiers were volunteers, and many of those who were drafted might have provided a substitute or have deserted. It helped them to decide what to do. It helped the widowed mother to yield to the wishes of her son. It helped the dependent wife to be resigned. The fact that they lie in their graves is proof of their bravery. Brave before the cannon's mouth, brave on lonely picket duty, brave before the surgeon, brave in the last message to his beloved family.

Again, we mean by this national observance to honor self-sacrifice for others. To all these departed heroes home and kindred were as dear as they are to us. Do you know how they felt? Just as you and I would feel. Starting tomorrow morning, with nine chances out of ten against our returning alive. The soldier sees ahead not only battle, but malaria and typhoid, diarrhœa, rheumatism and exhaustion. The Wilderness, South Mountain and Gettysburg were no play grounds. These heroes risked and lost all for others. There is no higher sublimity than that. To keep three-fourths for ourselves and give one fourth to others is honorable. To give one-half and keep one-half is generous. To keep nothing for ourselves and give all to others is true greatness; is Christlike.

Have any of you ever been in the National Cemetery at Gettysburg? You could'nt help but have noticed the long rows of head-stones with this single inscription: "Unknown." They are known. The inscription ought to be: "A Son of the United States."

Again, by this National ceremony, we mean the future defense of that nation. By every decorated grave we say "those who die for the country shall not be forgotten" and that will give enthusiasm to our young men in case our nation should in the future need to defend itself in battle. I don't think we will ever have another war between north and south. We are getting farther and farther from the possibility of sectional strife. But then we are not so sure about foreign invasion. On account of our prominence, our greatness, two or three other nations might unite against us and give us trouble. There is no room on this continent for any other nation except Canada, and we never had a better neighbor. During our civil war several nations could hardly keep their hands off.

If a foreign foe should come we could find lots of men who, like those of 1812, would go out and drive the invaders from our shores—men who will not only know how to fight but how to die. They will say, "My country will care for my family as it did in the orphans' homes in the civil war and pension my wife if I should not return again, and my country will honor my dust as it honors those who preceded me in patriotic sacrifice."

Again, this great National ceremony means the beautifying of our cemeteries and tombs, whether of those who fell in battle or accident or who died at home in their beds. You have doubtless noticed how the graves and family plats have been fixed up and are being adorned. This National observance has secured the straightening up of many headstones planted half a century ago. This is all we can do now for our beloved departed ones besides having them in mind between these National holidays.

We can make their resting places attractive not by a costly outlay, but if you can afford but a single flower it is all right.

Comrades, we will soon be with the departed. Some of our bodies will repose in this cemetery; others elsewhere. Instead of crying out with Jacob for Joseph "I will go down into the grave unto my son mourning," let us cry out with David, "I shall go to him."

On the gate of a certain cemetery there is this quaint inscription, "A night's lodging on the way to the New Jerusalem." Let us be comforted by this thought. After the march is ended and we are laid in the silent tomb, it will only be a night's lodging on the way to the New Jerusalem.

We know you are all loyal to your ruler and country. Be faithful and true to Jesus and your heavenly country and all will be well.

In all the crowd present no disorder was apparent, which speaks well indeed for the citizens of the county as well as those of town.

In the afternoon many persons went to the river and near by creeks where they tried their luck at angling while many others attended an impromptu game of base ball at Jack Oak Park.

SHYLOCK

Shylock was the man who wanted a pound of human flesh. There are many Shylocks now, the convalescent, the consumptive, the sickly child, the pale young woman, all want human flesh and they can get it—take Scott's Emulsion.

Scott's Emulsion is flesh and blood, bone and muscle. It feeds the nerves, strengthens the digestive organs and they feed the whole body.

For nearly thirty years Scott's Emulsion has been the great giver of human flesh.

THE SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Of the Founding of St. Paul's M. E. Sunday School to be Observed.

Seventy-five years ago St. Paul's M. E. Sunday school of Oakland was founded by Col. Isaac McCarty and wife. Of the original scholars there are now living quite a number including Mr. William White, of near Oakland; Mrs. Helen Ashby, of Crellin; Nicholas Merrill, of near Oakland; George Steyer, of near Gorman; David McCarty, of Missouri, and Mrs. Eliza Dixon, of Elk Garden.

The school was organized in a log building on the farm now owned by George Shartzer, just South of Oakland, which is still standing and doing duty as a storage house for farm products.

To properly commemorate the anniversary of the school committees have been at work several weeks preparing a program and a suitable souvenir of the occasion. The latter is now in the hands of the printer and will be issued in a neat booklet form with numerous handsome half-tone illustrations, including pictures of the old building above referred to, the present home of the Sunday school, an engraving showing Col. Isaac McCarty and his wife, Mr. S. L. Townshend, lately deceased, who was a member of the school and assistant superintendent for many years; the late Ralph Thayer, also connected with the school as teacher and superintendent for fifty years, and the present superintendent, Rev. John M. Davis, who has occupied the position for more than thirty years.

The anniversary of the founding of the school will be observed at St. Paul's M. E church on Sunday, June 19th, beginning at 10 o'clock a. m., when an elaborate program which has been prepared for the occasion will be carried out.

Mrs. S. Brown and daughter have moved into Inwood cottage.

J. R. Leighty, Div. Eng., B. & O. R. R., spent last Tuesday at the Park, assisting Supt. Long in some repairs on the lake dam.

The Crimes of the Revolver.

There has been a new outbreak of revolver murder. It is the result of the vicious habit of carrying concealed weapons. In itself the revolver is innocent; there is nothing better for skill and nerve training than revolver practice. But the instant a person conceals a revolver and goes into public places he becomes an enemy to society and is so recognized by the law. If he begins to drink, the combination of the "gun" and his own "load" almost invarably produces results.

The wonder is not that there are so many revolver killing but that there is not more.

So safe is modern life that a revolver is a sign of weakness as well as an element of danger. The home is better off without it than with it. For every good it does in protecting the house there are many evil accidents, suicides, "didn't know it was loaded," and a long list, from the baby, who the other day innocently dropped the revolver which ended its life up to the grandfather, whose shaking fingers sent off the load that put another family in mourning.

Beware of the revolver. Let it alone. You are safer without it.

DIED.

Lindley—After an heroic struggle against the encroachments of disease Mrs. Elizabeth Lindley, the mother of Miles D. Lindley, and Mrs. R. E. Brown, of this city James K. Lindley, of Bellevue, O., and Mrs. T. J. Peddicord, of Oakland, Md., passed quietly into the dreamless sleep Sunday at 10:25 p. m. Death occurred at the late residence of the deceased on Campell avenue, and she was surrounded, when the end came, by all the members of her family. Mrs. Lindley was 73 years of age and one of the best known and most highly respected women in this city or county.

For several months she has been in ill health. Her advanced age made it difficult to ward off the attacks of disease and after a lingering illness spinal meningitis developed. This was the immediate cause of her death.

Elizabeth Lindley was the widow of John C. Lindley and daughter of the late Hon. James B. King, was born in Butler County, October 15, 1831, and died at 10:25 p. m. May 29, 1904. Her father for many years represented his district in the Ohio Legislature and was one of the farmers of the Constitution of the State of Ohio.

Her maternal grandfather was the Hon. James Shields, who also represented his district in the Legislature for nineteen consecutive years and was at the time of his death a member of the Congress of the United States.

Mrs. Lindley was the mother, of four children, Mrs. Thomas J. Peddicord, Oakland, Md.; James K. Lindley, of Bellevue, O., Miles D. Lindley and Mrs. Robert E. Brown, of this city.

Eight grandchildren also survive her They are John E. Whipps, of Chicago; Elizabeth Lindley Whipps, of New York City; Helen Brown, Libbie Lindley and D. Howell Lindley, of Hamilton, and Elizabeth Lindley, of Belle, Ohio.

Mrs. Lindley was a woman of rare qualities and those who came in contact with her respected and admired her. She was a woman of unusual judgment and her advice was ever sought by her children and friends in business matters for which she showed great aptitude. Her charities were many and she gave with unstinted hand to those who needed aid and were worthy of it. None ever knew the extent of these kindnesses and she always deprecated the mention of them. Her death is sincerely mourned by hundreds not numbered among her relatives and immediate friends and the place left vacant by her death is one that will not soon be filled.

Up to the the time of her last illness Mrs. Lindley enjoyed good health and took a keen interest in public affairs. She was always splendidly posted upon matters of public interest and her opinions were keen and farsighted. She idolized her children and their welfare was ever uppermost in her mind. To them the loss is irreparable and their sorrow is the sorrow of never-faltering love

The funeral will be held Wednesday.—Hamilton (O.) Sun, May 30th.
